PROSPECTUS
ST. LOUIS LUMINARY

THE SUBSCRIBER proposes to commence the publication of a Weekly Newspaper, with the above title, about the middle of November next, devoted to General Intelligence and News of the Day, Political, Scientific, and Religious — and particularly whatever relates to the progress and development of the Kingdom of God on the Earth, or the history and movements of the LATTER DAY SAINTS. In addition to all matters of general interest transpiring in Utah, its columns will be enriched with Correspondence from all the principal countries of Europe, Southern Asia, Africa, Australia, and the Pacific Isles. Its aim will be to present its readers with a General View of the Important Events transpiring among the Nations of the Earth — particularly the doings of the People and Government of our own beloved America — together with such practical matter and items, both amusing and instructive, as will make it emphatically a Family Newspaper. It will contain much needful instruction to Emigrants — particularly those fitting out for Utah — among whom it will be extensively circulated; — and business-men in St. Louis, and the frontier towns, will consult their interests by advertising in its columns.

In Political matters, while it will stand aloof from party strife, the LUMINARY will not hesitate to speak freely upon all questions of practical importance, approving or disapproving the policy and conduct of our public servants.

THE LUMINARY will be printed upon a double-medium sheet, neatly executed, and mailed to country subscribers at $2 00 a year, invariably in advance. To city subscribers it will be delivered, if paid yearly in advance, at $2 00 a year; or, if paid quarterly in advance, for 60 cents per quarter; single copy, 5 cents.

ADVERTISING RATES. — One square, (eight lines or less,) one insertion, 50 cents; each additional insertion, 25 cents. One square, one month, without alteration, $1 00; three months, $2 50; six months, $4 00.

BY ELDER ELIAS L. T. HARRISON.

The "Mormon" religion professes to teach man how to use, gratify, and control every power and passion he possesses; it not only teaches him principles which will give calmness to the spirits of men, and furnishes them with principles that will break down the barriers between the human family, and unite them as one, until their desires, purposes and affections have but one direction, but it says to man, "Religion should include the true principles of gratifying and governing the senses."

On this account "Mormonism" has been compared to Mahommedanism, because, say some, it offers sensuous gratifications as a part of the future rewards of the good: it tells the world of an earth that shall be celestialized, and covered with the glory of God; of rocks, hills, trees, and beasts, which with the rest of a groaning creation shall rejoice in pristine beauty and perfection: and says, "O man, these things shall minister to your future pleasures in perfection, as they now do in part; nor shall social joys be wanting, for all the charms and joys derived from the triune relation of "wife, children and friends," shall still swell the pleasures of existence, whilst enlarged powers of thought, a spirit toned down from harshness, and swelled with love and charity, shall complete the man."

Now who cares if the above does resemble Mahommedanism a little, if Mahommedanism in these particulars resembles truth? Who cares? Certainly not Latter-day-Saints, for they have learned to follow principles and not men, and they willingly confess they are not averse to truth, though it should be uttered by an Arab impostor, or any other impostor indeed: for instance, they would not reject the truth that men should not preach for money, even though it should be uttered by a bishop rolling in golden equipage, drawn by silver grays, wrung as it might have been (indirectly) from the sweat and toil of the laboring poor! Then if they would not reject truth under such circumstances, why object to a principle if it can be proved heavenly, because, years and years ago, something a little similar was taught by somebody, who, finding the whole world under the influence of imposture, thought he would do a little business on his own account?

Now if such expectations or ideas as "Mormonism" encourages be wrong, it must be because they are contrary to the revelations God has given of what He intends man to hope for, or because the works of nature develop characteristics in God different to those encouraged by the principles of the Latter-daySaints. The object of the following remarks is to show what Revelation and Nature do say on the matter.

The idea that our opposers hold seems to be, that it is not "heavenly-minded," nor consistent with a "spiritual religion," to let the thoughts be employed on such ideas as are suggested by the material tangible works of God; but that we should have a religion isolated entirely from such gross matters as earth, its fruits, flowers, and landscapes; mechanical or artistical pursuits; and have communion with one's God in spirit; and above all, never think of carrying such ideas into eternity, where doubtless all these carnal things will be forgotten, and nothing but praise and prayer employ the mind.

Now dear friends where did you get the idea that a Godly life ought to separate you from pleasures derived from inspection or possesion of the beautiful, material, tangible blessings of earth; or that your religion would suffer in its heavenly mindness, if it engrafted a promise of such blessings on the condition of a righteous life? Did you get it from Abraham, who loved and obeyed that he might obtain promises of blessings pertaining to this earth? Or from his God who rewarded his righteousness with a promise of fruitful lands, and a numberless posterity to enjoy them? Perhaps you got it from Jacob, who, when dying, instead of giving up his worldly notions, and thinking about death and eternity, spent his last breath in promising all the temporal blessings he could well think of to his decendants. Of course if you did feel shocked at such a scene you doubtless prayed, "Let me not die like Jacob, let not my last end be like his."

Let us "look unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith," and see if we can trace in HIM notions of worldly pomp and grandeur. First of all, his mother bore him believing he should sit on David's throne, so that his worldly notions were born with him.—No wonder, then, we hear him on the Mount surrounded by the multitude, leading them on to righteousness with this worldly-minded argument—"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth!" Why did not he say, blessed are the meek, for they shall have a heaven, where all sensuous pleasures shall be extinct; and call on the multitude to say, Amen? Hear him again, "working on the minds of the ignorant by promises of worldly blessings," saying, "There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake and the Gospel's, but shall receive an hundred fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children and lands, with persecutions, and in the world to come eternal life." (Mark x. 29, 30.) And tell me, dear reader, what more can we need to convince us that the worldly minded "sensuous religion of the Mormons" is as old as Jesus himself.

Hear the "worldly-minded" Paul, declaring for himself and brethren—"Them, who by continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, (two very worldly minded principles,) immortality and eternal life," (Rom. iii. 17;) and further teaching the doctrine, saying the saints are to be heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ," whom he declares in another place to be heir to thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers, for they were created for Him. (Col. i. 16.) Now Latter-day Saints do not go a bit further, for only give them all things, glory, honor, thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers, and the most "worldly-minded Mormon," in existence, would be perfectly saitisfied!

Seeing, then, that revelation and the sensuous religion of the "Mormons" walk so agreeably side by side, we turn to Nature's Revelation, for as the Book of Doctrine and Covenants says, "after a revelation of Jesus Christ, the works of creation, throughout their vast forms and varieties, clearly exhibit His eternal power and Godhead," (Lecs. on Faith, ii. 4.) and also reveal the character and persuits of the Deity; and these are very important to trace, for HE certainly is a heavenly-minded being. Then fearlessly we put our worldly-minded principle along side of His works and ask where, among all the works of nature, is there one that does not preach a sermon on the spirituality of a sensuous religion; for they are all the works of a spiritual being, and of course they will reveal what a spiritual mind can love, and be incessently employed in attending to, without losing a portion of its spirituality; they are all the works of One probating not in time, and therefore uncramped by the littleness which attends men's notions even of the Great and Holy One inhabiting Eternity; therefore, an inspection of them will reveal what we may fairly expect to be the character of our works and pursuits, when we, in the popular sense, are in eternity also.

Does God love beautiful shapes and colors? Let us ask, as they form the basis of much that is sensuous. Go stand beside the peacock, displaying above his arched back a host of golden clouds and seting suns in miniature, then you may learn. Go gather roses, or behold a tulip bed, tinted with such heavenly art, nicety, and perfection; look at the golden backs of the watery tribe, or the silver crested, gem decked, spangled breasts of the birds of hotter climes than ours; or dive to the ocean's bed, and bring up its pearly shells; and you will learn that not only does God exhibit a most decided taste and love for beautiful colors, in objects on the surface of the earth, but that "myriad fathoms deep, down on old ocean's pavement stones," are found the proofs that, spiritually minded as Jehovah is, He loves well harmonized tints and shades.

Does he love elegance in shape? The crested swan, triumphing in matchless curves and lines of beauty, would say so; the noble horse, built with such symmetry and well-proportioned grace, would teach the same. Then turn to man, observe his perfect form—the painter's study, that he may learn what is beautiful in shape—and ask. Then seek the flowers of earth, so full of grace and beauty; nay, the commonest green leaf would prove my point,—I think from this alone we can gather, in the attention to form, proofs that God would be more offended than pleased were he charged with being so spiritually-minded that he found it inconsistent to maintain a love for such carnal things as forms or shapes.

Does God love grandeur or magnificence? He has done His best to make man think so, anyhow: storing the bowels of the earth with gold and silver ore, and all the metals in their great variety; hiding up his marble blocks, and almost a world of stone, to build or garnish earth's palaces with; and scattered lustrous gems about the earth, that man may pick them up, and after using them for his own adornment, get from them a faint idea of the splendor of the world to come, when gates made of pearl, and cities built of gems, shall tell the truth that mortality may cease with us, but immortality shall only usher in sensuous pleasures, controlled by righteous laws, in greater fulness and perfection still.

Then are the ideas of the "Mormons" more full of worldly pomp or earthly grandeur than their Maker's, when He spends eternity in creating globes, fitting them up as above, and developing his mechanical powers in balancing them, and directing their courses. Why does He not aspire to as lofty spiritual a character as some of his followers, and leave world making, fruit making, flower, shell, bird making, &c., to some being less spiritual in his pursuits than Himself, and leave off the creation of things which can but encourage a love for the sensuous pleasures of existence?

Now I know that some will not admit that God has manifested His own character in His works; but vainly argue, "these works are only for man's gratification and pleasure, and do not at all indicate what God loves." How can that be, when not above one in a million even comes to man's sight at all? How many of the shells of the ocean never reach the surface? How many myriads of beauteous insects are never seen by man?—a solitary one is caught and killed that it may be wondered at. Go in the desert, where man is never expected, or cannot subsist if he goes; the jungle, where the lion and the tiger have it all their own way; and even the mountain's top, where man can scarcelv e'er ascend; these will furnish the evidences of God's love for beauty and form. Why half the workmanship of God is scarcely seen until the destruction of some of its parts reveals how wondrously it was put together. Then God does not work that man alone may admire and be gratified; but because He finds it a consequence of His vast intelligence to love the beautiful, and therefore He perpetuates it in all His works.

Thus, dear reader, I think you will see we cannot move our eyes but fresh proofs greet us of the worldly-mindedness of God; for earth, air, and seas swarm with testimonies of His endeavors to promote in us a love for the beautiful in shape, the delicious in taste, and the flagrant in perfume. The breeze wafts proof to the olfactory organs, the light conveys proof to the eyes, the atmosphere furnishes proof for the satisfaction of the ears; nay, the whole man receives fresh impression of this fact in every exertion or use that he makes of any of his powers.

Who employs himself wheeling world round world, lighting them up with luminiferous powers, to gratify possibly the powers of taste, hearing, smell, and sight of millions on their surfaces, after first endowing them with those sensuous qualities—who? Who, to come to our little world, spent six days, or, as is believed by some, six thousand years, in reducing to order this shapeless globe, causing the dry land to appear, that verdant hills and flowery landscapes might rejoice beneath blue skies, or calmly sleep whilst the watchman of the night—the moon, rises to silver o'er the abodes of men and beasts? Who made the pulse to quicken, and the soul to fill with grand emotions, when golden sunsets, calling forth the poetry of the spirit, and its devotion too, rouse heavenly feelings in the breast, and adoration greater than the tongue can tell; or made the soul to dance, tremulous with joy, at the sound of music's heavenly strains? Who, I ask, who? The hater of sensuous gratification or the lover and promoter of it? If a tree be known by its fruits, what kind of a tree must that be, which has for its fruits universe on universe, filled with systems, crowded down with untellable, because numberless, sense-serving, sense-pleasing works of the Diety, each bearing testimony to the error of the idea, that "it is not heavenly-minded to love sensuous pleasures as part of one's religion;" when scattered throughout boundless space lie the vast indications of the Almighty's determination to furnish materials for those pleasures whether they are loved or not. The conclusion that I draw from all this, is, if God can be a heavenly-minded being, (and all acknowledge that He is,) and yet from day to day, year to year, age to age, thus be mixed up in earthly pursuits, mechanical operations, incessantly constructing and reconstructing, working amidst such gross elements as worlds, with their atmospheres, seas, and inhabitants, and suffer no pollution, lose nothing of His spiritual qualities, then may a Latter-day Saint hope to have a heavenly mind, and his religion be of a spiritual character. even though it should lead him to seek to go to the same extent, proportionably, in worldly-minded operations for his own increase, blessing, power, and glory, as those in which his Maker is so eternally employed: for "Mormons" cannot be so far wrong in following in His track—He making, and they loving after it is made; He exhibiting His masterly hand in forms of beauty, exquisite coloring, and materials for grandeur and magnificence, and they desiring to possess what He has been good enough so excellently to adorn, for their happiness and pleasure.

What a farce to talk of the grossness of a sensuous religion, when man cannot exist as man, nor Deity as God, without the senses, through which all intelligence is gained and power developed; for take sight, hearing, taste, smelling, and feeling away from man, and where is the man! Imagine up a Deity deficient of all these powers, and you have imagined up something destitute of all "spiritual" qualities, as sensuous powers must be the basis of spirituality. What intelligence have you on any one subject, heavenly or earthly, that you did not gain through your senses? Do you love God? Your love came through hearing of His goodness, or seeing the manifestation thereof before your eyes. Have you faith in Christ? Your faith came by hearing. Do you love your fellow man? The knowledge of their existence came through the medium of your senses, before which knowledge you of course could not love them; and that you should love them, was made plain through the same medium. Have you heavenly compassion or God-like charity burning within your breast? You would have neither one nor the other but for your senses; for you could not have love, compassion, charity, mercy, anger, for anything you never saw, heard of, or felt. Then if religion be the exercise of the above, and similar qualities or principles, sensuous powers must be the basis of all religion; for it is their existence that has made the necessity for any religion at all; for were there not creatures existing, beside yourself, endowed with sensuous powers, there would be nothing in the universe that would need or care whether you exercised religious qualities or not.

Thus the simplest form of reasoning gives the death blow to the notion, that sensuousness and spirituality are so far apart; for as seen above, sensuous powers made religion necessary in the first instance, and keep it so now. And this will apply to a future state; the senses must exist there, or there will be no love; for none will know of the existence of God or one another; there will be no happiness nor intelligence; for the channels for both would be stopped! How would you like, good Christian, to be condemned to enjoy a heavenly half hour, without one of your five senses left? Do you think you would rail against a sensuous religion afterwards?

Now as to a heaven made up after the popular notion of praise and prayer, I would ask, supposing you got to such a heaven, what could you praise or pray for, after rejecting all that had or could come through a sensuous medium? I certainly think you would not have much more than the boy who got through that remarkable piece of arithmetic, when he took something from nothing and found that nothing remained; so that your heaven would be a perfect blank, and on that account I would advise you not to go there. But if you love prayer or praise, seek for a "Mormon's" heaven on a glorified earth, where every living creature, from the animalculæ in the water drop, to man, the noblest work of God, each and all shall furnish ten thousand causes for praise and prayer, on account of the ten thousand, nay, numberless ways in which Jehovah has shown His willingness to minister to their senuous pleasures.—[Millenial Star.

NEW YORK MORALS.

We give up more than our usual space to full accounts of the immense swindling operations in New York, now daily coming to light, and by which New York life is illustrated. According to the Herald, some body has been swindled to the tune of over eleven millions of dollars within the last ninety days, by fraudulent issues of stocks of various kinds, and it is not surprising that a panic should follow. Is there any body in New York who is honest? Certainly the gamblers in stocks make a very poor show in this way—the Vicksburg gamblers of old were princes of honesty compared with them—and the corruption may be supposed to extend to all other classes. We observe that a merchant, of very respectable pretensions, has just been detected in attempting to fire his store, not for the benefit of any insurance upon it, but to avoid exposure on account of inability to deliver bales of cotton which he ought to have had in store, but had not; and for two weeks or more, one of the Courts of that city has been occupied in the trial of a divorce case, the parties to which belong to upper tendum, and in the course of which a vast amount of depravity and profligacy was charged and exhibited against each party. The crisis of rascality may come after a while in New York, but we see nothing like it yet.—[N. Y. Paper.

WIVES.—Women should be acquainted that no beauty has any charms but the inward one of the mind; and that a gracefulness in their manners is much more engaging than that of their person; that modesty and meekness are the true and lasting ornaments; for she that has these is qualified as she ought to be for the management of a family, for the education of children, for an affection of her husband, and submitting to a prudent way of living. These only are the charms that render wives amiable, and give them the best title to our respect.

HINT.—When a young man uses strong drink, even in the smallest degree, girls do not marry him, for if you do you will come to poverty and rags.

'Tis only small dogs who bark; so with men; the smaller a man's calibre, the more noise he makes.

Schism has been caused in the Lutheran Church, in Maryland, by the agitation of the question, as to whether an Odd Fellow can be a good Christian.

UTAH AND THE MORMONS.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—I have noticed going the rounds of the papers, several extracts from a book entitled "Utah and the Mormons," written by B. G. FERRIS, late Secretary of the Treasury of Utah; in which he denounces the people as disloyal in their feelings towards the general government, and guilty of every atrocity, known in the annals of crime.—He has not given them credit of a single redeeming quality, but charges them with universal depravity. He deals largely in such expressions as the following: "Arrogant religious pretensions;" "frightful licentiousness;" "general license to plunder;" "degredation deep and abiding;" "gross sensuality;" "base literalism and materialism;" &c., &c. He also indulges in harsh personal epithets, against individuals he seldom or ever saw. He has indeed manifested some little charity in the acknowedgement of "polite and kind attentions," on a part of a few individuals, and "friendly courtesy" on the part of the people of the Great Salt Lake City generally. This "kindness" and "courtesy" he has very ungenerously repaid by opening the floodgate of his own corrupt heart, and pouring out his base calumnies upon the unoffending people of Utah, and sending forth to the world his ridiculous book of sickly scandal, to add its flimsey weight, to the prejudices already existing against the Mormon community. Mr. Ferris was in Utah about six months. Your correspondent resided there nearly two years, including the time Mr. F. was there, and this communication is to give the negative to that portion of his book, touching the immorality and licentiousness of the people of Utah. I know it to be a fabrication of base falsehoods, having no foundation in truth. It is true that polygamy is practiced by many, and believed in by all. It is allowed by their laws, and sanctioned by their religion. But there is nothing gross or sensual connected therewith. The system is under the immediate control and regulation of the authorities of the church. A man marrying his second wife, his covanents are just as binding and as sacred as the first, and the occasion is solemnized by the same ceremonies, and can only be performed by the President, or some one acting under his immediate appointment. Female unchastity, or inconstancy to the marriage vow is seldom ever known; the published statement of the honorable Secretary to the contrary notwithstanding.

During Mr. Ferris' stay in Utah, he confined himself almost entirely to his room. He never ventured beyond the limits of the city, and seldom left his boarding house. He must have necesrarily neglected the duties of his office, for nearly his whole time was occupied in writing his book, for which he was paid out of the public treasury. He saw but little of the people, and the people saw but very little of him; he was therefore but ill prepared, either to extol their virtues or expose their follies. One evening he ventured out to the theatre, accompanied by Mrs. Ferris. The play for the evening was "Evadne; or, The Statue," and as the virtuous Evadne (impersonated by Mrs. Wheelock, an Amature actress,) so wildly clung to the Staue of her father, and dared the lustful King to approach her, she made such a "happy hit" and carried her part so beautifully as to bring down the house with an universal expression of delight. Mrs. F. was so filled with admiration that she took a beautiful necklace from her neck and threw it upon the stage, at the feet of the fair actress. She had discovered at last one quality in a Mormon lady worthy of admiration, which the grosser nature of her unrefined husband, would not allow him to appreciate. I will close this communication with an extract from a letter written by the Hon. L. H. Read, United States Chief Justice for the Territory of Utah, to the Steuben county, (N. Y.) Advocate, in which paper it was first published:

"Polygamy prevails here extensively, but those who suppose that licentiousness, or looseness of manners or morals prevails to any extent, are much mistaken. The women are exceedingly modest and circumspect in their deportment. I have had the pleasure of an introduction to a number, who are very sensible and agreeable, and I think will compare fully with the well bred ladies of the States. From all I can see and learn, there is less licentiousness and vulgarity in this city and Territory, than any other place of equal population in the United States. The men are jealous of all interference in their domestic affairs, and seduction and adultery are apt to be punished by the death of the offender. Some cases of this kind have happened here."

Judge Read was in Utah one year, and boarded at the same place as Mr. Ferris and at the same time. He mingled much with the people; he participated in their amusements and took part in their recreations. He traveled much through the Territory, holding courts in the different judicial districts. I became intimately acquainted with him during his stay in Great Salt Lake City, and know he had favorable opportunities of becoming acquainted with the character of the people.

By giving the above a place in your valuable paper you will confer a favor on at least one of your readers, and perhaps it may remove an ill-founded prejudice from the minds of many.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.—A few mornings since, as we were passing down Pearl street, we saw approaching us a good-hearted looking chap, but evidently having partaken too freely from the rum cask. We were just thinking whether or not we should expostulate with him, when up came his loving spouse with a handful of black mud, which she not only dashed in his face and eyes, but rubbed it in, and, without a word, walked away, seeming to feel relieved of a duty discharged. The poor fellow received it with a calmness beautiful to look upon, undoubtedly recognizing the hand, as he passed on, not even looking to see from whom it came, or uttering a murmuring word.—[Tribune.

A boy called a doctor to visit his father, who had the delirium tremens; not rightly remembering the name of the disease, he called it the devil's trembles—making bad Latin, but good English.

SHORT WAY OF GETTING A DIVORCE.—The Albany (N. Y.) Argus says that the following notice appears in a German newspaper of that city:

"As my husband, Joseph Rentz, has left me without any provocation, and I have seen nothing of him this last year past, I hereby declare that unless he returns in three days from this date, I shall take it as a divorce and marry again immediately.

The following has been received here from the city of Mexico, per Judge Rose, bearer of dispatches, who was detained twelve days in Chilpancingo by the government troops. Owing to a demonstration made on the 16th of Sept., by the people against the present administration, and which the soldiers were unable to suppress, and also to the victories on the Rio Grande of the Alvarez party, his serene highness Santa Anna has removed, with a strong force, to Tacubaya. His seven millions are nearly exhausted, and his troops will revolt as soon as he stops payment. The spirit of revolution has spread throughout the entire republic, and it is currently reported that Santa Anna cannot hold out sixty days longer. His serene highness has quarrelled with the whole foreign diplomatic corps, and has made application for the recall of the British Minister.

In Guerrero things are going on prosperously; and although a price has been set on Alvarez's head—having seen him a few days ago, I was much surprised to find him in such excellent health and spirits—he says he is determined on his independence, and the adoption of a new and liberal constitution, with similar laws to those of the United States—separating Church from State affairs—inviting emigration, and permitting every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. Alvarez is liberal, patriotic, and withal a democrat of the Jeffersonian school; and it is a great loss for this country that there is not a host of men like him.

I will add that a courier has this moment arrived, bringing news of an engagement at a place called Cucuas, between the limits of the States of Guerrero and Michoagán. The Alvarez force was under command of General Andrade, killing 300, among whom were General Kuintana, and his aid; many were wounded, and a number taken prisoners. The Alvarez loss was trifling. When the government troops were retreating they shouted "Vive el Sur, y Alvarez."

ACAPULCO, Oct. 7, 1854.

Capt. H. Stocker, bearer of dispatches from the United States legation in Mexico, having effected his escape from Ometorpec, arrived in this port on the 30th ult. He was accompanied by Mr. Vozan, and his wife, American citizens.

The blockade is still off the harbor, the orders being, under penalty of death, to permit no vessels to enter. What the result of their firing into our mail steamers will be, after the letter of Captain Dornin of the Portsmouth, remains for the sequel to prove.

Col. Encarnacion Alvarez, son of the General, is at the head of six hundred guerillas on the frontier. He has already captured 2,500 head of cattle from the government forces, and taken a number of prisoners.

The General has issued a proclamation to the soldiers of the north, which is full of valor, patriotism and hatred of tyranny, and to those who take an interest in such matters, is an address worthy the Chieftain of the Revolution.

Santa Anna's commissioners, appointed to sell the property of those engaged in the revolution, have made an abortive attempt to raise the wind. They were unable to find a single purchaser when Gen. Vallerial's property, near the city of Mexico, was put up at auction.

Provisions have become very scarce, commanding most exhorbitant prices, and not a pound of flour in the whole city.

A RICH LETTER.—The Troy Daily Times states that a clergyman of that city married a young couple one evening last week. After the ceremony was performed, one of the groomsmen slyly handed the reverend gentleman the following note, containing a ten dollar bill as his "fee" for tying the knot:

"MY VERY DEAR SIR:—You did me up brown this morning, and I thank you for the very agreeable manner in which you performed the service of either rendering me one of the happiest or one of the most miserable and unfortunate of beings. I sincerely trust and believe the former will be the case. My wife, that is, Mrs. ——, is also duly grateful for your instrumentality in making her what she has so long desired to be—a wife; but she says she don't care a flip whether she's happy or not—she's got a man now, and that is enough.

"Please accept the enclosed $10 bill. The tightness of the money market prevents a heaver remittance. I will, however, enter into an arrangement with you. My wife and myself intend to see what can be done in the way of assisting along Barnum's baby show next summer. If we get the prize we'll divide the profits with you.

A NOVEL PROSECUTION.—A gentleman at Green Farms, Conn., lately left the Methodist and joined the Congregational Church. In his new place of worship, says the Springfield Republican, he found it difficult to repress those outbursts of religious feelings which were allowable with the sect he had left, and was quite often guilty of the impropriety of "speaking out in meeting," to the great annoyance of his new brethren. He was labored with affectionately upon the subject, and it was no use,—the occasional "Amen!" and "Glory to God!" would slip out inspite of his teeth. He was finally prosecuted for shouting "Glory to God!" under the influence of a stirring discourse, and was fined three dollars and costs, the costs amounting to ten dollars. In the complaint against him he was accused of "disturbing religious worship."

HIS DOOM.—The man who runs down the girls, speaks ill of the macried women, and throws a quid of tobacco into the contribution box and takes out a penny to buy more, can never expect peace in this world, and never will. Bedbugs, musquitos, and hobgoblins of a guilty conscience will haunt him on his way to that well headed prison, where convicts are fed on cinders and aquafortis soup, and are allowed no other amusement than to set and pick their teeth with a red hot poker through all eternity.—[Dow, Jr.

A man praising porter, said it was so excellent a beverage that, taken in great quantities, it makes fat. "I have seen the time," said another, "when it made you lean." "When?" asked the eulogist. "Last night—against the wall."

OF COURSE.—Punch says that the reason why editors are so apt to have their manners spoiled, is because they receive from one correspondent and another such a vast number of evil communications.

OUR PAPER.

We present before our readers this week the result of our first effort at publishing a newspaper. — How do you like it? The work is entirely new to us and we feel altogether the awkwardness of our new position.

We have labored under the accustomary inconveniences and disadvantages, felt more or less by all in starting a newspaper. But faulty and deficient as it may appear we venture to send it forth in the world and humbly hope that our efforts will be appreciated. However we feel assured that the "Saints" and lovers of truth and justice will hail with pleasure the appearance of the LUMINARY.

The world has been too long stocked with falsehoods, slander misrepresentations about Mormonism and the people in Utah. Our crimes have been represented to be so great and numerous—our doings so atrocious and vile — our proceedings so abominable and disgusting that these statements have become suicidal. They have been carried too far to answer the ends for which they have been put forth.

It is asked enquiringly where and who has felt all these evil influences? Who ever knew of its poisonous influences, or who has seen its deadly effects upon the country? And who knows of his neighbor becoming a worse man, a more rebelous and corrupt citizen, a less attentive husband and father, or less trustworthy and honerable for embracing Mormonism? Who knows of the courts where his crimes are recorded? Since no affirmative in truth can be given to these questions, the conclusion is natural enough to reflective minds, that the wordy clamor of the world is not reliable; and as there is another side to the question: they ask, may not that side be more favorable? We reply, it is, and the LUMINRAY will be devoted to the exposition of the favorable side of Mormonism.

We hope to be heard, and we are confident by the honest inquirer after truth we shall be heard. — and it is only to such we address ourselves.

To those who delight in the filth and slander of the age, whose natural cravings are only satisfied with those upheavings and excitements of society, which terminate in blood, to all such appetites the LUMINARY will furnish no provinder.

Late from Utah --- Summary of News.

The Utah mail arrived on the 3rd inst., bringing us a file of Deseret News and much other news from that region, up to October 1st. From various sources we learn that the Utahs and Snakes or Shoshones are again at war, several sanguinary battles having been fought in the vicinity of the settlments, with a fair prospect of a continuad series of difficulties. The two indians who were convicted of the murde of two boys, were publicly executed by hanging on the 15th of September. Crops had come in good and wheat was selling at $2 00 per bushel, corn and oats $1 50 per bushel each. There are heavy supplies of merchandise which are not bringing quite the usual round rates. Stock was in excellent condition, but is not in as active demand nor bringing as high prices as at the same time last year, owing to the vast amount having been driven from the States to California the past season, leaving no demand for stock for that market from Utah. 'Tis reported the Brethren have purchased a ship of 450 tons burthen which is being fitted up at San Francisco to run between that city and the Sandwich Islands, to facilitate the missionary operations with the inhabitants of that group. Parley P. Pratt has the charge of this matter. The overland emigration had nearly all arrived and were making preparations for the winter. Hay is worth $10 io $15 per ton, and sugar, coffee, soap, and salaratus from 30 to 35 cts. per pound, whilst domestics and prints are selling for 18 3-4 cents per yard, 25 per cent. less than former prices.

OUR NEW TYPE, &c.

Kind reader, what do you think of the general appearance of the "Luminary?" Please examine it; if you think favorable of it, we will tell you confidently where we got our complete outfit, and if you should ever want anything pertaining to a printing office, either for newspaper or job work, we would advise you to go to the same place, and you will be sure to have your wants supplied in the shortest notice, as they keep constantly on hand and will furnish to order every or any article generally used by the printer, as will be seen by advertisement in another column. Messrs. A. P. Ladew & Co,, Nos. 31 and 38 Locust street, between Main and Second, are the gentlemanly proprietors, and Mr. William Bright the very accommodating clerk of the type foundry where we obtained what is now before you as a specimen of a portion of their business. Go and see, and judge for yourselves.

THIS NUMBER.

The quality of our paper this week is not what we intended it should be. Being disappointed in the paper we had ordered from Cincinnati, we have been obliged to use an inferior article, hoping however soon to make an improvement. As to the workmanship and general appearance, we feel quite willing it should speak for itself, and our friends should be the judges.

More Baptisms.---Summary of Correspondence.

Hon. S. M. Blair, late U. S. Attorney for Utah, is now preaching the Gospel with much success in Texas. He has met with many warm friends, and many equally warm enemies, from whom he has experienced much opposition and personal threats, but he has hitherto triumphed over them all.

He writes under date of Nov. 24th from Port Sullivan in Milan county, Texas, that he has a circuit of fifty miles round, has baptized many, and has organized a thriving branch of the church at Port Sullivan, and made good beginnings in several other places. Elder McGaw has rendered him much assistance of late, but was about to start for his field of labor in New Orleans.

Elder Joseph Millet writes from Maquaketa, Iowa, Nov. 12th, that during his present mission he has baptized upwards of thirty persons.

Elder H. W. Church is preaching and baptizing in Nashville, Tenn., and its vicinity. At our latest advices from Memphis, 16 persons in the vicinity of that city had yielded obedience to the Gospel in baptism.

Elder Andrus informs us that he has lately baptized and organized a branch of eight members near Centreville, Ill., with a good prospect for more.

Elder Thos. Colburn writes that he has recently been visiting the Saints scattered throughout New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and has been successful in adding many to the church in baptism in different places in his travels.

We hope our friends will continue their correspondence, leaving us to select such as may appear to us suitable to publish.

ANOTHER GOOD MAN DEPARTED.

Elder Wm. W. Major, formerly well known to many of the Saints in St. Lous, a man of exemplary piety and untiring zeal for the cause of God, has finished his earthly mission and passed within the veil. We learn from the Millenial Star that he died full of faith and hope, in London, October 2d, from an effection of the lungs. He leaves an affectionate family and numerous circle of friends in Salt Lake City. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; they shall not taste of death, for it shall be swee unto them."

THE BANK PANIC.

During the week past the public have been kept in a constant state of excitement by the successive announcements over the wires, of the suspension of banks and failures of heavy business houses in the east, north and south.

Later intelligence shows that some of these announcements have been premature, and others much exagerated. Certain it is, however, that the long dreaded crisis in monetary affairs has come, and the end thereof none can tell. Though the western and middle States generally seem to suffer greatly under its blighting influence, yet in no part of the country has its desolating effects been so severely felt as in Cincinnati, where the most powerful bankers west of the Alleghanies were engulfed in the general deluge.

The alarm has been so constant and general that business has been materially interupted in St. Louis. and the majority of the people look supiciously upon most of the paper which forms the circulation of this city.

The daily increasing fears among the masses, that the Illinois Bank were destined to follow in the wake of the free banks of Indiana, has called forth a notice from the Bank Commissioner at Springfield and another from a like functionary in Chicago followed by a card from the Bankers and Broker's of this city, all of which are calculated to restore confidence in the Illinois Banks. We publish below the card of Mr. Maxwell, Bank Commissioner:

TO THE PUBLIC.

The undersigned feels called upon, at this time of monetary excitement, to make a public statement for the benefit of such persons as are not in the way of being correctly informed as to the value of Illinois Bank bills of suspended Banks.

Every Bank of this State, under the General Banking Law, have deposited with the Auditor, in the hands of the Treasurer, good interest-paying bonds of the several States, to the full amount of every dollar of their own bills; and all registered money is equally secured, one bank with another. — Those that have closed their doors have in no way depreciated their security for their bills—they are of their full value now — but cannot command specie until the Auditor disposes of their bonds or securities according to law, which, is required to be done immediately, at which time due notice will be given, and the bills redeemed in specie. No sacrifice should be made on Illinois Bank bills whatsoever; nor even suspended Banks.

DISTINGUISHED ARRIVALS.

Not long since the arrival of a party of Missionaries at Council Bluffs was announced in the papers. Among them was Elder John Taylor, former editor of the "Times and Seasons," and "Nauvoo Neighbor," whose blood mingled with that of the martyred prophets, Joseph and Hryum Smith, in Carthage, Ill., having received four balls on that occasion, and narrowly escaped their fate. Elder Taylor is now in this city en route for New York, where he intends soon to issue a weekly paper, to be called the "Mormon." Likewise Hon. N. H. Felt, Dr. J. Clinton, and several others of the same party, who are to operate in the Atlantic cities in connection with Elder Taylor. As also Judge Thomas, who passed through the city a few days since on his way to Texas, whence he is to proceed to Washington City. It was with extreme gratification that we greeted these old and tried friends in this city, and we bespeak for them a joyful welcome among all the Saints in the East, and our friends in general. Hon. O. Spencer, Chancellor of the University of Deseret, is located in Cincinnati, and will direct the labors of the Elders in the valley of the Ohio, and take charge of the settlement of the Saints to be found in that part of the country. We hail with joy these movements of the Church, as the dawning of a new era in the history of our people; and from the commanding talents, the sterling integrity, indomitable perseverence of these fellow-laborers, we may expect great results.

NEW ORLEANS.—Elder James McGaw, late of Fillmore city is located at New Orleans, and will take the pastoral charge of the church in that city and vicinity, and superintend the affairs of our foreign emigration at that port.

CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

THE TERRITORIES.

Uunder this head the editor of the Morning Herald, has a very sensible article, which exhibits the genius of our American institutions in that simplicity and true light in which their original founders viewed them. The present system of government for the Territories is a vestage of anti-republicanism which wars with the general spirit of our instutions. It is precisely similar to that of the colonies under British rule, and which our fathers repudidated. A portion at least of the evils complained of in the declaration of Independence are still inflicted upon the Territories.

If the King of Great Britain "refused his assent to laws "passed by the colonial Legislators; Congress reserves to itself the same supervisory control over territorial laws. If he "made their Judges dependant on his will alone for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries" — so does Congress with the territories. If he "erected a multitude of offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harrass our people, and eat out their substance," so does Congress, at least in form and not unfrequently in fact, and what else could be expected, when the high and sacred character of the Judiciary is degraded at the shrine of the partyism and these as well as the other territorial officers sent begging among political demagogues.

If the colonies complained of "taxation without representation," so can the Territories with equal force; for they contribute to the support of government, in the way of imposts, the same as any other State. 'Tis true, they are allowed a delegate in Congress, who is permitted to look on like the fifth calf, but has no vote.

If the colonies rightly complained of the king for "quartering bodies of armed troops among us in time of peace," might not some of the Territories complain of the same? The Herald holds the following language:

It is hard to make foreigners, and even many of our own citizens correctly to understand, and always to keep in mind, the extremely limited range of the powers vested in our general government. They are constantly liable to fall into the error of fancying the United States Government a supreme power in the Union—an imperial sovereignty—while conceiving the several States to be merely provinces of this empire. At any rate, they often call on Congress for legislation which would be allowable in that body only upon the supposition that Congress bears to the people of the United States some such relation as the Imperial Parliament does to Great Britain and Ireland. The Courier and Enquirer has some remarks upon this error, in respect to several matters of political interest. Among these are the Naturalization Laws. Many suppose that when a man is naturalized he becomes a voter. No such thing, however. Voting is a privilege which Congress cannot grant—at least in the States. About all that Congress confers on a man by naturalizing him is to give him the protection of our flag when he goes abroad. So as regards religious liberty. Many suppose that the U. S. Constitution secures for the people of the States "freedom to worship God" as seems good in the eyes of each. It is nevertheless not so. The Legislature of Missouri might, at its next session, enact Methodism or Catholicism into the religion of the State, forbidding the exercise of every other, and yet not violate the Constitution of the United States. A State composed only of Hindoos or Mahomedans might live under the United States Constitution, and the mere fact that there was no other worship in that State but of Brahma or Mahomet would be no violation of that instrument, even though Christianity were proscribed in that State.

What Congress may do with the people living in the Territories is a different question. But there can be no doubt of its being the better opinion—that Congress should interfere with the government of the Territories as little as possible. In this sense the doctrine of "popular sovereignty" for the Territories will, no doubt, be acquiesced in by a vast majority of Americans. For ourselves, we think that Congress should adopt the rule that the Assembly of a Territory should be as uncontrolled by federal legislation as the legislature of a State, excepting, perhaps, as to the disbursement of monies contributed to the support of government in the Territories by Congress, over which it is probably only right that the party granting the money ought to have some control. The officers appointed by the President should hold only for a very limited term, after which the people of the Territory should elect those officers.

Reception of the Troops by the Mormons.—The Officers Refused Admittance to Female Society.—No Mormon Corn Allowed to the Gentiles.

The above is the title of an article published by the N. Y. Herald, and copied by such papers as the Intelligencer of this city. The Herald says that soon after the arrival of the troops at Salt Lake, "Orson Hyde called upon the congregation assembled in the Tabernacle to raise the price of grain "on the strangers," to which the congregation replied Amen. In consequence of this move all the horses that can be spared will be sent out to graze instead of being stable-fed;" and that "the people were commanded in the Deseret News not to allow their families to associate with the strangers. Except the epauletted Gentiles became baptized they could not expect to move in female society." It however admits that "the troops as a general thing were well received by the Mormons;" but cannot restrain its involuntary thrusts at Gov. Young, and what the Herald calls "the peculiar institution," because, forsooth, the troops are seized with the old complaint of Judge Bronkus, viz: "The monopoly operates peculiarly hard upon those sent there to reside."

We would suggest to those editors whose sympathies are awakened, the propriety of heading a subscription for the purpose of transporting, for the relief of the distressed soldiery quartered at Salt Lake, a corps of "accommodating females" from New York; that is if they can be spared without "operating peculiarly hard" upon the nice fashionable gentlemen of New York. In the meantime we have transferred to our columns the article in the News to which the Herald alludes, and would commend it to the attention of our readers.

We would further suggest as an apology for "their raising the price of grain on the 'strangers,'" that those barbarians of Utah had probably never before been taught that these "strangers" whom Uncle Sam had sent among them, and their horses, were objects of charity; and having learned by the experience of former years, that selling their grain as soon as harvested to strangers passing through the country, and compelling their own citizens to do without or pay two prices for it before another harvest, was a poor speculation, and not knowing that it would be treason, they concluded, this year, to keep their grain for themselves and the numerous immigrants to eat, and let Uncle Sam's horses grub their own living as do those of Utah.

SLANDER.—The expansive nature of scandal is told by the poet thus:

"The flying rumors gathered as they rolled;
Scarce any tale was sooner heard than told;
And all who told it added something new,
And all who heard it made enlargement, too—
On every ear it spread—on every tongue it grew."

PROSPECT OF MORMON WAR.

MR. EDITOR:—Going the rounds of several public journals, such as the Charleston Mercury, the Washington Star, the New York Times, Albany Atlas and Missouri Democrat, I notice a strong disposition to get up an Anti-Slavery, Anti-Catholic, Anti-Nebraska, and last, but not least, Anti-Mormon excitement. Now whether this latter movement is intended to war against Utah Mormons, or to prevent the establishment of large gathering places in New York, Ohio, Missouri and California, is a little ambiguous. These latter places, from recent arrangements, bid fair to receive a larger influx of Mormons than is contained by Utah. If the design of these Anti-Mormon journalists is to subjugate and exterminate all Mormons, as such wherever located in the United States, it is well for Mormons to know timely about it. If the sons of '76 have so far outgrown their father's breeches as to establish different casts among American citizens, consigning Mormons to the galling disabilities which Jews have been compelled to endure in many countries, or to the iron rule which ancient Patricians inflicted upon Plebians; or if they mean to nip them in the bud through excessive scruples of conscience, as the Puritans hunig and killed the witches in New England, I, as an humble Mormon, would like to know; and would like to hear the high-minded men of the nation speak out boldly and unequivocally. If this nation has become so elevated in moral purity, that forgetting their own abominations and blood-guiltiness, they cannot only endorse past acts of Anti-Mormon cruelty, but sanction the same by a national subjugation and destruction of an isolated and innocent people, living in peaceful solitude in their own dear-bought mountain home, then let them declare that this is their true design. Certain prominent journals have, indeed, most unmistakeably declared this to be their design. But will this nation endorse the sentiment expressed in the Charleston Mercury, Washington Star and Missouri Democrat? Such language savors of fanaticism doubly steeped, and of such precocious guilt as we would scarcely believe would ever be embellished in republican type. The Mormons have never violated the first act of the laws of Congress, neither have they trampled upon a single article in the Constitution of the United States. Neither has there ever been filed upon a judicial docket of the United States Court the first legal complaint against the authorities of Utah, or of any of her citizens. But what do we hear? Why a new Governor and new Judges must be sent there. The high-minded Reed, Shaver and Snow were not belligerent enough. They did not leave the judicial bench and stalk up to the pulpit platform of an ecclesiastical general conference, in order to lecture upon female chastity. Other men must therefore take their places. And how must they take their places? We are told that they are to go fortified so strong that they can execute the laws of Congress. But why fortified? Hitherto there has been no resistance to any laws of Congress, nor even any complaint of resistance. Why then must the Governor and Judiciary go there fortified? These officers do not go to Kansas, Oregon, Minnesota or New Mexico fortified. What then is the cause of this strange political phenomenon of sending civil authorities there fortified, so that they can execute the laws of Congress by the drop of the hat? Now if I were to give the two first letters to a remote hint of the real cause, I would say thus: it is to raise the very devil with the Mormons, and that will redeem them of the scandal of the Greytown blunder! Ah, so would I have it (Democrat).

But some of the journalists aver that these are secret designs of the Cabinet, thrown out just as feelers after the popular sentiment. (As when the boy killed the frogs, it was sport to one side, but death to the other.) Cowardly as such a design would appear, it probably would be well before undertaking such an enterprise, involving the robbery and wholesale murder of 30,000 peaceful, law-abiding citizens, to inquire whether there are assassins enough in the United States to join them? Sons of Nero, Herod and Boggs don't all speak at once; but send word to such editors as bark for hire through the Mercury, Star, and Democrat! These men appear to covet the honor of being pioneers in this Caligulan expedition. Granny, what a long tail our puss has got—reaching all the way from the St. Louis Democrat office to that of the Charleston Mercury. The middle of it must look mighty fleecy, as it is strung out by the White House: a sure cure for the Greytown bronchitis, if it is only applied before the election of '56.

From the broad hint about fortifying, I more than half suspect there is a covert design in quartering a body of soldiers in the most central and populous streets in Salt Lake City during the present six or nine months, at an enormous and uncalled for expense. Under these circumstances, with a new Governor and Judiciary, it will not be difficult to kick up a row with the Mormons. I understand that a much larger body of troops is to be sent to the plains next spring, under the same pretense of going to California, while the true design is to concentrate them in Utah. Now will the American public suffer the long-abused, expatiated Mormon community to be chafed and goaded into another scene of dire suffering and dispersion?

Yours respectfully,

ORSON SPENCER.

MISSION AT GIBRALTAR.

35 JEWIN STREET, LONDON, July 5, 1854.

PRESIDENT BRIGHAM YOUNG AND COUNCIL:

BELOVED BRETHREN:—Since my last to you I have labored under much privation and difficulty to maintain a position in this important field of labor. This seems to be the only chance for an opening into Spain, where the priests and laws are much opposed to freedom of speech.

Within a few years some persons endeavored to establish themselves by teaching schools, but as soon as they were found tampering with religious matters they had to flee between two days to save their lives, for they do not value life much in this country, as for a shilling they can be pardoned of any crime.

On the 24th of April, finding my health failing through hard living and tedious labor, I felt disposed to further petition the Governor at Gibraltar, for I thought his feelings might be altered, on account of a deputation from the merchants having been sent to England. They had an interview with his grace the Duke of Newcastle, Colonial Secretary of Foreign Affairs, and the result was published, a portion of which I will copy, as it will show the feelings of the public and superior officers.

"As regards the right of meeting, the duke spoke in disdisapproval of the governor's conduct, and said it was simply a question of common sense; and a great number of questions would never have been raised if the governor had acted sensibly; and if it fell to his lot to appoint the governor's successor, he would choose a better man, and believed all complaints would then cease; for the governor had certainly continued to place himself in antagonism with all parties; he seemed to possess some infirmity of temper which prevented him from taking advice. He should ask for explanations from the governor of his conduct in the affair of the notices, the meetings and the censorship of the press, all of which he disapproved very much."

After writing to the governor, I was called to the colonial office, and had a more pleasant interview with the Colonial Secretary, who wished me to call again after his interview with the governor, which I did, and obtained the promise of protection to preach publicly, and began to look for a suitable room and prepare for meetings.

In a few days I was called on, and forbid to hold meetings; the only reason given was that it was now a time of war, and they did not want any new religion to bother them. I then called on the governor for a free passage to England, as they would not allow me to preach. This was granted, and on the day of sailing I called for my ticket. I was asked if I intended to come to Gibraltar again, and because I would not sell myself for a passage, or bind myself, they broke their word again. They have done all in their power to hinder the spread of the Gospel, and the Lord reward them according to their works.

Be assured I have sought diligently, with all the wisdom the Lord has given me, to do this wicked people good, and I truly have been blessed of the Lord, and have sowed much seed, having put out $45 worth of books, some of which have gone by sea on various ships; some to Scotland, from those I had baptized; they sending them by mail to their friends.

The branch now numbers eighteen members, having lately added four persons. The elder and some of his brethren are now at the seat of war, and have organized a branch of eleven men in Asia, in one of the Turkish burying grounds, and named it the "Expeditionary Force Branch," and have a prospect of baptizing some of their fellow-soldiers. The priest has got his discharge, and had to go to Chatham, England, to ratify the same, and from thence he will go to Scotland on a mission to his friends.

I rejoice to see the Gospel spreading from this place, and pray that fruit may spring forth as a reward for my arduous labors. I found I had lost two stones or twenty-eight pounds in weight, and as my chest and head were affected, with occasionally a pain in my side, and as the hot weather was coming on, the Lord opening the way, I returned to England, leaving the Branch in care of a Teacher, a faithful man.

I have the privilege of visiting some of the branches, and some relations in Leicesterburg.

I do not despair of a work being done in Gibraltar, though the field is small and awfully corrupt. Any English brother can go now and build on the little foundation if he can have patience to teach the people as he can catch them, and to live the best way he can, though I had the privilege of visiting but few of the brethren. An American could not well stay in Gibraltar at present.

SAINTS AND THE WORLD.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 20., '50.

MR. EDITOR:—Can a gentlemen of good reputation and character, not of your religious creed, be permitted to associate with your females and enjoy the chit-chat and sociability with them that are usual in the circles of what may be termed good and genteel society in the world at large?

ANSWER.

Jesus says: "Ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world."

If a gentleman wishes to associate with our females, let him repent and be baptized for the remission of his sins. But this alone will not insure him success, for many have submitted themselves to the ordinance of baptism and have added damnation to themselves by hypocritically bowing themselves to certain rights and ceremonies, with motives other than to glorify God and save themselves from this untoward generation. Let these gentlemen go forth and preach the Gospel to the nations, like the Mormon Elders, without "purse or scrip." Let them be mobbed and tared and feathered, and whipped a few times, for Christ's sake, not for their own follies, and return after a few years' labors, clear in conscience, pure in heart and unspotted from the world. If they can do these things and endure, they may begin to associate with our females, and seek among them a companion and partner for the life that now is, and for that which is to come.

It is possible that there may be females among us tha will accept the company of gentleman who have not passed through a similar ordeal to earn a name and standing that merit the confidence of the virtuous and good. But there is no female in our church that stands upon her good name and honor as a Saint — that respects herself, and her religion and her God, that will freely mingle in the society of any, except those who are soul body and spirit, devoted to the cause of the Latter-day Saints.

Let no one think hard of this, for it is a matter of conscience. No man of the Mormon creed will even think it hard if he be not freely admitted into female society not of his faith. He will never seek it under any circumstances: but even if he were to, would not be likely to meet with success. It is not because the ladies of the world are not virtuous, intelligent or refined: but it is because there is no geniality of spirit, faith, and hope.

We would say to both male and female members of our church; be kind and courteous to all. Yet remember your covanents and keep them! And keep yourselves unspotted from the world. If you see any one in distress, Jew or Gentile, help him according to your ability, and administer to his wants. But remember that ye are not of the world, but Christ has chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you! They may profess to love you, but without an exception this profession is only to ensnare and ruin you, and then, mark it, laugh at your folly and gullibility. They are not of us, and those who are not of are not for us, and those who are not for us are against us. This is obvious, and must be remembered, and practiced by all who wish to reap the rewards promised the Saints.

Letter. from Hon. A. W. Babbitt.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 26, 1854.

Editor of the Eagle: — Believing that a summary of the news in this Territory would be of interest to your many readers, I beg leave state that from all appearances we are about to be merged in a general Indian war. On the 15th day of the present month two Utah Indians were publicly executed near this city, having been legally tried in the United States Court, and condemed to death for the murder of two young boys in Cedar Valley.

Many of their tribe were in and around the city, and although they admitted that they deserved death, yet they objected to the mode — to-wit: hanging by neck. They immediately commenced their depredations in retalliation.

About the same time a war party of the Snakes came into the city in pursuit of the Utahs, who had stolen a large number of their horses. They pursued them to Provo City, and in the suburbs of the city attacked them, and killed and wounded several. They then retreated, but were pursued by the Utahs, and had another battle at Battle Creek, in which the Snakes were victorious. The snakes then came into city exhibtiing the scalps of the Utahs on poles, and had a war dance the same night. The Utahs seem to think that the Snakes were set on by the whites.

We learn also that the Snakes and Shains have had a fight, in which 30 of the of the Snakes were killed. We see nothing before us but Indian difficulties. The difficulties at Fort Laramie you have no doubt and the correct account of.

Col. Steptoe has taken up his quarters here for the winter. He has some three or four companies under his command. We trust that they will be useful to the country while they stay, and relieve the citizens of a great tax, which has hung over them for many years.

Yours as ever, A. W. B.

DECLINED.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher having been named for Congress by some of his admirers, he declines the nomination in advance, in the following characteristic style:

"If the people wish us to be President of the United States we should be disposed to accept that. And we fancy there will have been new times in Washington City after our innugural shall have been pronounced. Had the proposal to go to Congress proceeded from the American Board of Missions, there would have been grave reasons for considering it. We doubt whether they have a harder field in all heathendom; nor yet a field where the Gospel is more needed. But, for mere political reasons to backslide from the pulpit into Congress, is a little too long a slide for the first venture. We beg to decline in advance,"—[Ex.

FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.

INTERESTING LETTER FROM HINDOSTAN.

The following is from the pen of our much esteemed friend, Elder Hugh Findly, now on a mission in Asia. He writes from Belgaum under date of July 26, 1854.

India is indeed a barren corner in the Lord's vineyard — it is like plodding and ploughing up all the time.

After the departure of our military brethren from the Island of Bombay, matters there put on rather a forbidden aspect, so that although a most assiduous distribution of books tracts, &c., was kept up for several months, even after meetings had been obtainable, it seemed wisdom to seek a people who might return a more favorable response to our efforts.

At this juncture Elders Leonard and Musser arrived from Calcutta, who proceeded on the 22nd February per steamer to Kurrachee, and I on the 27th March on board a patamar, (small native craft) to Vengoorly, skirting the Portugesse Territory, and from thence by bullock-bandy to this place. The land portion of our journey, about 80 miles, tracked a rough and uneven, but most fertile scene, crossing the deep beds of very many mountain streams, some of which were still running, but most of them dry. This certainly would be a most luxuriant country, did it only enjoy "the former and latter rain." The mango and locust, both most delicious fruits, hung in abundance by the way-side; with an endless variety of blossomed trees and shrubs casting on the morning breeze their odorous fragrance, presenting the way-farer with a pleasing contrast to the rays of the sultry sun approaching his meridian. The notorious Ram-Ghaunt lay also in our path, which is upward of three thousand feet high, and as near perpendicular as you can imagine to be climed, clad in dense jungle,

Where the boar, the bear and tiger prowl,

Once more in the midst of strangers, I felt as if relieved of a dead weight, and an approving spirit whispered it was well. I had anticipated evading a military collision here, by making my quarters in the native village, but found it so thickly populated that a vacant hut was rare; and then the prejudices of caste seemed to forbid the white face a resting place. Forced back to camp, I rented, in the bazar, a small ground floor, minus of ceiling or window, save the dozen sundials that struck through the appertures of the tiled roof. Here, however, my trunk and trappings were scargely fixed, when a peon called to ask my "hookham" (authority) for residing there. The first opportunity was chosen to wait upon the superintendent of bazaars. The Poona edict was referred to, which I met by relating the favorable features of a latter date. He stated that he would inform the Brigadier-General that I had reported my arrival in camp. In a few days after, he informed me that the General wished me to take a house in the village, as the bazaars were for those who kept shops.

I next made application through the Quarter-Master-General for permission to reside, preach, &c., in the Pensioner's lines; and, in a few days more, learned through that gentleman that the step taken by the military authorities at Poona was to stand as a precedent to their decision on the matter here. I next waited on the Brigadier-General himself, and obtained his concession to receive any references I might obtain from the military officers at Poona. These, I am happy to say, although the process prolonged a state of suspense and comparative inactivity for upwards of two months, were so overwhelming to the prejudices of the General and his colleagues, that I have been granted all that I ask for — to reside in camp and exercise all the functions of a minister of the Gospel, in visiting, preaching, &c.; and this to the no small chagrin of those of the black cloth in the station who now manifest a visiting zeal for the purpose of decrying "Mormonism," formerly unknown among them in preaching Christ crucified. Thanks to the Lord for overuling it so, and to General Wilson, who, I have reason to believe, stands alone at the present instance in British India in honorably granting to the ministers of this church their rights when called upon to do so. For this let his name be had in the honorable remembrance of the righteous. The grant may in itself appear small, and so it is, so far as the commandments of the stations are concerned; but the opposite course pursued by others has proved a most stubborn, and in many instances, an insurmountable barrier to the Gospel's progress; so overbearing military rule in these lands.

While the foregoing was pending, I found many to profess a sympathy, but few seemed prepared to offer a helping hand. There was nevertheless, an eye over me for good — that eye that never sleeps to the interests of those enlisted in His service, and who can, by visions of the night, open the fountain of benevolence to minister to their necessities.

But poor, infatuated native India! While the Elders of Israel have forsaken home and the society of the Saints, to wander under the suspicious eye of earthly authorities, and as something to be carefully approached by the populace, she knows not, nor will she learn the day of her merciful visitation. I had thought that an approach towards the centre of the country, amidist what we may be permitted to call native simplicity, a more favorable native field of labor might be found; but it is not so — their superstitions are more unbroken, and, as a consequence, a greater amount of ignorance prevails. As an illustration of this fact — a Brahmin the other day asked me if "our God could grow;" and related that they had a stone god in their village who had formerly been very lean, but had grown very stout in all his parts, and would persuade me to come and see for myself, forgetting that I had not seen him in his days of leanness. On inquiring into this matter, I found that this person was by no means isolated in his belief. The priestly institution of a continual oil-offering, which is poured on those sculptured deified stones, under the intense heat of a tropic sun, causes relaxation of their pores, and, as a natural consequence, swells them, till in some instances they burst asunder, like the Babylonian dragon by Daniel's dose, though such an incident is taken much more cooly by its votaries.

Coupled with a strong traditionnl superstition, there is a preponderating avericious principle wound up in all the calculations and movements of this people, that ill suits a gospel requiring the sacrifice of all things, which is literally requisite in their case. Upon a profession of Christianity the parental roof no longer shelters the delinquent; the affectionate father or mother knows him no more; and, if married, the wife of his bosom may be, by consent of law torn from, him and again adopted into her father's family; even public opinion denies him former associations common to all; in truth, his kindred, caste, and the Hindoo law declare him virtually dead. Hence, the institutions and provisions adopted by hireling missionaries to provide their converts with a home, food, clothing, &c., which, however, when applied to a people so void of every principle of rectitude, only operates as so many stimulents to hypocritcy; and to this general fact, we have not been able to ferret out one honorable exception in their few converts in Western Hindostan — a truth proverbial amongst the natives themselves. Indeed, I am quite prepared to subscribe to the sentiments of Elder Jones [in Star, Dec. 10 1853,] regarding the Bengalees, as being fully applicable to the natives of Western India, with this addition, that the Musselmen, who are plentiful on this side of the country, are more spirited, but, at the same time treacherous, daring, and blood thirsty against those who attempt to hint anything derogartory to Mahomet's supremacy. They boast of a day not far distant when not by missionary enterprise, for of this they have none, but sword and conquest, their faith will triumph throughout Asia; and, under this spirit, it is the most distant object of their conception to give heed to any other religion. There is in them, very perceptibly, the spirit of natal Romanism, yet tinged with a deeper shade of barbarism, like the smouldering embers of a faded glory, only lacking an opportunity to burst forth more destructively than before.

I have exercised faith for this people when all seemed clouded in sable darkness; and made myself, as far as their prejudices would admit, as one of themselves; even subjecting myself, in many instances, to their perfidy, through an intense desire to gain some. I have also baptized those of the highest shade of their sub-divided Brahminical caste; but their faith seemed inadequate to sustain them under the sacrifice. And now, it would be the proudest day of our existence, could we only hope for better things of them — nothing nameable could stand between us and the accomplishment. Nor do we feel to slacken our efforts until the Lord, either by His blessing give us our desire, or through his servant say, "It is enough."

I have rented a commodious bungalow, and furnished it for meetings; and have also formed a native daily class for the two-fold purpose of forcing myself into their society, and assisting to pay rent and other necessary expenses; having established four meetings in the week for preaching, and two for natives exclusively. There continues to be a good attendance of Europeans for the size of the station, comprising only one European regiment, and one company of artillery, with about two hundred, including pensioners, staff, and civil servants. A few have been baptized, and prospects are rather flattering for an early increase.

At the last accounts from Poona, matters were rather stiff there; and from Kurrachee, the brethren had been prevented from residing or ministering in cantonments. I have sent a memorandum of the favorable decision of Government, and that of the authorities of this place, which, I doubt not, the brethren will use to advantage. The Bombay papers having intimated our success, it is to be hoped the military authorities of Kurrachee will follow the laudable example, that the brethren may be permitted to pursue their course undisturbed.

Flour in China. — This is a cheering feature, "California sending flour to China," for instead of our gold leaving the conntry to pay for tea, sugar and spices, silks, shawls, and other necessaries and luxuries, we send the product of our soil and the labor of our hands. This is what builds up our State. Four thousand quarter sacks of California flour from the Eureka Mills were sold yesterday by the Messrs. Freidlander & Co., at satisfactory prices, (about 9 dollars per barrel) to ship to China. Other shipments of like character will shortly follow; and thus, at length, California has become an exporter of breadstuffs. — [San Francisco Herald.

Our pleasures should, like bees' honey, be extracted not from a few stately flowers, named and classic, but from the whole multitude, great and small, which God has sown with profuse hand to smile in every nook, and make the darkest corners warm with their glowing presence.

Commercial Bank of Kentucky.—The Paducah (Ky.) American, where this bank is located, says:

A ridiculous report has been put in circulation by the brokers, or some persons interested, that the notes of this bank are discredited. Now, this is all very foolish, as any one who knows anything about the condition of the bank will know; but it is calculated to injure the standing of the bank by imposing on persons who are not versed in such matters. We assure our country friends that the officers of this bank are reliable business men—that the affairs of this bank are in a healthy and prosperous condition. Every bank in the State receives its paper, and no bank in the State is safer or stands higher.

Arrest of a Great Scoundrel.—A man named Samuel Scoville was arrested on Saturday last by Capt. Cozzins, as the robber of the Marine Bank of Savannah, Ga. The robbery was committed a month or two ago. Scoville was an officer in the bank, and it is supposed carried off with him about $10,000. He was found boarding at the Planters' House, in this city, calling himself Lewis. A reward, we believe, of $1,000, had been offered for his arrest. Some $8,000 has been found in his possession since the apprehension.—[St. Louis Democrat.

Think.—Thought engenders thought. Place one idea on paper, another will follow it, and still another, until you have written a page. You cannot fathom your mind. There is a well of thought there which has no bottom. The more you draw from it, the more clear and fruitful it will be. If you neglect to think yourself, and use other people's thoughts, giving them utterance only, you will never know what you are capable of. At first your ideas may come out in lumps, homely and shapeless; but time and perseverance will arrange and polish them. Learn to think, and the better you will express your ideas.

A Good Double Pun.—Mr. Forrest was serenaded at the Winthrop House, Boston, on Monday evening. The next morning, at the breakfast table of that excellent hotel, Mrs. Wood, the fascinating comedienne of the Boston Theater, was congratulated on the serenade by a gentleman who supposed it was intended for her. "Oh no!" she readily replied, "they passed by the little Wood for the great Forrest!" Mrs. Wood deserves the compliment of a serenade for her fine acting as well as for her wit.

Usury Laws.—The entire repeal of the Usury laws in Great Britain has been accomplished at the recent session of Parliament. The act by which this was effected is known as ch. 90, 17 and 18 Victoria, and is now in operation. It is now lawful in Great Britain to loan money at any rate of interest and on any description of property, either real estate or otherwise.

Something New.—An invention which must become popular consists in a small padlock, with the owner's name engraved upon it, which is afixed to an umbrella in such a way that it cannot be taken off, nor the umbrella opened. This, it is supposed, will guard against stealing of umbrellas, and in this light will, if successful, be by some considered an infringement of natural rights.

An Appropiate Emblem.—An exquisitely dressed young gentleman, after buying another seal to dangle about his delicate person, said to the jeweller that he would ah like to have ah something engraved on it ah to denote what he was. "Certainly, certainly; I will put a cypher on it," said the tradesman.

"It is very curious," said an old gentlemen, a few days since, to his friend, "that a watch should be perfectly dry when there is a running spring inside of it."

POSTOFFICE MONEY ORDERS.

Every reader knows how money is lost by sending bank notes by mail. In England this loss is avoided by purchasing a "money order" and sending that to the correspondent. Such an arrangement is much wanted here, and ought to be put into operation. The system has just been established in Canada, where the Postoffice Department has issued a circular which states that arrangements will be completed at an early date for issuing, at the Postoffices, orders for the payment of certain sums of money—not exceeding ten pounds on each order—at any one of the offices on the list. The charge to the public for each order will be one shilling and three pence, of which one-half will be allowed to the postmaster granting an order, in compensation for his trouble, and the other half would be remitted to the Postmaster General towards defraying the expenses of the system.

The rates above would limit the sum for which an order could be procured, to forty-eight dollars, and charge thirty cents for the accommodation. One-half the payment goes to the postmaster of whom the order is purchased, and the other to the Postoffice Department.

By the bark Ithtonia, Capt. Morton, from Palermo, we have advices from Scicilly to Sept. 17.

At Messina the cholera was making frightful havoc, taking off from eight to eleven hundred per day. On the 16th, the report was that about one half the population had been carried off.

The disease extended even to animals — mules, cats and dogs dropping dead in the streets.

All the physicians who had not fallen victims had fled from the city,

The government had issued a proclamation calling for medical volunteers from the neighboring cities, and guaranteeing payment to them. There were ten had gone from Palermo. On the 13th one thousand soldiers or convicts had been sent from Palermo to Messina to cleanse the streets and bury the dead.

At Naples, August 13th, the disease had abated, the deaths amounting to about three hundred per day, and on the 23rd, the deaths daily decreased to twenty or twenty-five.

At Palermo, about three hundred and fifty per day was the number. The whole number of deaths at Palermo was estimated at thirteen thousand, and at Messina forty-five thousand.

OUT OF EMPLOYMENT.

Out of employment! The exclamation is almost as common as the notices "to let" on new houses. Why out of employment? Has ingenuity reached its end that flesh and blood must waste as the flower wilts when plucked from the stem? Energy may be seen any day in the week at a street corner sharpening knives. Apple stands yield profit enough to pay for an upper room and something approaching comfort. Matches industriously offered have purchsed a house and lot. Tripe and sausage meat enable the dealer to keep cool in warm weather, and more than pay for coals and expense when frost prevails. An Etheopian swill-collector has qualified himself to exercise the elective franchise by pursuing his sloppy vocation with vigor. Out of employment! Who can know who or what you are if you stand at the corner moping and wondering why a stranger does not step forward to extend a helping hand? Never hope to jump at once into prosperity, for the chasm between industry and idleness is of frightful width. Never allow pride to bring a blush to your cheek because your business is humble. Pride is not reliable in all cases. If you labor, you produce, and producers are certain of reward in some form. If you are cheated of your money an honest man may hear of your calamity, and with generous heart offer you a position. Never say "out of employment!" because no reasonable excuse can be offered therefor. The world is wide; the people daily find rest and the cemeteries, and places must be suppled. There's work enough for all while integrity and cincerity are characteristics. — Try again. — [Knickerbocker.

HEADING CABBAGES IN WINTER.

The following plan to accomplish this desirable end is that which, we understand, is adopted in the New England States by the best farmers and gardeners there. We invite to it attention in this region, as we not unfrequently see much cabbage, which failed to head in the fall from various causes, either pulled up and fed to stock or left a prey to the first:

Select a suitable spot in a garden or field, six feet in width, of any desired length, free from standing water; run a furrow the proposed length of your bed, and throw a back furrow upon it. This double furrow will form a side wall of your cabbage house. In the trench stand your cabbages on their roots, leaning toward the furrow at an angle of 40 to 45. Let the the next furrow be thrown upon the roots and stalks of the cabbages, and another row be placed in the trench made by the second furrow; thus proceed until your six feet of width is planted, then let the furrow be a double one—making the other side wall about the height of the cabbage head.

Through the whole length of the middle of the patch lay rails lengthwise, supported by crutches, at a height of about two feet from the cabbages; this will form the ridge of the cabbage house. Lay light brush wood from the side walls to the ridge pole; then throw on salt hay, or bog hay, or straw, two inches in depth. As the cold weather advances, throw on dirt until you have a depth of say six or eight inches, or even more, when the winters are severe, and finally spank the dirt roof with the flat of a spade, until it will shed the rain. Fill up the two ends of your house in the same manner, leaving only small air holes of a foot or two in diameter, which may be closed with hay, and opened occasionally on a fair day. The length of the house should be on a north and south line.

In the early spring you will find your most unpromising plants have heads of their own; and all be thriving and fresh. Try it once, and you will try it ever afterwards.

The following incident connected with the battle at Alma, is related by a correspondent of an English paper:

"As the 95 regiment was advancing, a wounded Russian was calling pitteously for water, when poor captain Eddington, whose heart was as kind and charitable as it stout and brave, ran up to him, and stooping, gave him to drink from a flask of brandy and water which he carried in case he should himself be wounded. This revived the wounded man, and poor Eddington ran forward to join his company, when the wretch who had just been restored by his charity, fired at and shot him, his best friend.—This so maddened his poor brother, Lieut. Eddington, who was in the same regiment, and close to him, that he, in performing desperate deeds of daring, also fell, dearly selling his life in avenging the death of his gallant brother. The two poor fellows were most affectionate brothers; they fell together, and two better soldiers or braver hearts never wore the cloth.

Health comes of itself; but we are at great pains to get our diseases. Health comes from a simple life of nature; disease from the artificial life.

ARRIVAL OF THE ASIA.

New York, Nov. 16.

The Asia has arrived; she left Liverpool at 11 o'clock on the morning of the 4th, and reached her dock shortly after nine this morning; she brings 144 passengers. On the 5th, at 2 1-2 A. M., passed the Europa eight miles north of Tuscan; on the 13th, at 7 P. M., passed the Pacific.

The Asia's dates are to the 4th.

Russian dispatches say the allies suffered two severe defeats, viz: the French had their works destroyed and 16 guns spiked, and the English cavalry were attacked by Menchikoff at Balaklava and routed with the loss of 500 horses. The anglo French reports do not give any explicit denial, but only say that the Russian story is improbable and exaggerated. The allies state that two Russian ships were destroyed in the harbor, also quarantine batteries silenced, and a bastion of Fort Constantine damaged by explosion of a magazine. It is at least evident there has been sharp fighting.

Latest—Saturday Morning.—Accounts are still conflicting. The English say the siege was progressing favorably up to the 27th. The latest telegraph account is a dispatch from Lord Redcliffe, which confirms the account that 30,000 Russians attacked and captured the forts of Balaklava; a great battle ensued, and the allies remained masters of the field.

Up to the 25th October the siege and bombardment was going on regularly, and with success. The loss of life in Sebastopol is so great that the air is said to be tainted by the number of the unburied dead.

Keckenoef, (Bessarabia,) Oct. 20.—On the 25th Gen. Leprande attacked a detached camp of the English, took four redoubts which protected their position, and also took eleven guns; at the same time a powerful cavalry attack was made, which probably cost the English half their light cavalry. Lord Cardigan, who commanded, escaped with difficulty. Lord Dunkillen was taken prisoner. The Greek accounts from Odessa confirm this, and say the English cavalry loss was 500. It is certain that the Russians received considerable reinforcements, and a still stronger corps was expected at Perekop.

At the recent attack upon the forts at the mouth of the Sebas, the vessels of the allies were much damaged. The British are said to be within three hundred yards of the Russian works—the French works not being strong enough were much injured.

A deserter states that the Russian loss was very great. A French division from the Piercus passed the Bosphorus, as a reinforcement to the besieging army.

Lord Dunkillen's family were informed by the English Government that the reported capture was not true, at least doubtful.

It is said that two Russian men-of-war which had been careened over to serve as batteries, had been sunk by the force of the allies.

Water was beginning to fail in Sebastopol.

Menschikoff reports officially the loss of the Russians at Alma at 4,500.

Gortschakoff is apparently strengthening his position.

Contradictory rumors are current as to the progress of negotiations. Austria, unless compelled, will certainly not come to open rupture with Russia, until confident of the support of Prussia and the Germanic governments.

There is a talk of a note from Nesselrode to Prussia, stating that Russia is prepared for all contingencies, under all circumstances.

France.—The Paris Constitutionnel has a long, temperately written, editorial of the friendly relations which exist between the United States and France, but which, it says, are endangered by the indiscreet conduct of Soule, whose acts, the Constitutionnel thinks, are generally repudiated by the people of the United States.

Spain.—In Spain all was quiet. Generals Dulie, Concha and Pelun have been named deputies from Barcelona.

Madrid.—The Clamor Publico says that France, like England, and in accord with her, is to send a a strong squadron to Cuba, to take it, if necessary, from an attack on the part of the United States.

There are rumors of disturbances in Sicily and Calabria.

New York, Nov. 18.—The Catawba arrived at 4 o'clock, with Havana dates of the 12th—nothing of importance. But little is known relative to the reported outbreak at Puerto Principe. The screw steamer Glasgow sailed at 12 o'clock with 137 passengers. The frigate Congress is fiting for sea with all possible dispatch at the Brooklyn navy yard. Efforts are being made also to get the Sabine ready.

Quebec, Nov, 18.—Last night the Legislative Assembly unanimously voted $100,000 to the widows and orphans of the allied soldiers who fall in the present war. The government proposes to alter the tariff, reducing the duty on refined sugar to $2 40, and raw sugar to $1 50.

Boston, Nov. 18.—Col. Schouler, editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, on a visit to this city, was presented by his friends with a massive silver pitcher.

Philadelphia, Nov. 18.—A duel was fought at Burlington, N. J., this morning, between two gentlemen of this city. One was wounded in the arm, the other in the thigh. The friends then interfered and setled the difficulty.

New London, Conn., Nov. 20.—The money stolen from the Windham Bank was recovered last night at Allen's Point. Four men have been arrested. Sheriff suspected a party of four who were hanging about the steamer's wharf at the Point, just previous to the departure of the boat for New York, and arrested them as they went on board. On searching their baggage the $22,000 stolen money was found, and the balance secreted in the boat. The robbers have been lodged in jail at this place. We have not learned their names, but they are said to have the appearance of genteel and finished scoundrels.

Philadelphia, Nov. 20.—Two tons of powder exploded this morning in the drying house of Jacob Johnson, Montgomery county, killing Henry Whistler and Jacob Hisson.

Cincinnati, Nov. 20, M.—River risen 2 inches. Weather clear and pleasant.

Money matters improving; exchange declining, and bankers refuse to buy at 1 1-2 premium. Gold declined to 1a1 1-2 premium.

Pittsburgh, Nov. 20, P. M.—River two feet seven inches and falling; weather clear and cool.

New London, Conn., Nov. 20.—George Bliss, the Sheriff, arrested four robbers of the Windham County Bank, going on board a steamer at Allen's Point last night, for New York, and recovered all the money but $2,000.

INCIDENTS CONNECTED WITH THE PANIC.

It has been a long time since the community was so excited as yesterday. No less than 10,000 people must have visited Third street during the day, too many of them painfully interested in the turn of events. Many incidents occurred, some painful, and others amusing enough, as the following will evince:

About ten o'clock a rag-gather made his appearance at the door of Ellis & Sturges. Finding he could not gain admission, he gave way to the most violent expressions of grief. One would suppose from his appearance that he was not worth a dime in the world, but, displaying his account book to an individual who attempted to console him, it was discovered that he had several hundred dollars on deposit. Last winter this same individual applied to the poor authorities for relief, and owing to his extreme poverty he was supplied with fuel.

A widow lady excited some sympathy at the Citizens' Bank. A small amount of money, left her by her husband, she had carefully saved for the benefit of her children. She had been led to believe that the bank had failed, and, supposing her money gone, was almost frantic. She was finally persuaded that her money was safe, and left somewhat satisfied.

A person, known for his miserly propensities, drew some hundreds out of the Central Bank. Some wags persuaded him that the notes he had obtained were not safe, and already rumors were current that the banks which had issued them were about suspending. He was further told that some well known pickpockets had been watching him, and that he had better look out or he would be knocked down and robbed. As may be supposed, this news harassed him very much, and after sauntering about an hour or two, with the money tightly clutched in both hands, he again deposited it in the bank.

At the noon hour, a man hurriedly approaching one of the suspended banks attracted our attention. He wore no coat, the sleeves of his check shirt were rolled up to his elbows, his face was covered with iron dust, and he bore every appearance of being one of those ever busy toiling mechanics, whose every cent is earned by the sweat of his brow. Approaching the bank door he was stopped by a policeman—

"Can I get in?" he asked.

"No sir; the bank is closed," was the reply.

"Closed!" he exclaimed, while his heart throbbed with heavy beats. "Gentlemen, this is too bad. For twenty years have I been toiling hard to get a home, but the harder I work the further I am from accomplishing my desire. The savings of five years I was swindled out of by a pretended friend, and now the savings of fifteen years is lost in this d——d concern. Can a working man be protected in any way?"

A circular was placed in his hands, setting forth why the bank had suspended, and assuring depositors that they would be paid, principal and interest, in full. He sat down and read it carefully, shook his head as if he thought the statement all sham, and left as hurriedly as he came.

A thousand foolish rumors were afloat in the crowd. One was that Smead had withdrawn from the Citizens's Bank, having been paid $40,000 for the use of his name for one year. Another, that Mr. Ellis was not sick, and had been seen leaving the city early in the morning. It was such rumors as these which harassed the poorer class of depositors, and made them believe that matters were far worse than they are.

Decidedly the most forlorn looking object on Third street yesterday afternoon, was a Reporter, who said he had over three hundred dollars in one of the suspending concerns. How in the name of common sense a Reporter managed to accumulate so much money, is a mystery, but that he had it, or rather that one of the banks had it for him, no one could doubt, after looking at the grimaces of his elongated countenance.

About 11 o'clock the Citizens' Bank issued a circular in the shape of a handbill. They were given to an old and faithful bill-poster known as One-Eyed Billy, to distribute. As soon as Billy commenced giving them out the crowd surrounded him, and so eager were they to obtain them, that they snatched at and grabbed them, tearing them to pieces. This enraged the bill-poster, and, hurriedly rolling the circulars up, he placed them beneath the breast of his coat, and stood on his dignity. The crowd pressed him closely, begging and beseeching him to distribute.

"Billy give me one, won't you?" cried one.

"Billy, Billy, you know me, won't you give me one?" asked another.

"Faits an its mesel' that is a depositor, and you'll give me one," shouted a Hibernian.

A dozen other exclamations were made, and the crowd pushed and shoved against the lone bill poster without mercy. Billy was not to be forced, however. Bracing himself against a lamp post, and hugging the circulars to his bosom, he threw up his solitary eye, and complacently stood his ground. After a few minutes had elapsed he said:

"Now, gentlemen, its no use a scrouging. Nar-a-one will you get till you act like gentlemen. I are not going to have the bills tored. If you'll form a ring and stan' back, I'll hand 'em round."

"Form a ring! form a ring!" shouted a dozen or more, and an attempt was made to do so around the bill-poster.

"Now, remember," said he, as he carefully took the bundle from his bosom, "there aint to be no snatchin's. Take it cool, now, gentlemen, and——"

A dozen grabs were made for the first bill unrolled, whereupon the bundle was again hurriedly thrust into Billy's bosom.

"It's no use a talkin'," he continued, "narry a bill shall go out while there's snatchin'."

Again the crowd coaxed, again Billy unrolled the bundle; again the crowd snatched, again the bundle was put up, and so matters continued about a half an hour.

The bill-poster finally got the crowd tamed down, and then distributed the bills in his own way. He declared, however, after he was through, that he wouldn't undertake another such job as that for double price.

A young man named J. P. Dorsy, during the run on T. S. Goodman & Co.'s Bank, drew out of the said bank $135. While standing in the crowd listening to what was being said in regard to monetary affairs, and boasting of being successful in drawing his money, some member of the light fingered gentry robbed him of his roll of money, leaving him worse off than he was before.

"This is a burning shame," exclaimed a young man, on Third street, in the afternoon. "I work honestly for my living, and I ought honestly to be paid. Saturday night I drew $30 from my employers, and here it is, (showing $30 in Circleville paper,) not worth fifty cents on the dollar to-day. Is not this downright robbery, willful plunder? The working men have no rights now, but like sheep, must lay down and be shorn at the will of their masters, the capitalists."

MY MOUNTAIN HOME.

I love thee still, my own mountain home,
Though in distant lands I'm called to roam,
From my humble cot, by the murm'ring rill,
'Neath the rugged brow of a rockland hill.
I have loved each grove with its grateful shade,
Each bright purling brook and grassy glade,
Where the evening breezes so gently come;—
They'll welcome me back to my mountain home.

On the lofty tops of the mountains high,
Whose hoary peaks seem to reach the sky,
There eternal snows meet my wond'ring gaze,
Impervious still to the sun's fierce rays.
I oft have watched the eagle's flight,
As he circled around in the sunbeams bright,
Then darting down in the cataract's foam,
He bathed his wings near my mountain home.

So often at morn I've wandered wide
Round the mountain's base or steep hill side;
I've frightened away from the jutting rock
The sentinel goat to his kindred flock;
The warning whistle is not given in vain—
They hasten away to the distant plain.
The red-skinned hunter the Kanyons roam,—
He has traced his prey to his mountain home.

I have wandered forth in the stilly night,
As Cynthia shed her silvery light
Over field and grove, and hill and dale,
And the glassy lake in the distant vale,
The whispering breeze from the mountain height,
Was rippling now its bosom bright;
The night hawks scream as they swiftly come
From the rocky caves of their mountain home.

At the eventide hour of an autumn day
The withering grass looked sear and grey,
Through the quivering boughs of the leafless tree,
The whistling winds sighed mournfully.
From my cottage home my steps I bend,
Through the opening gorge to the rocky glen.
Where the waters rush and the cascades foam,
Wild music make for my mountain home.

On the shelving rock where I stop to rest,
The croaking raven has built his nest;
And startled now, with a lazy sweep
He wings his way through the upper deep.
The echoing caves give back the cry
Of the eagle's scream as he rushes by,
And darting down from heaven's blue dome,
He seeks his nest in his mountain home.

Now higher still on the mountain side,
My rapturous gaze extended wide
O'er the distant plain, with its fields and groves,
Meandering streams and winding coves;
And farther still the sea fowl laves
His snowy wings in the sparkling waves;—
The great Salt Lake, with its briny foam,
I love to see from my mountain home.

These scenes I love, and will cherish yet,
In memory dear, each fond regret;
As I wander forth I'll bear in mind
Those loved ones dear I've left behind;
My constant hope, my constant prayer,
Shall be for those I've cherished there:
Wives, children, and friends, wher'eer I roam,
I love yo still in my mountain home.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Oct. 30, 1854. CHARLIE.

CONFERENCE MINUTES.

Minutes of a Special General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, held in Fourth Street Chapel, St. Louis, Mo., Commencing Nov. 4, 1854.

The meeting was opened at 10 1-2 A. M., by singing and prayer. It was moved by Elder Andrus, and carried, that Elder Erastus Snow preside over the Conference, and that James S. Cantwell act as Clerk, and S. J. Lees Reporter.

President Snow then arose and addressed the Conference on the nature of the business before it, as follows:

In the opening of this conference I will briefly present some of the items of business as they may occur to my mind, which will probably be presented before this conference during the session. You probably all, or most of you, are aware of the vote of the General Conference, appointing me to come to this place to take charge of the churches in this vicinity, to organize a gathering place and Stake of Zion. This will be a part of the business of this conference. This organization, according to the order of the kingdom of God, will embrace a Presidency and a High Council, a Bishop and his Counsellors, with such other quorums as the circumstances and conditions of this people may require, in order that the various officers of the church in this part of the world may be classified, and have opportunity to become instructed in their several offices and callings, agreeable to the doctrine and covenants.

I purpose also presenting before the Conference the question, whether, in entering into this organization, which I have proposed, they will also bring themselves under the law of Zion with regard to tithing?

If any other item of business which I have not referred to shall present itself, it will be called up as the Spirit of the Lord may dictate. I shall not be very particular as to the order in which they may be brought up.

Connected with this organization and business that will come before the conference, we shall desire to impart some instructions which we would be glad that every Latter-day Saint in this part of the world might hear; but so far as practicable for the benefit of those who cannot be here, we shall endeavor to publish such important items as may be necessary for the Saints, with regard to this organization.

I purposed that this morning should be devoted to such instructions, preparatory to the business this afternoon. Certain it is, that there are many men and women professing to be Saints, in this city and vicinity, who cannot realise, and do not appreciate the importance of this occasion, or their seats would not have been vacant this morning. If they will seek the counsel and instructions of the church only in the public congregations on the Sabbath day, they must content themselves with the crumbs dealt out to the world at large. I wish I could make my brethren and sisters feel the importance of that saying. If the world of mankind was prepared to receive and improve upon every word of the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, which the Lord wishes to pour out upon his Saints, then it would be different. But they are not; and many of those who have recently come out from the world and embraced the fulness of the Gospel, do not realize the importance of pressing forward to perfection and feasting upon the words of Christ, that they may drink, as from the fountain head, those pure and holy principles which are calculated to purify the heart and sanctify and prepare them for exaltation and glory in the celestial kingdom.

In answer to the question, why is it that Stakes of Zion are located in this place, in California, and in other places of the United States, as well as in the valleys of the mountains, I have to say, that the Lord who foresees future events, calculates beforehand and provides for the exigencies of his people. As to the land of Zion, we in St. Louis are as much in the land of Zion, to all intents and purposes, as if we were located in Salt Lake City. It is just as proper to organize a stake of Zion in Cincinnati, St. Louis, San Jose, California, or any other place which the Lord may designate, as in Salt Lake City.

You may perhaps ask me, what is the land of Zion? I reply, it is America; a choice land above all other lands upon the earth, which God, by promise, gave unto the remnants of Joseph for an inheritance; which he has designated for his people in these last days; whereon he has promised to build up Zion a new Jerusalem. If you ask me where the centre of that Zion will be, I reply, it will be the place which God designated by the martyred prophet and seer, Joseph Smith, as found in the Book of Doctrines and Covenant; that is now called Independence, Jackson county, Missouri. If you ask how far its boundaries will extend? I answer as far as the borders of the people of God shall extend. If you ask me the question, what is Zion? I reply, it is the pure in heart. So says the Almighty, which you will find in a Revelation in the Book of Doc. and Cov. Wherever upon this land the people of God are assembled and organized under Zion's laws, striving to purify themselves before God, there you will find Zion.

Relative to the Saints gathering from other parts of the world to this place, to Cincinnati, to California, to Salt Lake, or other parts of Utah; every Latter-day Saint throughout the world is at liberty to gather to either of these places, according to their choice, being guided by the counsel of those who are set over them, who will counsel them according to their circumstances. You may ask, will the Saints build temples in St. Louis, in Cincinnati, in San Jose, or other Stakes of Zion besides Salt Lake City? To this I reply, I do not know; and all I care about it is, that if the Lord tells us to do it we will try. Through the channel which he has appointed, he has told his people to build one unto his name in Salt Lake City. We in St. Louis, in common with our brethren in every part of the world, will aid in carrying out their instruction, and when He wishes us to build a temple in St. Louis or elsewhere we will take hold of that.

The church of Latter-day Saints built a temple in Kirtland, in the State of Ohio, which was dedicated to the Lord in April, 1836, at which place the first Elders of the church received the first degrees of their endowment. They have laid the foundation, and commenced building several others. They built one in Nauvoo, Ill., which was completed and dedicated unto the Lord in the spring of 1846, being a period of ten years between the dedication of Kirtland temple and that of Nauvoo. Whether we will dedicate another in 1856 remains to be seen. If I were to express my feelings, I would say, let not the time be prolonged beyond 1856. There are, and will be many Stakes of Zion organized according to the order of heaven. But those keys of endowment, of sealings, and blessings that are necessary to secure to the Saints their exaltation in a world to come, are held at the seat of the first Presidency of the church. To the temple of the Lord at the seat of the first Presidency will the faithful children of God resort to receive those endowments, keys and blessings which relate to their future exaltation.

In other Stakes of Zion abroad the Saints may be instructed, may be tried, may be lead by the hand of the Lord through a round of experience that is necessary to expand the mind, to purify the heart, to sanctify the affections to the Lord our God, and prepare them to enter into the house of the Lord and receive those holy ordinances, keys and endowments that are necessary for their final exaltation in the celestial world. We have entered into covenants to observe the celestial law from the time that we yielded obedience to its first requirements. In baptism for the remission of sins, and in the gift of the Holy Ghost which is imparted by the laying on of hands, we received the first of our endowments and power from on high.

Do any receive these first ordinances without receiving power from on high? I answer, many have and will continue to receive these first ordinances, and still remain in the gaul of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity, because they are not prepared to receive these ordinances, according to the requirements of heaven. The blessings would not follow upon such, even if Michael, the archangel, were to lay his hands upon them. He that was a Simon Magus before would be a Simon Magus still. If that is the case with regard to the first ordinances of the celestial law through which we receive the first blessings from on high, I ask if the same principle will not hold good in relation to all our endowments from this time till we enter the celestial gate?

Laying on of hands is a means by which Priesthood and power to administer ordinances, is conferred upon the servants of God. But if an ordination is conferred upon any man, who is not worthy thereof, and who does not strive to magnify this calling, he will never know the power of the Holy Priesthood, and he will forfeit it in the end, and no power can prevent it; it will slip from him, no matter who has placed it upon him. This principle is applicable to every blessing conferred upon man.

In the selection of officers that may be presented before this Conference for this Stake of Zion, I will not say we shall select the best, but we will endeavor as far as the light of the Holy Spirit shall guide us to select men of integrity and sound judgment, and sound in the faith.

In every item of business which may be presented, we shall expect a free, untrammelled expression of feeling by the vote of the Saints, both male and female according to that spirit which is in them, exercising prayer and humility of soul that they may be guided by the Holy Spirit. To you who have studied the doctrine and covenants as you ought to have done, the particular duties of the different officers of a Stake of Zion will be comprehended; and explanatory remarks from me would be unnecessary. But to refresh the the minds of such as may not be familiar with this subject, I will remark, that to the Presidency of a Stake and the High Council which consists of twelve High Priests, more particularly is entrusted the spiritual welfare and blessings of the Saints, and power to investigate and decide upon important matters, that may not be satisfactorily disposed of by the Bishop, or that may not properly come under his jurisdiction. The more particular office work of the Bishop and his Counsellors is to administer in temporal things; to care for the honest poor, the widow and the fatherless, and to receive the tithes of the Saints and settle with them as the Lord's steward between them and their God, in relation to their tithes. And further, to take the general Presidency of the officers of the Lesser Priesthood, the Bishop being the legitimate President, holding the keys of the Lesser Priesthood which embraces Priests, Teachers and Deacons. He also is to set as a common judge in Israel in the Stake of Zion, where he is appointed to act. He is to hear and determine the cases of difficulties which may arise between brethren and sisters as members of the Church. And from his decision in difficult cases or dissatisfaction of either party, appeals may be taken to the High Council of the Stake.

The office of a President over the Elders is to preside over ninety-six Elders, teaching and instructthem in their duties. The Elders Quorum should be a kind of school of instruction for the qualification of its members in every duty that may be required of them.

The office of a President of the Priests Quorum, is to preside over forty-eight Priests, teaching and instructing them in the duties, that pertain to their calling in like manner.

The office of the President of the Teachers is to preside over twenty-four which forms a Quorum of teachers.

The office of the President of the Deacons, is to preside over twelve, teaching them their duties in like manner.

These three Quorums of the Lesser Priesthood, are under the immediate counsel and guidance of the Bishop, and all authorities are under the direction of the President of the Stake. And the President of the Stake is to act under the direction of the Presidency of the whole Church, or in their absence under the direction of the Twelve Apostles, who act as the first Presidency, regulating and governing the affairs of the Church abroad.

Touching the question of tithing I am aware that a large portion of the Saints congregated in St. Louis and the region round about are poor, they have many difficulties to encounter, and expenses which they incur. The law of tithing is a part of the celestial law, and obligatory upon all who expect to enjoy Zions blessings. It did not originate with Joseph Smith, it was only revived and incorporated in the organization of the Kingdom of God, on earth in its proper place. If you ask the particular object and use of tithing, I reply, it is and ever has been appropriated for the building of Temples, and other public works for the good of the Church at large and for the benefit of the honest poor. It is disposed of by the Bishops under the direction of the Presiding Bishop to whom all other Bishops are made amenable in their accounts; the presiding Bishop acting under the direction of the first Presidency of the Church.

If you ask me if I wish to have the handling and disposing thereof and how much the Twelve use of it, I will answer for myself, and I presume for all my brethren of the Quorum. All that I ever used of it since God permitted me to live on the earth, you can put in your eye. And I wish to have nothing to do with it, except to see that every man does his duty; and that those who are appointed for that purpose account to the proper authorities. This is my duty so long as it is committed to my care in this part of the country. It is not my purpose to impose this law upon you. I invariably pay my tithes and those who understand the principles of the Celestial Law would not be deprived of this privilege. If in this part of the country the Saints, in organizing a Stake of Zion, desire to bring themselves also under this law, they shall have the privilege so to do, and it will be presented for their decision at this Conference. This will be a means of proving the spirits of the Saints and may be as profitable in a Stake of Zion in St. Louis, Cincinnati, or any other part of the United States, as it would be in Utah Territory. It is little use for mankind to expect the blessings of a Celestial Kingdom unless they have pure hearts that can abide its laws. It is little use to come from the various nations of the earth to the peaceful abode of the Saints, unless they live as Saints and walk worthy of the blessings of Zion, that they may enjoy the spirit which every true son and daughter of Zion possesses. It is a great blessing upon the Saints who are obliged to remain for a season in this part of the country, to have the opportunity of proving themselves before God, that they may begin to receive a foretaste of the Spirit of Zion as a preparatory work that shall render them worthy to go up and possess those greater blessings which He pours out upon the Saints in the peaceful valleys.

Conference adjourned until 2 1-2 P. M.

The afternoon meeting being opened in the usual manner, the President moved the following resolutions, which were carried unanimously:

First: That we acknowledge and sustain, by our faith and prayers, Brigham Young, as Prophet, Seer, Revelator and President over the Church of Jesus Christ in all the earth.

Second: That we sustain Presidents Heber C. Kimball and Jedediah M. Grant as his Counsellors.

Third: That we sustain in their place, the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, with Orson Hyde as their President.

Fourth: That we sustain the Seven Presidents of the Seventies, with Joseph Young as their President, and all the Quorums of the Seventies under them.

Fifth: That we sustain John Smith as Presiding Patriarch for the whole Church.

Sixth: That we sustain Edward Hunter as Presiding Bishop over the Bishoprick in the whole Church.

Elder Milo Andrus moved to acknowledge and sustain Elder Erastus Snow as an Apostle and President in this part of the United States. Carried unanimously.

The President said it was necessary that these general authorities of the Church should be received and sustained by all Saints throughout the world. As to the local authorities of Zion and her Stakes, it was only necessary that they should be sustained in the several localities where they are appointed.

Next in order would be the appointment of officers for this Stake. He asked whether the congregation wished to nominate indiscriminately, or whether they wished the nominations to eminate from the stand?

Moved and seconded all over the house that the nominations proceed from the stand.

The President said he would not vouch that the best of all the Saints would be nominated, but hoped at least that men of integrity and sound faith would be selected; and if any should feel slighted, he would promise them that if they continued faithful they should have all the responsibility rolled upon them which they were able to bear. He then nominated Elder Milo Andrus for President of this Stake of Zion. Carried unanimously.

The President said Bro. Andrus was entitled to two Counsellors if he wished to have them.

Elder Andrus then nominated Elder Charles Edwards as first, and George Gardner as second Counsellor.

Moved and carriod that Elder Kleber Worley be ordained to the office of Bishop.

Bro. Worley then nominated Elder Thomas Harris as his first, and Edmund Holdsworth as second Counsellor. Accepted.

Moved that Elder Robert Windley be set apart as President of the Elders' Quorum, and Priest William Brecker be set apart as President of the Priests'; Teacher Joseph Seal be set apart as President of the Teachers'. The above motions were carried by vote.

The President then presented the question of tithing for the action of the Conference, and after a free expression of feeling from several persons, it was unanimously voted to adopt the law of tithing throughout this Stake.

President Andrus said that henceforth those who are favored with this world's goods need not expect that they can go from this to any other gathering place of the Saints, with the fellowship of this people, unless they pay tithing and carry with them the Bishop's certificate to that effect.

At 7 o'clock P. M. the Conference again opened by singing and prayer, after which Elder Andrus called on those nominated for the High Council to take their seats to the right of the stand; the Bishop and his Council in front of the stand; the Elders on the front seats in the body of the house, and the Lesser Priesthood at the left of the stand.

The President then gave some instruction, showing that they were thus arranged in order to exhibit the relative position which they occupy in the kingdom of God.

The President of Teachers, nominated Charles L. Walker, the first, and Geoge Higginson, second Counsellor.

The Deacons Quorum was organized, by calling brother Joseph Marshall to preside over that quorum. It was then moved that Bro. Samuel Clegg be ordained Deacon, and set apart as first Counsellor, and John Bodfish second. The above nominations were carried by vote.

President Milo Andrus was then blessed and set apart as President of this Stake, and his Counsellors ordained and set apart, under the hands of President Erastus Snow. The High Council was ordained and set apart under the hands of President Milo Andrus and his Councillors.

The President of the Elders and his first Counsellor was set apart under the hands of the same.

Elder Kleber Worley was ordained Bishop under the hands of President Erastus Snow, as also his Councillors.

Bishop Worley and his Counsellers, (by the instruction of President Snow,) then proceeded to organize the Quorums of the Lesser Priesthood, by setting apart and ordaining the Presidents of the Priests, Teachers, and Deacons, and their Counsellors.

President Snow then addressed the Priesthood, saying that he felt happy in the accomplishment of the work before us. That the Lord had blessed us with his Holy Spirit, and in the most perfect harmony had we accomplished as much in one day, as a Roman council would have done in a month.

Adjourned until to-morrow at 10 1-2 o'clock A. M.

SUNDAY Morning, 5th.

Met pursuant to adjournment. The spacious chappel was filled both above and below with an attentive congregation, mostly Saints from the city and adjacent Branches, including about two hundred brethren holding the Priesthood, among whom were eight Missionaries late from Utah. Being a day of fasting and prayer and free will offerings for the poor, it was spent in preaching, bearing testimony, &c. — During the day and evening the congregation was addressed by Elders: E. Snow, O. Spencer, M. Andrus, Case, Syler, and others with great boldness and effect; and the liberal offerings for the poor, the joyful countenances of the Saints and the universal expression of delight, testified that Zion truly was come unto us. Before closing the Clerk read the following report of the Branches in the St. Louis Conference:

Occupation of Cuba by the United States.

"Our private advices enable us to state with certainty the result of the ministerial and ambassodorial conference recently held at Ostend, and the object of which was, it appears, to determine upon a line of policy by which our difficulties with Spain would be adjusted, and that government induced to make reparation for past outrages and indignities upon our citizens and commerce, as well as security for the future.

The conference necessarily brought up for discussion the peculiar position in which the government of the United States is placed by the refusal of Spain to afford any suitable satisfaction for the Black Warrior and other outrages; or, indeed to continue negotiations upon the subject. Matters have arrived at that crisis where nothing is left for the United States but either abandon the whole question, or continue it in a manner which will afford no opportunity for shuffling. Such being the opinion of Messrs. Buchanan, Mason, and Soule, we are not surprised to learn that they agreed to recommend that the government of the United States should, declare, in effect, that our safety demanded and our interest required we should purchase or take Cuba at once.

It is understood that Mr. McRae, our Consul at Paris, who arrived here on the Arabia, was the bearer of the despatches conveying this recommendation of the American Ministers, and urging upon the President immediately to make the avowal and take steps to carry it into effect. The matter is now being deliberated upon by the cabinet at Washington, and the country will look with deep interest to the result.

Messrs. Buchanan, Mason, and Soule have also expressed their conviction that France and England are favorable to the sale of Cuba to the United States — a marked change having recently taken place in the policy of those countries in this respect. The tone of the English and French press would lead to a supposition that this was the case; but this is rendered more important by the official character of the information now in possession of our government.

Thus fortified, it is not improbable Mr. Pierce may act upon the advice now given. Whatever course is determined on, the action must be prompt. The Cortes meets at Madrid next month. The ultimatum of the United States should be made known during its session.

Should the administration determine to take firm and progressive ground in this matter, it is supposed the Home Squadron will be sent to Havana, Mantanzas and other ports of Cuba — thus lending a moral influence to the arguments used in favor of its acquisition. This will in all likelihood be the first indication given of the President's intention of acting upon the suggestions of Mr. Buchanan and his confreres. We look with interest to the development of the affair, but with little confidence to the firmness of the government at Washington. — [N. Y. Herald.

DR. WHITE,
DISCOVERER OF THE
SYMPTOMA TRUTINORIC SYSTEM,
For Diagonising all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs,
may be Consulted daily at his Office, No. 121 PINE St., between 4th & 5th, from 2 to 5 P. M.

According to well authenticated statistical reports, one out of every six of all the deaths that occur in Europe or America, are from diseases of the lungs alone.

Judging from the above data, there are at the present time within the city of St. Louis, at least, individuals who have disease seated upon their lungs. It is equally true that the Medical Profession, without exception, are unable to detect a disease upon those organs in season to effect a radical cure; and this is the reason why that class of diseases have proved so universally fatal. And hence this new discovery offers the only means extant for detecting pulmonary diseases in their incipient stages, or in time to effect a cure in every case. In all probability, 14,000 out of the above number may escape a premature grave, by at once availing themselves of the benefits of this important discovery.

FIFTEEN THOUSAND

Parents and Guardians should submit every member of their families to an immediate examination by this New System if they would avoid a responsibility desirable to none but infidels. They should not suffer any pecuniary consideration to deter them from reaping its benefits if they would protect those committed to their charge from one of the most fatal diseases that exists upon this continent. If they rely upon their family physician to apprise them of the existence of this dreadful disease, depend upon it, not one case out of a hundred will ever recover. Heads of families, are you prepared to offer those committed to your responsible charge a sacrifice to prejudice, when these inconvertable facts are before you? If so, the responsibility rests entirely with you.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.
Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
Oh him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

I never expect to cease calculating, planning and executing, until this people can organize from the native elements, everything they wish for life, for decoration, and for beauty, in their existence upon this earth, preparatory to their being laid away in the silent grave, as the fathers and mothers of a free and independent nation, who in their life scorned to be depending slaves to any nation or people upon the earth.

These are also the feelings of this great people, of every man and woman who has the cause of Zion at heart. They calculate to operate, and continue to operate, with all the ability, skill, ingenuity and power that God pleases to bestow upon them, until they accomplish every laudable object on earth, and have made it like the garden of Eden, until they decorate it with vineyards and orchards, and every kind of shubbery that is beautiful, and sweet, scented flowers, and every kind of delicious fruit; until they have everything that is necessary for comfort, for convenience, and for ornament, to decorate the persons of the Saints, and the palaces and the temples of Zion. We calculate to continue our operations, until we can make everything that ever has been made by any people, and then keep on operating until we make a great many things that never have been made.

We are in our infancy in the art of manufacturing, and we must creep before we can walk. In learning to walk we may stumble and fall sometimes, but we will rise again, and by degrees gain strength, and, increase in strength and wisdom, from year to year until, like the child that has overcome the weakness of infancy, we can leap the bounds that were once impassable barriers, or take our course over rough and rugged places with ease and safety or skip over a stream, make our way through the brush, and thread the labrinths of mountains and forests. This comparison will apply to this church.

As a people we are of age according to the laws of the land, and we ought to feel the strength and exercise the wisdom of a man. This Church is in her twenty-fourth year. When she was about fourteen years old, she was requested to choose a guardian, but she did not see fit to make choice of the person who wished to become her guardian — choosing rather to live guardianless, until of age.

Now, brethren, we have had a good Conference: I do not know that we have ever enjoyed a better. We have a comfortable house to meet in, where we are secure from the rains and storms from which we suffered in the old Bowery, and when we were obliged to transact our business in the open air. Before this building was erected, I told the Lord, if it was His will, and His people would come up to His help, we would have a building to meet in, that would shield us from the falling weather; in which we could do our business comfortably, and tell the Devil to blow away outside, and ask no odds of him. We have had very pleasant and beautiful weather during the Conference; and a good spirit has reigned, if I may judge. There has been much said of importance to this people, and you will see the increased fire, that has been kindled here, and spread in all directions, like the sparks from the blacksmith's anvil.

We know the Gospel we preach is a stumbling-block to the world; and so was Joseph Smith in his life time. If this had not been prophesied by holy men of ancient times, some of us might have wondered why it should be so. It, however, is so in the wise economy of God.

Brethren and sisters, I feel in my soul continually to say, May God bless you every moment of your lives, My soul blesses this people, while at the same time it is wounded when they do wrong. — Why not live in peace with each other, and love the Lord our God with all our hearts? What hinders us from doing this? Why should we ever have another difficulty in our society? Why should there ever be another wrong word or feeling in our families? There is no necessity for any men or women to do wrong again all the days of their lives. Let us guard ourselves against our weaknessess, that we be not over-come with the adversary any more. — Let trials and temptations come; they will not hurt you if you retain the Spirit of the Lord in your bosoms, which makes Zion for you in your own heart. If you want to make Zion in your familes, and be happy in your homes, you must retain the Spirit of the Lord in your own hearts; and let it be the first and the last, the Alpha and Omega of your lives. Then you have Zion; and the little difficulties, losses, crosses, and changing scenes of this mortal life will not disturb the equanimity of your lives; but they will appear frivolous things; things of no moment. But if you calculate to cling to the world, and expect somebody else to make your heaven for you, if a woman expects her husband to make a heaven for her, you will never get a heaven.

Elders of Israel, if you wish to get a good name in this kingdom, you must live for it. If you wish to wield an influence in the midst of this people, you must order your lives and conduct, before God and the people, so as to gain it. No person can give another influence and power in this kingdom. Joseph Smith could not give it to me if he was now living, if I was not worthy of it, if I did not conduct myself in a manner to secure it. If we live to the glory of our Father in heaven, and with all our might try to build up Zion, and gather Israel, and fill the earth with the knowledge of God, influence is given to us, it is an honor bestowed upon us by the Lord, and our wisdom is increased daily. If you do not believe it, fetch on the wise men of the east, and of the west, of the north, the south, — the wise men of all nations, who are instructed in all the learning and wisdom of the world, and our native boys can instruct them in the mysteries of God's kingdom.

We have been trained in the old snag ship, that was made on purpose to clear snags out of every harbor it enters. Fetch on your wise men, and we will teach them wisdom, and the tongues of babes shall unfold knowledge to rulers. The path before us is straight, and plain to walk in. Let every man and woman purpose to be Latter-day Saints indeed, be of one heart, and their path through life will be easy. But if you are not one, you will have to travel the road in sorrow, your minds will be dark, and you will not know your own minds, nor have confidence in your God. But if you are of one heart and of one mind, the burden will be light, and the yoke will be easy upon your necks. If men undertake to wear the yoke of Christ, and have not the Spirit of Christ, it will gall them so that they will run to the gold mines, they will cast it off, they cannot endure it.

I trust we shall live to enjoy many Conferences together, before we are called hence to resume our work in another state. Brethren and sisters, inasmuch as it is my right and privilege, I bless every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ. My heart is full of blessings for every creature of God upon the face of His footstool. I wish no man evil, but my heart breathes blessings upon the whole human family; and as God gives me wisdom, I hope to measure it out in doing good to them, from this time henceforth and forever. This is all I desire to live for. May God bless you. Amen.

From the Deseret News.

TO THE SAINTS IN UTAH.

Upon leaving your former homes to gather to these valleys at the requirements of the Lord through his servants, where you could worship the God of Israel in accordance with his commandments, your hearts glowed with gratitude for your deliverance from the wickedness and oppression which pravail in the world, and you were fully persuaded that from and after your arrival here, you would devote all your time, energies, and means, in a manner every way becoming a Saint, for your salvation, and of the salvation of the human family to the uttermost.

These feelings were prompted by the Holy Spirit, and while under its immediate influence, had you been told how far you might stray, after settling in your new homes, you would have been moved upon to reply in the words Hazael, "But what! is thy servant a dog, that he should do this great thing?" Now, inasmuch as those good feelings oftentimes pass away, and many are induced to act widely different from what they anticipated, and some even go so far as to make ship-wreck of their faith, we deem it proper to publish a few remarks upon the spirit of man, the Spirit of the Lord, and the spirit of evil, and from time to time, upon these subjects the proper understanding of which may conduce to your temporal and spiritual welfare.

When starting on your journey, your faith was strong, your understandings clear, and you could discern between truth and error; but soon the adversary, taking advantage of the weaknesses of humannature, endeavored to induce you to become impatient, to find fault with the sayings and doings of your brethren, to neglect your prayers, and begin to doubt and become self-sufficient. This being accomplished, a person becomes disagreeable to himself, to his family if he has one, to his animals, for they have reason, and in short to all the true intelligences around him, and the travel over the dreary and monotonous plains becomes vexatious instead of pleasant, and a profitable lesson on the pages of probation is left unlearned, or in other words worse, for evil has usurped the place of good, and instead of an advance, the course is retrogade as there is no neutral point in conduct.

Upon arrival in our settlements, the high wrought expectations of such a person are doomed to still further disappointment; the whole surface of the country is at fault; his brethren do not step forward in mass to hail his arrival, and contribute of their industriously earned means to support and gratify his whims in doing nothing, or next to nothing, nor vacate their farms, and buildings and invite him to occupy without price, and he begins, like the inebriate who fancied all the city intoxicated but himself, to imagine that even the First Presidency are going wrong, and need the suggestions of his unerring wisdom to guide them in the path of duty, forgetting that they, like all others, are only amenable to their superiors.

It would be as reasonable to suppose that the feet were designed to direct the head, that evil is good, and good is evil, as to expect good thoughts, correct counsel, and corresponding action from the above described character, until he repents, and does his first works over. Still it often happens that instead of repenting, and bringing forth fruits meet therefor, such an one infects others within his influence, though never unless their minds are more or less ready to receive erroneous ideas.

Well, we are in the valleys of the mountains, with none but ourselves to oppose us in doing the will of the Lord; for, unless listened to, evil spirits have no power over ours to turn us from the pathway of righteousness, and still there is plenty of room for reformation, form the midst of all the lessons of the past, the time has not yet arrived when we can say we are one inall things, which time must come, and our wills mustbe perfectly subject to the wil of the Father ere we are privileged to enter upon the full fruition of all righteous desires.

You reply that these are old truths with which we are perfectly familiar, and the reply is correct; then why not live more closely in accordance with your knowledge, and day by day watch and chasten yourselves, casting aside temptations, overcoming evils, that unclean spirits may not find place in your tabernacles, that you may constantly grow in the knowledge of the truth, and that grace may be continually multiplied to you? The answer comes booming up on every side, — "the spirit is indeed willing but the flesh is weak," but omitting the command which immediately precedes it, viz: "watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation," Taking the question as a whole, it affords an excellent key to the plan, and economy of this probation, wherein we are made "subject to vanity," but not enjoined any duty which is out of our power to perform.

But instead of all walking uprightly, at all times, and under all circumstances, each pursuing his particular avocation with his face steadfastly set Zionward, one goes to his buildings, fields, or stock, and becomes so absorbed in their improvement, and increase, thathe forgets why he came here; that the hands upon the Public Works need food to sustain life that after all he is only a steward at most, and at length even forgets to thank the Giver of all he possesses; while another, still more culpable in that he produces nothing, strives to amass wealth, and build up a name by becoming a mere trader, and far too often a shaving trader, and of course he too is soon fully theimbued with the ruling passion of selfishness, and purpose for which he came here is almost, if not wholly lost sight of.

You can all easily extend this list by adding to it examples under your own observation, and readily within the scope of the weakest capacity. It is obvious that a deviation from the right line is not at first made ignorantly, that it is never hidden from the eyes of the just, and that no one is eventually deceived but the evil doer.

From these facts it appears strange upon reflection, that any person could be induced to do wrong, though at the same time it requires the most vigilant effort to do right, owing to human infirmity, operated upon by the spirit of evil; hence the human family require "line upon line, precept upon precept," that by practising thoroughly upon what they recieve they may go on from perfection to perfection, or in other words, each walk perfectly in his own sphere.

Inasmuch as the spirits of men have wisely been organized as diverse in power and peculiarites as their number, it is not expected, possible, or desirable, that the thoughts and actions of mankind berun in the same mould, but it is positively necessary for every one who wishes salvation undera celestial law, to abide that law. Any course short of this will deprive that person of a full salvation, for every one will be "rewarded according to the deeds done in the body," hence those who are striving to dwell with the just, must uniformly perform good deeds to the extent of their capacity, or they will suffer more or less loss. If this principle were always kept in mind, and acted up to agreeably to the dictates of the Spirit of the Lord, and the counsels of his servants, every saint would be dilligent in doing all the good in his power, and no one could be found retaining tithing in kind after it was due, nor commuting it without leave from the proper authority, nor even limiting his aid to the letter of the law as commonly understood, but each would be aware that every public improvement is a public benefit, and allow no limit to his public and private efforts, short of the utmost of his skill and ability, Then faith would increase in a powerful ratio; good works would abound, the kingdom would roll forth with greatly increased power, and darkness flee away.

Now will you all give strict heed to these remarks, which are written in all plainness, and solely with a view to your welfare? No, you will not—but many will and you will ever find it unable to quarrel with your neighbor for diferences of opinion, or for his course of conduct, but simply be concerned to always do right, and rest assured that each one the world over, will attain to precisely that amount of intelligence, happiness, and glory, or the reverse, which he has lived for.

This brings us again to observe that salvation is an individual work, and that so long as any person operates in a course which does not infringe upon the proper rights of others, his belief and conduct should not incur their violence, anger, or improper interference, for he is walking in his own sphere, enjoying the agency given him, and will reap the reward thereof, and all under interference will be charged to the account of whoever it thus interferes.

As these ideas are advanced for your reflection, and action, the council is made breif, that you may not overlook it, nor your minds be wearied, or confused while reading.

BRIGAM YOUNG,
HEBER C. KIMBALL.
JEDEDIAH M. GRANT,

SKETCH OF THE SOVEREIGNS OF EUROPE.

Nicholas, Emperor of Russia, is fifty-nine years old, six feet one inch high, erect and soldierlike in form, haughty in demeanor, proud of his person, and when young, was decidedly handsome. He is intelligent, shrewd, stern, resolute, and by no means wanting in personal courage. He is a good disciplinarian, but not a skillful commander in war, as was proved in his younger days. His information in regard to the condition and policy of all nations is minute and extensive, his plans vast, his ambition boundless. In the last respect he represents the Russian chracter and sentiment.

The same disposition prevails in Russia now to pour down on the more fair, and wealthy, and sunny realms of the south and west of Europe, as in the days when the Roman Empire was overwhelmed.

Frederick William, King of Prussia, is the brother-in-law of the Czar, but a very different kind of a man. He is about fifty years old, despotic in feelings, but somewhat liberal by compulsion. He would gladly join the Emperor of Russia in his plans if he dared; but his people are otherwise inclined. He is fat, a good-looking, tolerably good-natured, and somewhat stupid sort of man.

Should the present war continue for some years, he will probably be found on the side of Russia. His present declarations for neutrality is merely designed to gain time to watch the course of events for one campaign, and then shape his course according to results.

Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, is about twenty-three years old, and has succeeded in raising small mustachios fer his handsome face, and a small loan for his exhausted treasury. He has a high, broad forehead, a good form, about five feet ten inches in height, and is an expert and an excellent horseman. He exhibits no signs of extraordinary administrative capacity, and will probably add little to the reputation of the house of Hapsburg. He fell in love with a young lady, last fall, at first sight, and was recently married to her.

His government is almost bankrupt in pecuniary resources, his people are discontented, and his empire is exposed to desperate peril between the contending interests and nations now at war on the continent of Europe. He is greatly indebted to the Emperor of Russia, and would join him in the partition of Turkey, but for the dread of the vengeance of the western powers, and the opposition of his people. His position is perilous, turn which way he will, and neutrality is almost impossible.

Abdul Medjid, Sultan of Turkey, is but thirty-three years of age, though he has a daughter married and two more betrothed. He is rather small in stature, with a sallow, sad, and mild expression of countenance. He is in favor of reforms in his empire; is just and merciful in his rule, and delights more in superintending his schools and public improvements than in marshaling his armies and navies for battle; but forced into war for the existence of his empire, as he is, he will doubtless maintain the ancient reputation of his gallant and warlike race.

Thus far, in his difficulties with the Czar, he has shown a moral courage, a firmness and moderation, and an energy in preparing for war, that have enlisted on his side the sympathies of nearly all civilized nations. He has no wife. Sultans do not marry. He is evidently a sincere and zealous Mahomedan, though he has stipulated with the western powers that he will place the Greek and Christian population of his empire on the same footing as to civil righis as the Turks.

Louis Napoleon, Emperor of France, is rather below the middle stature; has a dull and drowsy eye, and a countenance that ordinarily expresses but little. He is about forty-four years of age, and has had an adventurous life. From an artillery officer in Switzerland, a rowdy in New York, a special police officer at London, and a prisoner at Ham, he is now firmly seated on the most dazzling throne of Europe, and wields a power second only to that of the Emperor of Russia.

Public opinion hac undergone a great change in regard to his mental capacity since he ascended the throne of France. He has manifested an ability of high order as a ruler and statesman, and, at this moment, exercises a greater influence over the affairs of Europe than any other sovereign, not even excepting the Emperor of Russia. And this influence he has wielded wisely for his own interests, and thus far, for the honor and interests of France. He enters on the conflict with his great antagonist of Russia with a dauntless spirit, and energy of preparation that shows much of the true metal of his uncle of 'glorious memory.'

Queen Victoria, of England, rules over the most populous, wealthy, and powerful empire on the globe. On her dominions the sun never sets; and under her government the people of England and Scotland at least, enjoy more freedom than under any other monarchy.

Queen Victoria is now thirty-five years age; of a mild and amiable disposition, and is an examplary wife and mother. But as a ruler, she exercises little real authority. Her Cabinet Councillors and Parliament are the actual rulers of the British Empire. The naval power of England is nearly as great as that of all other nations combined; and her commerce and manufactures greater than that of any other nation.

Oscar, King of Sweden, is now in the prime of life, and personally, is strongly inclined to side with the Czar in the present war. But his people, almost unanimously, are hostile towards Russia. An armed neutrality is his declared position, and to this position and its rights the Czar accedes.

The King of Denmark is under personal obligation to the Emperor of Russia, but is compelled by his position and the voice of his people, to adopt the policy of neutrality.

Christina, Queen of Spain, is fully occupied just now with the insurrectionary movements of her people, who are disgusted with her open profligacy, her disregard of the welfare of her subjects, and the arbitrary principles of her government. She is young, but her reign will probably be short.*

The King of Sardinia would be a liberal, if backed by any power that would enable him to contend with the myrmidons of Austria.

The King of Naples is an unmitigated tyrant, blood-thirsty, cruel, and resolved on maintaining the "divine right of kings;" and such is the temper of his subjects towards him, that he has a very fair chance of meeting a sudden and violent death. A few years ago he was an accomplished horseman and charioteer, and might be seen almost daily driving through the streets of Naples, with a frequent nod of recognition to his people. He is now seldom seen, except when surrounded by his guards. He is a Bourbon of the French family, and is friendly to Russia; but his influence among the European nations is of little account.

Otho, King of Greece, is a mere cipher, a tool in the hands of England and France.

Such are the principal sovereigns of Europe, at the commencement of a general war that is likely to prove one of the most sanguinary and momentous conflicts that has ever occurred on that continent, and that cannot fail to result, in the end, in many changes in its condition. What those changes may be, time alone can reveal; but there is little doubt that despotism will suffer more than the cause of freedom. The people will gain what the despots lose.—[Petersburgh Post.

* Since the above was written the sceptre has departed from her.—[EDITOR.

There is great truth in this ancient adage. The man who is kind in his family circle and tender of the feelings, and to the frailties of others, is invariably kind to his domestic animals. No one can be really considerate and affectionate by his fireside, and be imperious and barberous with his horses and cattle. The man who would senslessly over-burden his horses, and beat them for not performing an impossibility, would with just as much unconcern overtask the delicate frames of his children. He who unmercifuly beats his oxen, would apply the same lash to his wife when he is irritated, if he dared to do so. We would be restrained by no higher motive than the law's penalties No man can change his heart every day, between his dwelling and his stable. If his temper is ungovernable at the one place, it cannot be kept quietly subdued at the other. A whirlwind of passion begun at the stable, not unfrequently sweeps through the whole domestic establishment; sometimes leaving it a desolation. Violence begets violence. A fierce, vindicite disposition is a vitrol that eats into all that it touches, and leaves a sore at every spot. It is contagious. The child receives it legitimately from the parent, and the cow and the horse acquire it quite as easily.

Was ever a man of violence known to possess a quiet, gentle, obedient domestic animal? Are not all his cattle breechy, his horses balky, his cows addicted to kicking? Everything is awry with him, because he is at enmity with everything. Animals soon learn to fear such a man, but fear does not always produce obedience. They fear to be approached by him. They know not whether they are to recieve a kick, or a blow, but their experience has taught them that they are sure of one or the other. Why should they obey their master's will, when his rewards and punishments are paid in the same coin?

Have you not seen men who were dear to every domestic circle — whose very coming in at the door was a balm to the heart — whose benignant smile dispensed sweetness all around? Such a man's domestic animals are as gentle as himself, and obedient to his every wish. When he commands they recognize his authority. He treats them with the same firmness and kindness that he exercises with his household. He teaches them his wishes; and does not barberously beat them for not understanding what they have never been taught. He does not set before his children an example of ungovernable rage, for he knows that from this small mustard seed, may grow alienated friendships, divided houses and unhappy homes.

Kindness to animals is a duty as well as profitable. It engenders a benevolent feeling toward the animal kingdom. It inculcates humane principles upon the minds of the young, and what is of no little moment; it renders the animals themselves contented and happy. We are not of those who believe that they are only endowed with instinct. On the contrary, we believe that they are possessed of some rude reasoning powers, and they certainly are controlled by strong affections. They shun, or repel attacks from the one, whilst they court kindness from the other. Is it not our duty to encourage the development of goodness, whether of the human heart or among dumb beasts? And is it not much more our duty, to make their conditions whilst they bear our burthens as comfortable as possible?

Experience has shown that a violent man cannot properly train a horse, or a yoke of oxen. Violence only destroys; never creates. The training of animals requires patience, moderation and kindness. Many a valuable animal has been ruined by beating it for trivial reasons. We have known horses to be beaten because they accidentally stumbled. The result was that the next time they stumbled they feared not only a fall, but a punishment; and and in the effort to avoid both, broke the vehicle and upset the driver. Almost every house-keeper has, at some time or other, had a cow spoiled by the irritability of a milk-maid. By always speaking boisterously and harsh, all command over a cow is for all time lost, — she refuses to give down her milk — the udders become inflammed; and in the end the cow is ruined.

There is never anything gained by harshness to any animal, and there is much to be lost. Self-control is as necessary in the stock-yard, as in our intercouse with man, and is a virture anywhere. — [Iowa Farmer.

POLYGAMY IN UTAH.

The House of Representatives spent two whole days not long since, in debating that most amusing of modern bugaboos, the Polygamy of Utah.

A bill was pending providing for some surveys and grants of land to settlers in Utah, when the Mormon delegate, Mr. Bernhisel, a very dignified, estimable man, moved to strike out the proviso, that no land should be given to any man who had more than one wife. Mr. Bernhisel said, that such a proviso would be a hardship to many of his constituents, and that the more wives a man had, the more land he needed to support them.

But our moral and most orthodox Congress could not accept this sensible doctrine, and so there sprung up a long debate, in which some fifty members defined their position respecting polygamy. The Southern States' rights men took the ground that Congress had no business with domestic institutions, while legislators of the other extreme, were for crushing out the whole polygamic system, by the whole power of Congress. The abolitionists hinted hard at the polygamic relations of Southern gentlemen, with their concubines, while the South, haughty and indignant, repelled the insinuation.

A more ridiculous exhibition of affected morality, we have seen no report of. There were men denouncing polygamy who have been more polygamic than any Mormon, the difference being that the Mormon is more honest and above-board. The only difference that we can see between Mormons and other Christians of our acquaintance is, that the former do openly, and as a matter of conscience, what the others do secretly, and against their consciences. We cannot help thinking that a Mormon, who in good faith takes two or three wives, and maintains them, may be a better man than a good many other sort of Christians we know of, in Congress and out.

Everybody thinks Abraham, and Jacob, and the Patriarchs were good men. Why not the Mormons, who believe as they did? Would Congress punish Abraham? It is a curious thing to reflect upon, that had this man, chosen of God as the founder of a people, and ancestor of the Messiah, lived in Massachusetts, he would have been sent to State's prison.

Brigham Young, Governor of Utah, and husband of thirty-six wives, may be as good a man as the Patriarchs, whose example he professes to follow. He may not be as mighty as David, but he has not so many concubines. He may not be so wise as Solomon, neither has he so many wives. At a humble distance he follows in the footsteps of these gifted men of antiquity.

We think with the State's rights men, that Congress has no business with the domestic institutions of Utah, any more than with those of Turkey. We believe in individual rights and in individual sovereignty, and deny the right of any Congress, Legislature, Constitution, or Majority, any man or body of men, to interfere with so purely personal a matter as whom we love, or how many. There is no more right on the part of any body to interfere, than there is with our breakfast.

People are predicting that we shall have trouble about Utah. So we shall, and shall deserve to have it, if we meddle with what don't concern us. What possible business is it to any citizen of New York, how many wives some man has in the City of the Salt Lake?

To avoid all trouble, we have only to mind our own business. All the trouble will be of our own making. To refuse to admit Utah as a State, with polygamy, would be just as stupid as to refuse to make a treaty with any oriental nation on the same ground. Polygamy exists over three-fourths of the British empire. Polygamy exists, recognized or unrecognized by law, in the whole human race.

INCORRUPTIBLE RAILROAD TIMBER.—If we may believe the New Orleans Delta, of the 14th ult., sleepers on railways, that is, wooden ones, may rest undisturbed for a period as indefinite as the repose of the fossils. A preparation has been invented for the preservation of submerged timber, consisting of asphaltum, sulphur and arsenic. It is applied like a print, when the wood is dry. A marine railway in California, to which it was applied, remains perfectly sound, while timber of the same species by its side has twice required removal. Mr. Swann, of Shoal Water Bay, is the inventor.

It is common to speak of those whom a flirt has jilted, as her victims. This is a grave error. Her real victim is the man whom she accepts. This reminds us of a simile we saw somewhere: "A coquette is a rose from whom every lover plucks a leaf; the thorn remains for her future husband."

EMIGRATION OF THE EUROPEAN SAINTS.

IMPORTANT CHANGE.

For about fifteen years nearly all our emigration from Europe, destined for the western States, have been shipped from Liverpool via New Orleans, to this place. But the increasing mortality among the emigrants on that route for some years past, coupled with recent movements of the church in appointing gathering places in the east, has led the Presidency of the Church to change the tide of our emigration from New Orleans to the eastern cities.

The following is an abstract of Pres't B. Young's letter of instruction upon this subject, to Elder of F. D. Richards, President of the Church in Europe, and general emigrating agent at Liverpool:

You are aware of the sickness liable to assail our unacclimated brethren on the Mississippi river, hence I wish you to ship no more to New Orleans, but ship to Philadelphia, Boston, and New York, giving preference in the order named. Whenever you ship a company, whether it be small or large, be careful to forward to Elder John Taylor, at New York city, a correct list of the names of the persons in each company, with their occupation, and approximate amount of property or means, and forward it in season for Elder John Taylor to receive it before the company arrive in port, that he may be so advised as to be able to meet them, or appoint some proper person to do so, and counsel them immediately on landing as to the best course for each and all in every company to pursue—viz., whether to tarry for a season to work in the place or immediate neighborhood of their landing, or proceed to Cincinnati and its region, &c.

In case any should still choose to ship for New Orleans, ship them from England no later than about the 1st of December, that they may be able to get off the rivers before the sickly season sets in, for many have died off with the cholera and other diseases incident to the sickly season on the rivers, and I do not wish the brethren to be so exposed as they have been; and counsel them to hurry up the rivers, and get off from them into Missouri and Iowa to work, or on the plains, as the case may be, before the warm weather sets in.

Pursuant to these instructions, we learn from President Richards that he will send out to New Orleans two or three ship loads about this time, and about 450 Saints from Denmark, after which there will be a cessation until arrangements are completed for shipping to the eastern cities and for transporting our emigrants thence to Cincinnati, St. Louis, and the point of outfit for Utah.

We are now in communication with Pres't Richards upon this subject, and anticipate a commencement of emigration by that route as early as the first of February.

The appointment of Cincinnati, St. Louis, and other places in the States as places of gathering for the Saints, has imparted fresh vigor to thousands of European Saints, whose means are inadequate to an outfit for the plains, but who will now rush to these more accessable points in the States.

LATEST FROM UTAH.

On Wednesday evening, Nov. 22d, Mr. Howard Livingston, of the firm of Livingston, Kinkead & Co., arrived in this city from Salt Laks city, which place he left on the evening of the 6th Oct., with a small company of traders and returning Californians, and made the trip to the Missouri in forty days.

By this arrival we have news one week later than by last mail, and a copy of the Deseret News, of Nov. 5th, kindly furnished by Mr. Livingston, from which a few extracts will be found below.

When the party left Salt Lake the Indians were quiet.

Those transient merchants who expected to make a fortune out of the Mormons this year, find they have struck too high, and would now gladly close out at a small advance. Livingston, Kinkead & Co., and other permanent traders who are interested in the future prosperity of the Territory, are endeavoring to monopolize the domestic trade on a principle that will retain the money in circulation among the people. They therefore make all remittances this year in drafts on the government and other exchange.

The traders and merchant trains were all in except J. M. Horner & Co.'s last two trains, one of which was met as far back as Sweetwater.

The Mormon emigration were nearly all in.

He met Mr. Empy in Echo Canyon, but his company of P. E. Fund passengers were met one day west of Green river—teams in good condition.

Saw a party of Crow Indians at Devil's Gate, and about 20 lodges Arrappahoes at bridge on North Platt—appeared friendly.

All quiet at Laramie. Traders there anticipated a dull winter. Knew not where the Sioux were gone. Met Col. Hoffman's command of 100 men near crossing of South Platt.

Indians, supposed to be Cheyennes, were keeping up their depredations at Fort Kearney. A number of mules had just been stolen from the mail station at that place. Met the November mail at Little Blue.

The party kept a strict guard over their animals night and day, while encamped, which is the only safe mode of traveling through an Indian country.

It is understood that Col. Steptoe will, during his stay in Utah, make an effort to punish the Pavantees who murdered Capt. Gunnisen and his party.

Immigration.—On the 29th November, Captain James Brown and company with 42 wagons, on the 30th, Dr. Darwin Richardson and company with 40 wagons, and on the 1st of October, Elder Daniel Carn and company with 38 wagons, arrived in this city in good condition, and camped on Union Square.

The Church Train is now coming in.

Elder Robert Campbell, in the rear companies, writes to Govenor Young from Fort Kearney, Aug. 21, that their cattle are fat, the feed and roads good, and that Bro. Empy and the rear company were only a few days behind them. They were making good headway, and will doubtless be able to escape the inclement weather, as all are probably this side of the South Pass, and perhaps this side of Green river.

Eastern Mail.—The last Mail brought an unusual number of the latest dates from important points, being to August 7th from Liverpool, to the 26th from New York and Baltimore, to the 28th from St, Louis, and 30th from Independence.

As heretofore most of our illustrated papers, periodicals, and magazines are stopped somewhere short of this city, and if those who plunder them from the mail bags or post offices, will forward us their address, with their qualification before some judicial officer, that they are too poor to pay for the papers they steal, we will endeavor to supply them direct from the publisher, for we have endured this kind of treatment much longer than is pleasant or profitable.

Foundry.—A small foundry has been erected adjoining the blacksmith shop on Temple Block, and Bro. Morgan Phelps is casting cog wheels, cranks, &c., and is prepared to make iron, brass, and copper castings of any required pattern, and cheaper than they can be imported.

As the quantity of material on hand is small, the brethren are requested to bring pot metal, old brass, and copper to the Tithing Office, and encourage home manufacture, and be credited on their tithing for articles otherwise useless.

The bench of the U. S. District Court for Utah is again full, Judge Shaver continuing, and Judges Kinney and Stiles having arrived.

TO THE SAINTS IN ST. LOUIS.

Extract of Elder Snow's Remarks, on Sunday, 12th November.

* * * I hear occasionally of sickness in the different parts of the city amongst the brethren and sisters. As cold weather is approaching, we may reasonably expect that among the various classes that compose the Latter-day Saints in St. Louis and its vicinity, there will be from this time more or less among them requiring assistance, especially the sick. While we are willing as far as we are able, and our other duties will allow, to minister among the brethren, and especially the sick—to counsel, comfort, and assist them, yet we wish that every faithful man of God that bears the priesthood, especially the members of the High Council, the Bishop and his counsellors, and the Presidents of the wards to feel an interest in these things, and that it rest upon them in connection with us. I wish these, my brethren to bear this in mind, and to open their hearts, and inquire of the Lord to know his will and enjoy the mind of his spirit. And if they are not already feeling the spirit and power of their office, continue in prayer that they may have the spirit of God to be with them, and be apt to teach and ready to comfort and minister to those who stand in need, and succor those who are sick, and thereby the burden will be light on all of us; and many hearts will be gladdened by our labors. And I wish those who have charge of the different wards and branches particularly, to have an open ear all the time to the voice of the poor, and not allow those who may be sick or destitute to want for the means to warm and make them comfortable, that their cries go not up before God against those whose duty it is to attend to them.

It is not expected because we have appointed and set apart men to this office, that they will bear the whole burden—that they will do it all themselves. Those who have the charge of the different wards, and the visiting brethren who are acquainted with the Saints, should aid the Bishop, and in cases of need apply to him, and upon their recommendation the Bishop will render them such assistance as he can according to the means in his possession.

Soon we shall have a great many of our foreign emigration here, and some of them perhaps destitute. I wish, therefore, every man in Israel, particularly the Elders and visiting brethren, to consider themselves a vigilance committee, to keep their eyes and ears open, and learn of every opening and avenue by which they can throw employment into the hands of those who stand in need. And be prepared in every ward in the city to furnish, at any given moment, lists of vacant places, or where men may find employment in different situations, that we may be able to get our foreign brethren into work immediately on their arrival. Every one should think of this from this time forward, and soon we shall call upon you to bring in reports, and lend your aid in these things.

S. J. Lees, Reporter.

LATEST NEWS BY THE SANTA FE MAIL.

Gov. Merriweather has held a "talk" with the Utahs. There was near two hundred of them present, and only two bands out of the three present; the Capote band failed in their attendance. The conference was productive of much good feeling, and the Indians gave assurance of remaining at peace with the whites.

By this mail we learn that the inhabitants of Mesilla valley have acknowledged the jurisdiction of the States over them, and that they have also surrendered two or three fugitives.

Jesus Maria Baca, of the Democratic party, has been elected sheriff in Santa Fe county, to fill the vacancy of Lorenzo Labadi, appointed Indian Agent.

Railroads in the United States.—The total length of railroads completed and in use on the first of January, 1854, is estimated at 15,490 miles; and that in various stages of progress, and in the hands of engineers, at nearly 25,000 miles more, making in all a total of of some 40,000 miles constructed, or to be constructed within a few years.

Summary of Local Correspondence.

Elder H. W. Church writes from Hickman county, Tenn., Nov. 21, enclosing subscriptions for the Luminary, and states that he has baptized three persons, and has a prospect of baptizing several others soon. He and Elder Wiley B. Corbit, who is now with him, are expecting soon to direct their labors into the State of Alabama.

Elder S. M. Blair, under date of Port Sullivan, Texas, Nov. 8, says: "I received your circulars for the issuing of another bright Luminary in the constellations of Mormonism. My heart rejoiced at the prospect of a paper to be published in St. Louis by you. Long had I cogitated on such a plan for diffusing knowledge. I intend to send you at least twenty-five subscribers, and hope to make it fifty."

Elder James McGaw informs us that he arrived at his post in New Orleans, La., on the 18th of November. His address is Caledonia House, corner of Payder and Commerce streets.

Elder James Case was in Springfield, Ill., Nov. 29th, endeavoring to awaken to a newness of life the remnant of the Saints in that city. He expects soon to pursue his journey to Ohio. In reply to his inquries about the missing numbers of the Luminary, we would say to the Saints, the full complement of the first number were forwarded in one package, and if they were not forthcoming they must look to their postoffice for them.

Elder Thos. B. Pierce writes from Cedar Grove, Ind., Nov. 16, that there are many Saints scattered in that vicinity, some of whom are firm in the faith serving the Lord, while others are sickly, dying, or dead; but of these many are reviving, since his arrival among them. We would say to Elder Pierce that if anything will cause those sickly branches to bear fruit, it is transplanting them into another soil, even in Zion, or one of her stakes.

Elder Oscar Tyler writes under date of October, 30th, that he has been preaching along near the coast of Texas. Quite a call for our books, and inquiry among the people, but they are slow to obey the Gospel. He has had the pleasure of baptizing his mother and six other of his kin folks, and many of the neighbors are believing.

We learn from Elder Wm. Martindale, under date of October 31, that after long and tedious labors in Harrison county, Texas, where he had mountains of prejudice to overcome, he has finally begun to baptize, and hopes to reap the fruit of his labors.

Elder James Sly writes from Canboro, Canada West, Nov. 14, that upon his arrival in that country he met with a cold welcome, and had many hardships to contend with; and he had been compelled to minister to his wants by his own hand's labor; but through perseverance, and by the blessing of the Lord, he had got an opening among the people, and had baptized two, with a prospect of many more soon following.

From all quarters our correspondents hail the Luminary with joy. We wish them to use their utmost exertions to increase its circulation, and forward us all the means possible; (bills of any sound bank;) urging every friend of the cause to subscribe for as many papers as possible, that we may be enabled to meet the heavy expenses incurred by the Luminary in its infancy.

New Paper.—The World Advancing.

We find on our table the St. Louis Luminary, a new weekly, devoted to the exposition and defense of Mormonism or the church of the Latter-day Saints, edited by Erastus Snow. It is of respectable size and appearance so far as the mechanical part is concerned, and sent abroad at two dollars per annum. This paper will undertake to show that Mormonism is not so bad after all; that men may have a dozen wives and all be right, that diseases can be cured now as in the days of Christ—by the prayers of the "Saints" and the annointing of oil—and of course will demonstrate clear as a sunbeam, that no poor "Gentile" ought to refuse his cow, horse, or mule, or his corn or potatoes to be taken possession of, at any moment, by the "Saints," when the "Lord has need of them." In fine, we may expect the clouds and fogs of error and superstition which have so long hung over our unfortunate country, to be all dispelled by the effulgent light of this "Luminary."—Mo. Cumberland Presbyterian.

Thank you, brother Presbyterian; may your most sanguine expectations be realized; may the "fogs which have so long hung over you," disappear, and the "cows, horses, mules, corn and potatoes, come into the possession of the Saints." As to the right to a dozen wives, we leave that problem to you and the ladies themselves to work out; but experience will teach you that men of no more than ordinary capacities had better not strike so high, lest the "right" be made to yield to "might;" at least so we think.

THE MORMON.

In another column of to-day's paper will be found the prospectus of the "Mormon," a new weekly to be published in New York. The "Mormon" will be edited by Elder John Taylor, formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons," and "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo, subsequently of the "Etoile du Deseret," in the city of Paris, France, and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany. Elder Taylor has been so long and so favorably known to the Saints that we feel to promise a large subscription list, and warm support for the "Mormon" from that quarter.

We would say to merchants and mechanics, those that have articles to sell and those that have nothing to do but to read, that the "Mormon" offers facilities for the advertiser that few papers in the eastern States will have, owing to its extensive circulation among the immigration from the eastern States and from Europe; and to the reading public the Mormon will be a rich treat, being furnished with matter drawn from a clear and powerful mind, and such reading matter, too, as can be found in no other paper published in the eastern cities.

Subscriptions and advertisements for the Mormon received at this office, also by Alexander Dow, No. 133, Market street, between Fifth and Sixth.

There are forty establishments in the U. States engaged in the manufacture of locomotive engines. These shops, it is estimated, turn out in busy times, at least, 1,200 locomotives in a year. Above nine thousand hands are employed, whose wages are about $3,500,000 per annum. The iron consumed exceeds forty-five thousand tons annually. The value of the products of these works is full ten million dollars per annum.

KANSAS TERRITORY.

The Missouri Republican contains the proceedings and resolutions of a mass meeting of the settlers on Big Blue river, in Kansas territory, the chief objects of which appears to be, to impress the public with the idea that the valley of Kansas river is the natural route for the great Pacific railway, and a point on the Kansas near its confluence with Blue river, the proper place for the future capitol and commercial depot of the Territory, and that the immediate survey of her public lands, and that too, by her own citizens, and an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the navigation of the Kansas are objects of paramount importance.

The fifth resolve, which relates to the government of the Territory, we here insert, as it involves a principle relating to the government of Territories in general which we lightly touched upon last week:

Resolved, That the citizens of Kansas are not only capable of constitutional self-government, but that they are entitled to a preference in filling our posts of trust and honor, and that we protest against the common practice of appointing officers residing out of the Territory, as such practice is frequently attended with unnecessary delays, incorrect action growing out of indifference, and that it is at war with the grand idea of self-government.

The Kansas Herald, of Oct. 20th, has the following:

Excursion of the Governor.—Gov. Reeder, Attorney General Isacks, Judges Johnson and Elmore, Gen. Flenniken, Mr. Donaldson, Marshal, and Dr. Ray B. Scott, started for Fort Leavenworth on Wednesday evening last for an excursion through the Territory. They will go out on the north side of the Kansas as far as the Potawatamie agency, or perhaps to Fort Riley, and return on the south side of the river. They will remain out about two weeks, and make whatever exploration their time and opportunities will permit.

TO OUR COUNTRY FRIENDS.

We have sent the Luminary to some of our friends at a distance from whom we have, as yet, had no returns. If any such do not wish to become subscribers, they will please remail the paper to us, or inform us by letter. In the meantime we shall continue sending it at discretion.

We intend, for the benefit of our country subscribers, to publish a condensed statement of the St. Louis market each week.

Our publication day will in future be Saturday.

Correspondence of the Luminary.

FROM COUNCIL BLUFFS.

Bro. Snow—Yours, enclosing prospectus of the "St. Louis Luminary" has been received; and your requests to me shall be attended to as punctually as time and opportunity shall admit.

I received the intelligence, that you was to commence publishing in this country, with thankfulness. In addition, Elder Taylor had, while here, prospectuses printed for the "Mormon," to be soon issued, weekly, at the city of New York. Rumour has also reached us of a probability that Elder Orson Spencer will soon commence the issue of a paper at Cincinnati. Thus is coming to pass a sudden and unexpected order of things, which are calculated to gladden the hearts of the Saints, scattered through the States, who, through poverty, sickness, or other unavoidable hindrances, have been prevented from, ere this, rearing peaceful homes in the valleys of Utah. Yes, to have the counsels of the spirit, the words of life, the voice of warning and encouragement, heralded to their homes from week to week, will benefit them as vitally as a refreshing shower does the earth when parched by the summer solstice, causing vegetation to bloom afresh in its robes of beauty. There is need of much good being done, and no doubt much will be accomplished. The Press is a mighty engine for good or evil, and when enlisted in the cause of true religion, social reform, the liberties of our fellow man, the education of the masses, the freedom of speech and the right of free discussion—when it is directed by intelligent and virtuous minds for the good and ultimate salvation of our race, there is a power at work which will mark the age in which it exists with a favorable feature, destined to live for the reference of future generations.

Who can calculate the amount of good now being accomplished by the publication of the Deseret News, the Millenial Star, &c.—sending abroad their sermons of life and salvation to be read in all nations and by all people who will hear. What good has been done, in years that are passed, by the Evening and Morning Star, the Messenger and Advocate, the Elders' Journal, the Times and Seasons, and other periodicals, in connection with the Book of Mormon, now printed in many different languages, and read by nations far and near; as well as many other books and pamphlets which different Elders have scattered through the world, written by the spirit of truth and proclaiming the same great and glorious plan of salvation to the world. All the good cannot be calculated; but a new literature has sprung up with gems of new and sparkling truths—truths which have been hidden since the foundation of the world, and kept from the knowledge of all, save Christ, his apostles, and the inspired men and prophets, as they stood in their lot and place, from the beginning. And I, for one, say let the good work go on. Let the Press send forth its streams of light until its benign radiations light up the darkest portions of the globe, and every kindred, tongue and people, shall hear the glad tidings of salvation. And I hope your labors may be crowned with success, and that the Saints, and the well disposed of every class, will give you the support necessary to defray the expenses of your paper. In the meantime, I will try and keep your readers advised of the movements on this frontier, as often as anything shall transpire of public interest. Respectfully,

L. O. LITTLEFIELD.

In the Ste. Genevieve Circuit Court, last week Charles Pinckley was put on his trial for the murder of his wife in Ste. Genevieve county. The murder was proved to be a brutal and deliberate one; the jury found the defendant guilty, and he was sentenced to be hung on the 5th of January next. The prisoner wept very bitterly when the sentence was pronounced.

Bathing.—When a man takes a full morning bath, 9,000,000 mouths are open to thank him; for every pore of his skin has separate cause to be grateful for his daily ablution.

THE YOUNG MOTHER.

Behold that fair young mother! see how soft
And peacefully she smiles, as though her heart,
Reposing in the fullness of its love,
Found perfect rest. Upon her snowy breast
A smiling infant sleeps—her first born son,
Her virgin love's first dear embodiment.
Her husband sits beside, half-bending, half
Supported by her chair, o'er which his arm
Is thrown protectingly: with the proud joy
Possession gives, he feels they are his own,
And with fond admiration looks on both.
But now a deeper glance—a warmer love
From his soul rushes to his sparkling eyes,
Which rest with rapture on her lovely form:
When with most womanly and blameless art
She takes her infant's hand caressingly
And spreads its dimple beauty on her cheek,
Which now with deepest blushes is suffused.
But that sweet art to hide its burning glow
Is powerless, and then she quickly stoops
To press his placid forehead with her lips;
But all in vain, for now her trembling limbs
The soft confusion of her heart betrays,
Till overpowered by love, she's driven to hide
Her glowing face upon her husband's breast,
And on her ready lips she now receives
The burning pressure of his fervent kiss,
Forgetting all but the absorbing love
With which she'd trusted her young life to him.

THE WIFE.

"A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband; but she that maketh ashamed is as rottenness in his bones."—Prov. xii; 4, 5.

How rich the treasure, and how precious the possession of a good wife. Who can tell her price? The companion, the friend, the help-meat, the adviser, the consoler of the husband under all circumstances; one who, when all others forsake him in trouble, clings closer and closer to him, the more he is unfortunate. The rude elements, and ruder hearts of men may conspire against him, yet her frail form never leaves him, nor ever wearies in administering to his comfort. Care may make his cheeks wan, and sickness his knees feeble; adversity in business may blight his hopes, and trouble crush his spirits, but this will not crush her love. Even should his feet wander from the path of right and the world frown down upon him, how then does she show herself the guardian angel of his path? When he hesitates, how then does she labor to turn the current of his actions in the right direction. It is then that she reflects himself: his errors and faults are freely, but gently, referred to, as his vistues are softly mentioned, lest in the one he be despised; or in the other become vain; others may deride and flatter, but it is the real interests that the wife seeks. Her warnings are as the dew-drops of wisdom: they are as the anchor to his soul—sure and steadfast. A man who owns such a wife, will seldom go far astray. And is not she his counsellor? This does not imply on her part an officious meddling—arbitrary dictation in his affairs;—no: but a due and timely warning and faithful admonition of the wife.

O, how unspeakably happy is the man whose companion is such a wife. The countenance, the spirit, the hopes and conversation of that man is always cheerful—his business nearly always prosperous. He rests safe under that watchful care so peculiar to the wife and mother. There is an instinct about a woman, properly mated, deserving the name of inspiration. How few men would fall into error and ruin if they heeded the warning of a faithful wife. The wife's secret fervor, too, in prayer, is always beneficial. It sheds around him an influence so genial and refreshing, that it aids his virtues to shoot forth with the vigor and strength of manhood; to ripen the good that without her aid would have withered in the bud. Such a one, indeed, is a "crown to her husband."

On the contrary, a man has—yes, no wife, but a woman weded, who is a cross one; who cooks his meals scolding, and with the breath that should cool her broth, "blows him up," because, forsooth, he has been detained in businers ten minutes longer than he expected. One who continually growls at the smallness of her husband's income. She can't have this and that like so and so; whose great concern is about her dollish self; one who turns up her nose at the modest apparel of the prudent wife; one who sees no necessity in prayer—in religious duties; who thinks her husband ought to spend his whole time in business, and if he be unfortunate she cannot be bothered with his affairs; who, nevertheless, has time enough to manufacture and retail gossip, and meddle with the trouble of her neighbors. Such a one continually "maketh ashamed."

Is any man in possession of such a wife? We pity him from our very souls. We consider it his greatest misfortune; in fact, the misfortune of life—in Solomon's words, "Rottenness in his bones." Rather than such were our fate, we would say "Lord let thy servant depart in peace. We can only sigh in hope and pity him. But for such women there is no use in the kingdom of heaven. HOPE.

Considerable sums of money have been lost from time to time during the last few months, and for some two or three weeks past the suspicions of Mr. Holbrook, the general agent of the office, have rested upon James Fitzgibbons, one of the night clerks, as the probable thief. He has been watched for several nights, and sundry traps have been laid to catch him, and without any further success than a confirmation of their suspicions, until last night, or this morning rather, about 3 o'clock, he was detected by Mr. Holbrook in the act of appropriating two packages of money mailed at Newark, New Jersey, one directed to Bridgeport, Conn., and the other to Williamsburgh, Long Island, containing between three and four hundred dollars each. Mr. Holbrook did not disclose his observations to the rouge, but kept his eye upon him until he left the office, about five o'clock, to go home. As soon as he left the office and got into Liberty street, in the rear, Mr. Holbrook, in company with Mr. Brown, the head of the night clerks, went out and brought him back, with the money upon his person, to the office, where he remains at the time of our present writing.

We refrain from disclosing the means by which Mr. Holbrook was the unobserved observer of Fitzgibbons' operations, as he may have occasion to set his trap fore more offenders of the same sort; though we hope there are no more left in the office. Fitzgibbons is naturally suspected of having taken much of the money that has been missed from the office from time to time, and which has been the source of infinite complaint from the public, and of anxiety on the part of Mr. Fowler, the postmaster, and the honest assistants in his office.—[New York Post, 23d.

Foreign News.

FOREIGN NEWS—EUROPEAN WAR.

Since our last issue there have been three arrivals from Europe, and the war news intensely thrilling. We present to-day a brief summary of what reems to us the most important and reliable.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.

The royal mail ship, Canada, Capt. Stone, from Liverpool, 11th inst., reached her dock 20 minutes past 11 last night.

Sebastopol holds stoutly. The substance of the news is that the allies had met with an important check, and had not made much progress.

On the night of the 20th the enemy attempted to spike the French guns, but failed, and the Russians who entered the batteries were killed.

The total of the French loss from the 17th to the 28th of October was 500.

The Russians estimate the loss of the English cavalry at 500; 60 English prisoners were taken on the 26th October.

The Russian loss since the commencement of the siege is estimated at 12,000 men.

The English assert that Menchikoff hoisted the Hospital flag over his principal magazine, and that they fired a shell upon it and blew it up.

The blockade is ordered to be extended to all the Russian ports on the Black Sea and Azoff Sea.

On the 28th 5,000 men left Sebastapol and attacked the left wing of the British army, but were driven back; the Russians rallied and repeated the attack, but were again defeated with considerable loss.

A telegraphic dispatch from Marseilles says that in the action at Balaklava, on the 25th, 500 British infantry and 600 cavalry were annihilated. 1,000 men and 800 horses were killed in three hours.

The 17th Lancers were almost totally destroyed.

Arrival of the Baltic.

The Baltic left Liverpool at 2 o'clock P. M. of the 15th, and reached dock in New York on the morning of the 27th. She brings news of several successive and sanguinary battles.

The allies are almost overmatched, and the most urgent requests are sent for reinforcements. Fifty thousand French troops are to be instantly sent, and every available steamer is taken to transport the troops, including the steamers Europa, Alps, India, New York, and others.

On the 4th November there was a sanguinary engagement; on the 5th there was a terrible combat, including a sortie and general attack by Menschikoff; the battle lasted from daybreak till 4 o'clock in the afternoon; both sides claim the victory. The English took 100 prisoners—the Russians stormed several batteries and silenced the guns—the loss on the part of the allies about 5,000, Russians 8,000. The Czar's two sons were in the battle. The battle was resumed by the Russians the next day, the 6th; the result was unknown. The allies are preparing to storm before the Russians can recover their losses. A practicable breach had been effected.

On the 7th Russia notified that she will treat direct with Austria on the four points.

New York, Nov. 29.

There is nothing really late or important. A pause had ensued in field fighting before Sebastapol. The Russian and British dispatches both say that the siege is progressing regularly, and preparations are making for an assault. Both parties want reinforcements—the besiegers are worse than the besieged. The Russians begin to want amunition. The allies are reduced by battle and disease to 50,000 men, which caused much alarm. In England and France the utmost efforts are making to send reinforcemets. All the mail steamers are chartered. Winter is setting in severely. The weather is very stormy in the Black Sea. Two Turkish frigates were wrecked.

There will be no mail until the Pacific of 27th, the government having taken the Niagara off the Halifax route.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEMSHIP GEORGE LAW.

The following has been gleaned from the California papers to the 1st of November.

The rainey season, which set in this year unusually early, has shown the San Franciscans the great good of the many street improvements which have taken place during the last twelve months. Where but a year ago, in many of the leading streets, during the rainy season, there was only an unknown depth of mud, there is now a moderately clean and solid road of thick plank.

News from the interior, mention that the early rains have been prejudicial to some mining operations, while to others they are correspondingly favorable. There is no complaint from the miners generally as to any lack of prosperity.

The first whale-ship of the season—Alfred Tyler, arrived on the 27th ult., at Lahaina (Sandwich Islands) from the sea of Ochotsk. The Carrill arrived in this port on the 27th ult., being the first whaleship from the Arctic sea. The taxable property of the city is accertained to be, for the ensuing year, thirty-eight millions of dollars. Last year, it was about thirty millions.

Alexander Wells, associate Jude of the Supreme Court of California, died on the 29th, at his residence at San Jose.

FROM UMPQUA.

The Gazette of the 5th instant, has the following items:—

Much of the wheat in the valley was exosed to the recent rains, yet, it is stated, but little damage was done to it. In some few cases a want of proper attention may cause injury to the crops; otherwise they are good and full. It is selling at $1 50 to $2 per bushel.—Sales are slow.

We learn that the citizens of Coose Bay are making preparations to work their coal mines as soon as possible.

The British War Steamer Virago, and Frigate Pique arrived last Saturday afternoon, after a passage of six days from Vancouvers Island.

About 10 o'clock yesterday morning, the Frigate President, another armed vessel of the allied fleet on the Pacific, also arrived. As she entered harbor at Saucelite, salutes were fired by her and acknowleged.

The Plover, one of H. B. M.'s ships sent search in of Sir John Franklin, also arrived at this port last week.

Gold is being discovered on the East Fork of the Lewis River, and several miners are prospectig them, so says the Origonian.

It is said a treaty is in progress, or at least in expectancy, between the Government of the U. States and the King of the Sandich Islands, for the annexation of those Islands; but efforts were being made to speechafy the King out of the notion of annexation, by the British Consul, Gen. Miller, who delivered a speech that occupied one and a half hours, which is entirely to long for our columns.

"I have heard what you said to me, in the name of your Government. I am not sure that I have clearly understood it all; but I shall consider it so far as I may be able to recollect it. I would prefer that on all matters which relates to my Sovereignty, in which my chiefs and people have a deep interest, communications should be made in writing, so as to prevent misunderstandings and mistakes either by me or them."

A British Squadron consisting of the Amphytrite, Rattlesnake and Trincomalee, three of the largest English vessels of war in the Pacific have been ordered to Honolula. It remains to be seen whether anything will come of these formidable manifestations.—[San Francisco Herald, Nov. 1st.

HOW TO TRAIN OXEN.

Steers should be broken to the yoke whilst young, say nine or ten months old. When first yoked, let them run in the yoke in a yard or small lot two or three hours every day, until they become habituated to the yoke, and to being yoked; if they turn the yoke, which is generally the case, tie their tails together, which will soon break them of this habit. They should be yoked up several times through the summer and fall. After they are a year old, and practiced in all the evolutions you would wish performed by oxen, the succeeding winter they should be yoked once or twice a week, and put to drawing light loads. The third winter they should become thoroughly broken in, so that they understand the word and obey it.

In selecting steers for the yoke, judgment and skill are necessary; in temper, motion, build, and size, they should be alike; docility, mild temper, rather quick motion, a tight and heavy build, and large size, are the desirable qualities of a work ox. If the opposite of any of these qualities are found in a steer selected for the yoke, dismiss him at once.

The task of breaking steers is commonly, but often improperly, assigned to the boys. It requires not only much skill and some science, but a great deal more patience than is allotted to boys in general, and to too few men. Steers, when under the tutorage of the teamsters, should never be struck a hard blow—should never be treated harshly, either by word or action; but the reverse. They should never be permitted to get away and run from the driver; but should this occur, let him be in no hurry to catch them; and when caught, treat them with the utmost gentleness, as though nothing wrong had transpired. They should never be hitched to a load they cannot draw easily—never should be "stalled"—never hurried when manifesting impatience and disinclination to go ahead, but caressed till their "pet" subsides. When unyoked, it should be at the time they are calm, and appear inclined to do the behests of their master. They should not be put to constant hard labor before the age of six or seven years, when, if well cared for, they can perform as many days' work in a year as a man, without injury, and continue to do so until from fourteen to twenty years old.—[E. Rowel, of Athens Co., Ohio, in Patent Office Report.

DENMARK.

Whilst journalists in Europe seem to think popular commotions there for the present at an end, a new move is taking place there in a new quarter. The people of Denmark and their king are this moment in a "difficulty."

The address presented by Folkethinget, of Denmark, to the King, adopted by a majority of ninety to one, brings the contest between the court and the nation to a precise issue, and clearly defines the position of the Danes as opposed to the subversive projects of their monarch. The objects which the King has in view are two-fold; one is to consolidate all his dominions under a single constitution; the other, in that new constitution to augment the power of the crown, and neutralize, if not destroy, the power of the people and their representative body, by "electing" members through crown nomination. Other parts of the royal arrangement would also have the collateral effect of bringing the Russian family so near to the Danish succession, that a reversion of the Danish crown is far from impossible. The Danish representatives only touch the last point allusively, intimating their determination to preserve their monarchy. On the first point—consolidation—they differ from their King no more than they did in 1848; little respecting Holstein and Schleswig feeling, they agree to the consolidation. But they declare that no Danish Diet can renounce the legislative power reposed in itself, abandon a real representation of the people, or admit the element proposed by the crown. The public debates have been characterized by plain language. The address reminds the King of the "dangerous times" in which he is dividing himself from his people, and in respectful language he is warned to take care for his own sake.—[Intelligencer.

ANOTHER HORRID MURDER.

Conductor Norris, of the Pacific Railroad, gave us, Tuesday afternoon, too late for our evening's issue, the particulars of another terrible murder of a wife by her husband, which exceeds in atrocity, the one perpetrated in Shiawassee county. Through inadvertence it did not appear in yesterday's issue. The murderer's name is Foster, and the family lived in Rose, Oakland county, about twenty miles from Pontiac. Foster had been absent in California two years, and had recently returned. He was not a great favorite in the neighborhood, and certain persons maliciously poisoned his mind relative to the conduct of his wife during his absence—a woman generally esteemed and above all reproach. This was done till the husband became maddened and blinded by his jealousy. Monday morning Foster accused his wife of infidelity to him, and proceeded to threaten her safety and life. Terrified at his menaces, she fled from the house for the house of a neighbor. He pursued her with a large bowie-knife, and, seizing her, struck a downward blow which entered just below the breast, and went into the abdomen, inflicting a most frightful wound and killing her instantly. He then surrendered himself to the authorities and was taken to Pontiac, where he lies in jail awaiting trial. This is horrid to contemplate! This makes four murders in this State within the short period of two months!—[Detroit Advertiser.

WALKING ON RED-HOT IRON PLATES.—Prof. Pepper recently delivered a lecture in the Polytechnic Institute, London, before a large audience of mechanics, in which he remarked that the setting of the Thames on fire was no longer a joke, but a reality. By dashing a small bottle of sulphuric ether with a few particles of metal potassium into a flat cistern, a bright flame was produced, which illuminated the whole place. He then laid down four plates of red-hot iron on four bricks, and one of his attendants walked over them barefoot, without any injury. By wetting his fingers in ammonia, the Professor dipped them into a crucible of melted lead, and let the metal run off in the shape of bullets into a shallow cistern of water.—[Wilmington Commercial.

The Washington Star of the 27th November says that it is believed in the London and Paris diplomatic circles, that Soule will not again be received at the Court of Madrid. Mr. Rice, the Secretary of U. S. Legation at Paris, has arrived, and brings important dispatches with him from Buchanan, Mason, and Soule. He has been closited with the Secretary of State and Secretary of War.

THE MICROSCOPE.

This instrument which discovers to us small objects invisible to the naked eye, was invented soon after the invention and improvement of the telescope. By means of this optical contrivance, we perceive a variety of wonders in almost every object in the animal, the vegetable, and the mineral kingdoms. We perceive that every particle of matter, however minute, has a determinate form; that the very scales on the haddock are all beautifully interwoven and variegated, like pieces of net-work, which no art can imitate—that the points of the prickles of vegetables, though magnified a thousand times, appear as sharp and well-polished as to the naked eye — that every particle of the dust of the butterfly's wing is a beautiful and regular organized feather—that every hair of our head is a hollow tube, with bulbs and roots, furnished with a variety of threads and filaments—and that the pores of our skin, through which the sweat and perspiration flow, are so numerous and minute, that a grain of sand would cover a hundred and twenty-five thousand of them. We perceive animated beings in certain liquids, so small that fifty thousand of them would not equal the size of a mite; and yet each of these creatures are furnished with a mouth, eyes, stomach, blood-vessels, and other organs for the performance of animal functions. In a stagnant pool, which is covered with a greenish scum during the summer months, every drop of water is found to be a world teeming with thousands of inhabitants. The mouldy substance which usually adheres to damp bodies, exhibits a forest of trees and plants, where the branches, leaves and fruit can be plainly distinguished. In a word, by this admirable instrument we behold the same Almighty hand which rounded the spacious globe on which we live, and the huge masses of the planetary orbs, and directs them in their rapid motions, through the sky—employed at the same moment, in rounding and polishing ten thousand minute transparent globes in the eye of the fly; and boring and arranging veins and arteries, and forming and clasping joints and claws for the movement of a mite! We thus learn the admirable and astonishing effects of the wisdom of God, and that the Divine care and benevolence are as much displayed in the construction of the smallest insect, as in the elephant or whale, or in those ponderous globes which roll around us in the sky. These and thousands of other views which the microscope exhibits, would never have been disylayed to the human mind, had they not been opened up by this admirable invention.

When thy amazing work, O God,
My mental eye surveys,
Transported with the view, I'm lost
In wonder, love, and praise.

DR. T. DICK.

Matrimony—Disparity of Sex.

The census tables disclose one fact of melancholy importance, which at present has not sufficiently engaged the attention of our social philosophers. They show that, in the largest cities of the Union, the females out-number the males in the ratio of ten per cent.; so that, if every man were compelled by law to take unto himself a wife, a vast number of the fair sex would still be doomed to the torturing 'hope deferred' of old maidenhood! If one dare apply figures to exhibit the result of this unfortunate disparity, what alarming conclusions would they bring us to! Of every two thousand inhabitants, one hundred must perforce be old maids. In a city containing a million, as New York will speedily do, every adult generation—say every twenty years—will cast upon society sixty thousand victims to female celibacy; so that persons now living may yet see one hundred thousand, or more, unmarriageable ladies in the city of Gotham!—at which period, we should say, it will be an exceeding ticklish place to live in.

But, alas for the ladies! inequality of number is not the only calamity they have to contend against. There is no legal compulsion for every man to marry. In this free republic, each man may exercise a sultanic despotism over his own affections, and, in the matter of matrimony, consult only his own inclinations. The natural consequences is a growing propensity to batchelorhood, which will probably entail the forlorn doom of the perpetual sisterhood on another ten per cent. of female citizens. We leave it to statisticans, curious in such themes, to detail the moral and social results inevitable in a condition of female superfluity, contenting ourselves with suggesting, that while such a melancholy state of things exists, no man has a right to remain a bachelor, and ought, at any rate, to be taxed for the luxury.

But the remedy!—who can propose an efficient one? The same enormous disparity does not exist in the rural districts, though even there the female population is the most numerous, generally; but still, if proper attractions were offered, and institutions to facilitate matrimony were established by enterprising adepts in the science, bucolic bachelors might seek their wives among the thousands of despairing city dames; some relief would then be afforded, but the evil, though lessened, would still remain. We can concieve of no positive cure but the emigration of the unmarried female 'element' to Utah, or the establishment of the 'peculiar institution' of the Mormons among us. He would be a bold man who would propose this last remedy, but our private opinion is that his proposition would not lack support.—[N. Y. Sunday Mercury.

GOOD ADVICE TO YOUNG WOMEN.

Trust not to uncertain riches, but prepare yourself for every emergency in life. Learn to work, and not be dependent upon servants to make your bread, sweep your floors, and darn your own stockings. Above all things, do not esteem too lightly those honorable young men who sustain themselves and their aged parents by the work of their own hands, while you care for and receive into your company those lazy popinjays who never lift a finger to help themselves, so long as they can keep body and soul together, and get sufficient to live in fashion. If you are wise you will look at this subject as we do, and when you are old enough to become wives, you will prefer the honest mechanic, with not a cent to commence life, to the fashionable loafer, with a capital of ten thousand dollars.

Whenever we hear remarked, "such a lady has married a fortune," we always tremble for her prosperity. Riches left to children by wealthy parents, often turn out a curse instead of a blessing. Young women, remember this, and instead of sounding the purse of your lover and examining the cut of the coat, look into their habits and hearts. Mark if they have trades and can depend upon themselves; see if they have minds which will lead them to look above a butterfly existence. Talk not of the beautiful white-skinned, soft, delicate, hand—the splendid form and the fine appearance of the young gentleman. Let not those foolish considerations throng your thoughts.

DEFALCATION IN THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE BANK---PAYING TELLER ABSCONDED.—We have received the following statement from the Directors of the American Exchange Bank: After a careful examination of the accounts of Mr. Candee, the first teller, since the evening of the 20th inst., they find a deficiency in his cash of $138,500 in consequence of having certified checks for irresponsible parties.

To protect the Bank from loss, Mr. Candee has placed securities in their hands, consisting of bonds, mortgages, and other property, to the amount of $161,977 at their cost value. The Bank further holds bonds of $20,000 from his sureties, and in the judgement of the officers, the ultimate loss, if any, will be trifling.—[N. Y. Evening Post, Nov. 28d.

WHY EPIDEMICS RAGE AT NIGHT.

It was in one night that four thousand persons perished of the plague in London. It was by night that the army of Sennacharib was destroyed. Both in England and on the Continent a large portion of cholera cases, in its several forms, have been observed to have occurred between one and two o'clock in the morning. The danger of exposure to the night air has been a theme of physicians from time immemorable; but is remarkable that they never yet called in the aid of chemistry to account for the fact.

It is at night that the stratum of air nearest the ground must always be the most charged with the particles of animalized matter given out from the skin, and deleterious gases, such as carbonic acid gas—the product of respiration—and sulphureted hydrogen—the product of the sewers. In the day, gases, and various substances of all kinds, rise in the air by the rarefaction of the heat. At night, when the rarefaction leaves, they fall by an increase of gravity, if perfectly mixed with the atmosphere; while the gases involved during the night, instead of ascending, remain at nearly the same level. It is known that carbonic acid gas at a low temperature partakes so nearly of the nature of a fluid that it may be poured out of one vessel into another. It rises at the temperature at which it is exhaled from the lungs, but its tendency is towards the floor or the bed of the sleeper in cold and unventilated rooms.

At Hamburg, the alarm of cholera at night in some parts of the city was so great, that many refused to go to bed, lest they should be attacked unawares in their sleep. Sitting up, they probably kept their stoves or open fires burning for the sake of warmth and that warmth gives the expansion to any deleterious gases present, which would best promote their escape and promote their dilution in the atmosphere. The means of safety were then unconsciously assured. At Sierra Leone the natives have a practice, in the sickly season, of keeping fires constantly burning in their huts at night, assigning that the fires keep away the evil spirits, to which, in their ignorance, they attribute the fever and ague. Latterly, Europeans have begun to adopt the same practice, and those who have tried it assert that they have now entire immunity from the tropical fevers to which they were formerly subjected.

In the epidemics of the middle ages, fires used to be lighted in the streets for the purification of the air, and in the plague of London in 1685, fires in the streets were at one time kept burning incessantly, till extinguished by a violent storm of rain. Latterly, trains of gunpowder have been fired, and cannons discharged for the same object, but it is obvious that these measures, although sound in principle, must necessarily, out of doors, be on too small a scale, as measured against an ocean of atmospheric air, to produce any sensible effect. Within doors, however, the case is different. It is quite possible to heat a room sufficiently to produce a rarefaction and consequent dilution of any malignant gases it may contain, and it is, of course, the air of the room, and that alone, at night, which comes in contact with the lungs of the person.—[Westminster Review.

WHO ARE YOUR ARISTOCRATS?—Twenty years ago, this one made candles, that one sold butter and cheese, another butchered, and a fourth carried on a distillery, and another was a contractor on canals, others were merchants and mechanics. They are acquainted with both ends of society, as their children will be after them, though it will not do to say so out loud! For often you shall see these toiling worms hatch butterflies, and they live about a year. Death brings a division of property, and brings new financiers; the old gent is discharged, the young gent takes his revenues and begins to travel — towards poverty, which he reaches before death, or his children do, if he does not. So that, in fact, though there is a sort of monied race, it is not hereditary, it is accessible to all; three good seasons of cotton will send a generation of men up — a score of years will bring them down and send their children to labor. The father grubs and grows rich, his children strut and use the money. Their children in turn inherit the pride, and go to shiftless poverty; next their children re-invigorated by fresh plebian blood, and by the smell of the clod, come up again.

Thus society like a tree, gets its sap from the earth, changes in its leaves and blossoms, speeads them abroad in great glory, sheds off to fall back to the earth, again to mingle with the soil, and at length re-appears in a new dress and fresh garniture.

GOVERNORSHIP OF NEBRASKA.—A special dispatch to the New Nork Tribune, dated Washington Nov. 5, states that Mr. HALL of Missouri, Declines the Governorship of Nebraska, and that the vacancy caused by the death of Gov. BURT will not be filled for some months. In the meantime the Secretary, T. B. CANNING, will be the acting Governor. The dispatch further states:

The arrival of Capt. Gibson yesterday, caused much commotion in this city, it being supposed his visit is in some way connected with a forthcoming letter, threatened by Mr. Belmont, relative to his case. The Captain brought a valuable collection of Oriental works, valued at $1.000, forwarded by Mr. Vattemare to the State Department. It is thought Capt. Gibson has some important disclosures to make, relative to the late Ministerial Conforence at Ostend. The important documents, which so providentially fell into his hands, will be delivered up to the State Department. Capt. G. had an interview with Secretary Marcy yesterday.

MAIL ROBBER'S CONFESSION.—Byron, alias Mc Donald, who claimed to be a natural son of Lord Byron, and who was recently convicted of throwing the cars off the track of the Michigan Southern and Northern Indiana Railroad, with the intention of robbing the mail, and who was for this offence sentenced to the Michigan penitentiary for life, has since his imprisonment made disclosures and confessions that he and Napier, his companion in crime, robbed the mail on the Michigan Southern Railroad at the time of its collision with the Michigan Central Railroad, some fifteen months since, at the intersecting point of the two roads. He states that, in order to reach the mail, he crawled over the dead and wounded. Napier has escaped and fled to England.

REMARKABLE INCIDENT.

A New York letter mentions the following extraordinary incident in connection with the loss of the Arctic:

A young gentleman lately residing in this city, fell through a hatchway in his father's store some time last summer, and was severely injured, one side of his body becoming completely paralyzed, and after a while he entirely lost the faculty of speech. In this position he remained until the 27th ult., (about the time of the accident to the Arctic, on board which steamer it was known that the young man's father was a passenger,) when he suddenly started up in his sleep, and exclaimed, to the surprise of all present, "My father is drowning!" fell back upon his pillow and died. It was the first time he had spoken for months: it was the last forever.

The young man referred to was a son of Mr. G. G. Smith, of New York, who was lost in the Arctic.

A WHALE ON THE JERSEY COAST.—A very large whale was cruising off Cape Island, within a quarter of a mile of shore, on the 21st of November, but no effort was made to capture it for want of the proper implements.

WONDERFUL ANTI-DILUVIAN MONSTER.

We learn from the Mount Vernon Jeffersonian the particulars of a wonderful discovery, which was made in Marion county a short time since. It seems that while some men were digging a pit for a bridge over a little stream called Lost Creek, on section No. 120 of the railroad, when about six feet below the surface they came upon the skeleton of what they supposed was some ante-diluvian monster. The principal bones were so much decayed that little could be told as to their proper locations in the body. A horn was found of a white color, nine feet in length, and quite smooth, with the exception of about three feet of the butt end, which was surrounded with ridges similar to those on a sheep, measuring twenty-four inches in circumference; the hollow being about four inches in diameter. The horn was so much decayed as not to allow lifting without being broken. A tooth was also found, and a portion of it outside of the gum was yet sound, and on measuring it was found to be five inches in length, and about two inches in diameter, having the appearance of having been the first jaw tooth. Another portion of the bone was found which was thought to be a portion of the jaw, but was broken to pieces in digging it out; but its dimensions were taken, and found to be eleven feet. The remains are now in the possession of Mr. Howell, who resides at the crossing of the railroad. To naturalists and antiquarians they must be invaluable, and should be exhumed and secured immediately.

DISCOVERY OF AN ANCIENT MINE.

An old mine has recently been discovered on the farm of John L. Neely, in Solebury township, about two miles and a half from New Hope, on the Delaware river, in Bucks county, Penn. There has been some traditions handed down by the Indians with reference to the existence of a mine in the neighborhood, but very little credit was attached to them. The mine was discovered accidentally, while exploring a rabbit's hole. Who worked the mine is not known. It must have been opened a long time ago, as on what is now supposed to be soil thrown up in making the excavation, trees are now growing which are thought to be two hundred years old. The Indian tradition said persons who worked the mine carried the ore to the Delaware in the night, and shipped it. A large stone had been placed at the mouth of the drift which has been so opened, and the dirt carefully filled in so as to effectually conceal it for this long period of time. The drift is excavated on solid rock. There are no signs of metal in the drift except what were picked up in the delves, and an occasional indication of copper on the sides.

The drift extends into the side of the mountain about sixty feet, where it crosses a chamber fifteen feet square, and eight or ten feet high, with a pillar in the center, hewn out of the solid rock. At the foot of this pillar descends another shaft which is now called a well, from the fact that it is filled with water of icy coldness. A stone carefully dropped in this can be heard to strike the bottom in an interval of fifteen seconds. Black snakes eight feet long, and bats innumerable, were the only inhabitants of the drift. To the right of this chamber an oblique shaft, about ten feet wide and from thirty to forty feet high, which opens at the spot before described farther up the hill, and at the foot of which is built a stone wall or cribbage, evidently designed to protect the miners from dirt or stone falling through the shaft. Passing through the chamber before referred to, the drift extends fifteen or twenty feet farther towards the river, and terminates abruptly in solid rock.—[Cincinnati Gazette.

THE MISSISSIPPI BRIDGE.—The great bridge across the river at this city, is rapidly progressing. The two piers nearest the shore, are almost completed and the coffer dam for the third is finished. Six are required to cross the main channel including the draw pier. The others it is thought by the coutractor, will be completed during the winter, so as to be ready for the superstructure early in the spring. We learn that a strong force is at work beyond the island filling up from the Illinois shore to the first abutmet in the stream. Every indication favors the early completion of the work, and every inducement will be offered the contractor, as until it is finished we doubt if much labor will be expended on the Road westward.—[Davenport Gazette.

Mrs. Partington, on being asked respecting a pair of twins with which she was said to have been recently blessed, replied that if such was the fact, it needn't be wondered at, for she belongd to a very growing family, and, though none of 'em had had twins, yet several of them had come within one of it. —[Boston Post.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

Is the name of a weekly journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Deseret," in the city of Paris, France, and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interest of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and will be the advocate of its claims—social, moral, political and religious; and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter-day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, and pursue such a course as to him may seem best, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondence in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make the MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints, but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germary.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the east instead of the south, and as the MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon-makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route, as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the east.

A list of the prices of staple articles of several of the eastern and western cities will be inserted, as well as the prices current of Utah and California.

THERE'S A BOW IN THE CLOUD.

Children of earth, who in darkness and sorrow
Are pining the last of existence away,
Without e'en a flower for the tomb of to-morrow,
Or blessings to cheer you while yet it is day,
Oh, steadfastly turn to yon beautiful heaven,
Where stars round the throne of the Deity crowd,
And learn, that though trial and anguish are given,
For those who will trust there's a bow in the cloud.

The fond and the faithful, in death are they sleeping,
Do cherished ones leave you, and friendships decay,
Are the waves of adversity over you sweeping,
And the dew-drops of hope all dissolving away?
Too often the heart-breaking pang of affliction
Subdues e'en the spirit most prone to be proud;
Yet why should it stifle the rooted conviction—
Which tells us there still is a bow in the cloud.

Whatever the evils in life that betid you,
The thunder may roll, and the tempest may rave,
There's a power in all seasons to govern and guide you,
A hand to protect, and an ark that can save!
No matter the country, the clime, or the feature,
In palace exalted, or slavery bow'd,
The glory of God, and the joy of the creature,
Is, when at the worst, there's a bow in the cloud.

DREAMS.

Oh! there is a dream of early youth,
And it never comes again:
'Tis a vision of light, and life, and truth,
That flits across the brain,
And love is the theme of that early dream,
So wild, so warm, so new,
That in all our after years I deem
That early dream were true.

Oh! there is a dream of maturer years,
More turbulent by far:
'Tis a vision of blood, and of woman's tears,
For the theme of that dream is war:
And we toil in the field of danger and death,
And shout in the battle array,
Till we find that theme in a bodiless breath,
Which vanishes away.

Oh! there is a dream of hoary age,
'Tis a vision of gold in store—
Of sums noted down on the figured page,
To be counted o'er and o'er:
And we fondly trust in our glittering dust,
As a refuge from grief and pain,
Till our limbs are laid on the last dark bed,
Where the wealth of the world is vain.

In the path which all are treading?
Is there nought in that long career to save
From remorse and self-upbraiding?
Oh, yes! there's a dream so pure, so bright,
That the being to whom it is given,
Hath bathed in a sea of living light,—
And the theme of that dream is heaven.

Present Financial Aspects of the United States.

The year 1853 closed upon a period of private and public prosperity in the United States entirely without a parallel in our history. The Treasurer of the Federal Government held thirty million dollars surplus in his hands, and was offering holders of government stocks redeemable in fifteen years twenty-two dollars for every hundred they would allow him to pay. But even at this enormous premium the sum swelled on his hands from the public revenues faster than it could be expended, while the regular expenses of the government had been doubled within fifteen years. The tariff of 1846 was considered a triumph of the friends of Free Trade, for it was the first radical encroachment our legislature had ever made upon the now exploded policy of protection. The results of that tariff were all and more than any of its friends had predicted; even Clay and Webster warned them against an impoverished treasury and a crippled commerce; and yet, with a great reduction of duties and a large extension of articles on the free list, the revenue had gradually increased, until the customs gave us a surplus of one quarter above the public expenditure.

Then came the regret that the reform had not been carried further when the change was made; while the demand and the hope was all but universal that further reductions should be made, and the free list still further extended. The growth of the revenue was not only a source of embarrassment to the government, but, as all the duties are collected in gold or silver, the specie basis of our credit system was narrowed, by burying thirty millions in the coffers of the State.

The finances of the separate States of the Union were in a better condition than they had ever been; and, with the exception of Florida, Arkansas, and, perhaps, one other State, their credit stood high. The interest upon their debts was promptly paid—sinking funds were gradually extinguishing the principal, and even the Supreme Court of Mississippi had recognized the validity and authorized the enforcement of the payment of that State's repudiated bonds.

There had been wide and almost unprecedented abundance in all the products of the soil, especially in the leading staples for export. The prices of breadstuffs and produce had been everywhere sustained. The manufactures of the country, in almost every department, were flourishing. Most of the great lines of railways had been completed, and the entire railway system of the United States was yielding a handsome return to the holders of stocks and bonds. Commercial credit was everywhere sustained. Large preparations were made for an increase of business in every department, at home and abroad. The banks of the country were most of them known to be in a sound condition. American securities stood well abroad, and the whole country, in the midst of its florid prosperity, looked across the Atlantic with a feeling of pity for Europe and congratulation for itself, that we were exempt from those terrible evils that had hitherto overwhelmed the nations, in the midst of general wars.

Such was the state of the country six or eight months ago. What is it now? The United States has been visited by an unbroken series of public and private calamities, such as we have scarcely ever witnessed. Beginning in the winter of 1853–4, we had, in quick succession, the destruction of the largest printing establishment, the largest clipper-ship, and the finest hotel in the world. Destructive conflagrations visited most of our other large towns. Our coasts were strewn with wrecks. Our steamers were either burned or disabled at sea. Our clipper ships, nearly all of them, came home in a leaky condition; and it is safe to say that the losses sustained by the United States, from these causes alone, can hardly be estimated at less than fifty million dollars.

Next came the loss of life by disease, by fire, and by water. It has been the most unhealthy summer the United States has known for a whole generation. The cholera has spread all over the country, carrying off thousands in places that have been noted for their salubrity; while its ravages along the avenues of internal communication and in large towns, have been frightful; and at the same time, the tendencies to disease and the preliminary or alarming symptoms have been so general, that few persons on the Continent have entirely escaped.

Next came a withering drought, that scorched the country, with few and far intervening sections, from one ocean to the other. It has been the dryest summer, take the country through, that has ever been known. From the first of June till the latter part of August, there were whole States touching each other, in which a shower did not fall. The great wheat crop was brought forward rather prematurely, and the large prices of last year stimulated a vast increase in sowing; and besides feeding all our own people, and half a million new comers from the old world every year, we always relied upon a large surplus for exportation. Nearly the entire early potato crop has been cut off, and potatoes are now selling in New York for a dollar and a quarter per bushel. This is almost as important a crop to us as it is to Ireland, for the consumption enters largely into the feeding of swine and other animals.

It is early yet to talk about the cotton crop, and I shall shortly devote one letter to that subject, but the belief is now general that the crop will fall at least several hundred thousand bales below the estimate last spring. Taking all the products of all the crops, those who have devoted most attention to the study, are coming to the conclusion that the yield this year will turn out to be a clear average of twenty per cent. deficit.

But the public and private credit of the country, and perhaps the prosperity of the nation, have suffered a still heavier blow, from another quarter, than by the combination of all the evils of which I have spoken. I allude to the startling and stupendous frauds and defalcations which have astounded, mortified and grieved the nation. The immediate results of the discovery of the Schuyler fraud alone, shook the whole commercial fabric; and men stood aghast in terror. But it was immediately followed by other revelations, in quarters quite as little expected. The later results of these villainies are being felt deeper and deeper every day. Public confidence has been weakened in every range of business. In periods of speculation, and especially in all communities like our own, where there is more energy than capital, but where there is ability enough, under wise management, to redeem all obligations, there is a large class of interests and undertakings, which, to be carried through successfully, must be buoyed up by the sustaining influences of commercial confidence. In this country these interests, which are so vast, have all been struck down by these visitations of Providence. I call them so because they seem, in the terror that they inspire, and the ruin they have worked, to partake of the solemn attributes of the curses of God.—[New York Correspondent of the Daily News, Oct. 11.

NATURALIZATION AND FRANCHISE.

The nature of the constitutional and legal provisions in regard to naturalization and the right of suffrage having become matter of discussion in the North, the New York Courier has given an article on the subject, from which we extract the following portions, as containing information which may not be readily accessible to some of our readers:

The only positive work which the Constitution does in regard to foreigners is TO PROSCRIBE. The Constitution has but five clauses touching the subject: four of them are prohibitory and the other simply permissive. There is no guaranteeing clause whatever. We must be pardoned for recalling the very language of the Constitution, for this progressive generation is fast losing sight of even the plainest features of that document.

SEC. 5, Article II, of the Constitution says: "No person, except a NATURAL BORN CITIZEN, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the office of President." That is proscription.

SEC. 3, of Article XII, of the Constitution says: "No person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President, shall be eligible to that of Vice President of the United States." That is proscription.

SEC. 3, Article I, says: "No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained the age of thirty years, and been NINE YEARS A CITIZEN of these United States." That is proscription.

SEC. 2, Article I, says: "No person shall be a Representative who shall not have obtained the age of thirty-five years and been SEVEN YEARS A CITIZEN." That is proscription.

These are disabilities imposed upon foreigners after they have been made citizens. But more than this, the Constitution leaves it discretionary whether to make them citizens at all. It simply confers the power, simply permits.

SEC. 8, Article I, says: "Congress SHALL HAVE POWER to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States."

Nothing whatever obliges Congress to exercise this power, or restricts its range in either direction when it is exercised. Congress may require two years previous residence, as was required by the act of 1790; or five years, as was required by the acts of 1795 and 1802; or fourteen years, as by the act of 1798; or twenty-one years, as now demanded; or it may withhold naturalization entirely. The question is purely one of expediency. It is true that after the naturalization has been conferred it cannot be retracted. Congress has no power to make ex post facto laws, and therefore has no power to unmake citizens who have become such by its own acts. But nobody proposes this.

But there is blunder in supposing that naturalization confers the right of voting. It does no such thing. It has nothing to do with voting one way or the other. There are naturalized people who cannot vote; there are non-naturalized people who can vote. Foreigners in many of the Western States vote after a year's, or a half year's stay in the country, though a stay of five years is necessary for naturalization. In some of the Southern States a property qualification is necessary to the right of voting, and no person, whether natural born or naturalized, can vote without it. Congress can naturalize, but Congress cannot confer the power of voting. That power is conferred by the States alone, and by each according to its own sole discretion, in the way defined by itself in its own State Constitution. Each State is sovereign in that respect. It bestows the power of voting according to its own view of its own interests. There is no such thing as the natural right to vote. They who talk of it show themselves ignorant of the very elements of civil government. The election franchise is a franchise, and the very definition of a franchise is a right granted, in distinction from a right inherent. In respect to suffrage, the right is granted by the Constitution, and as this grant changes the right changes. There is not a State in the Union in which the grant is not a qualified one. It is extended only to those of a certain age; women are excluded from it; in most of the States colored men and paupers are excluded from it; in some of the States those who do not own a certain amount of property or a certain description of property are excluded from it. Each State, through its Constitution, controls the matter as it likes. It can extend this franchise or curtail it as it chooses; and this power is inseparable from the State sovereignty.

But, again, there is yet another blunder in supposing that the Constitution of the United States guarantees the liberty of conscience. It does no such thing. It simply interdicts the making "a religious test the qualification to any office or public trust under the United States," and enjoins that "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The Constitution imposes no restrictions on the States in this respect, though in many other matters it expressly does; and there is not a religious denomination in the country, be it Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Roman Catholic, or any other, which the State may not disfranchise or proscribe, without violating the Constitution of the United States. The guarantees of the liberty of conscience are not to be found in the Federal Constitution, but in the State constitutions; and though all these constitutions do secure liberty of conscience in its proper sense, it is undeniable that in one of them at least—we mean that of New Hampshire—religious tests are not only recognized, but actually imposed. Now, none can respect liberty of conscience more than we. Of all liberties, it is the very one which we deem the most sacred, and we will yield to none in determination to uphold the third section of the first article of our State Constitution, which secures it; but, in proportion as we respect this great right of free conscience, we desire that its positive guarantee should not be misplaced or misunderstood. They are lodged in the State Constitution, and it is there that every friend of religious liberty must see that they are firmly incorporated and preserved inviolate.

LITTLE CHARLEY, THE CHILD-ANGEL.

BY FANNY FERN.

I am one of that persecuted class, denominated "old maids." By going quietly about the world, taking care not to jostle my neighbors, or hit against any of their rough angles, I manage to be cheerful, contented and happy. In my multitudinous migrations I have had some opportunity to study human nature. Lately I have become a temporary inmate of a crowded boarding-house. My little room has already begun to look home-like. The cheerful sun has expanded the fragrant flowers I love so well to nurture; my canary trills his satisfaction in a gayer song than ever; and my pictures, books, and guitar, drive "dull care away," and beguile many a pleasant hour. And now my heart has found a new object of interest. I've noticed on the staircase, and in the hall and lobby, a lovely child, who seemed wandering about at his own sweet will, sometimes sitting wearily on the stairs, almost asleep; then loitering at the kitchen door, watching the operations of the cook; then peeping into the half-open doors of the different apartments. As, by a rule of the house, "no children were permitted at the table," it was some time before I could ascertain who claimed this little stray waif.

One morning, attracted by the carol of my canary, he ventured to put his little curly head inside my door. He needed little urging to enter, for he read with a child's quick instinct, his welcome in my face. An animated conversation soon ensued about birds, flowers and pictures—his large blue eyes growing bright, and his cheeks flushing with pleasure, as story followed story, while he sat upon my knee.

At length I said to him, "Charley, won't mamma be anxious about you, if you stay so long?"

"Oh, no," said he, "Lizzie don't care."

"Who is Lizzie?"

"Why, my mamma! She don't care, if I am only out of the way. Lizzie made me this pretty dress," said he, holding up his richly-embroidered frock; "but Lizzie don't know any stories, and she says I'm a bore. What is a bore?" said the sweet child, as he looked trustingly in my face.

"Never mind now," said I, tearfully; "you may stay with me whenever you like, and we will be very good friends."

The dinner-bell sounding, a gaily dressed young thing vociferated, in a voice anything but musical, "Charley, Charley!" When I apologized for keeping him, she said, carelessly, as she re-arranged her bracelets, "O, it don't signify, if you can have patience with him, he's so tiresome with his questions I've bought him heaps of toys, but he never wants to play, and is forever asking me such old-fashioned questions. Keep him and welcome, when you like, but take my word for it, you'll repent your bargain!" and she tripped gaily down to dinner.

Poor little Charley! Time in plenty to adjust all those silken ringlets; time to embroider all those little gay dresses; time to linger till midnight over the last new novel; but for the soul that looked forth from those deep blue eyes, no time to sow the good seed—no time to watch lest the enemy should "sow tares."

From that time Charley and I were inseparable. The thoughtless mother well content to pass her time devouring all sorts of trashy literature, or in idle gossip with her drawing-room companions. The young father, weary with business troubles, contenting himself with a quiet "good night," and closing the day by a visit to the theatre or concert-room. Poor Charley, meanwhile put to bed for safe keeping, would lie hours, tossing restlessly from side to side, "with nothing in his head," as he innocently said to me. What a joy to sit by his side and beguile his lonely hours! There I learned to understand the meaning of our Saviour's words, "For of such is the kingdom of heaven."

In his clear, silvery tones he would repeat after me the meaning of every petition; then he would say, "Why don't you tell Lizzie? Lizzie don't know any prayers!"

One night I sang him these lines:

"Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood, Stand dressed in living green;"—

he raised himself in bed, while the tears trembled on his long lashes, and said, "O, sing that again—it seems as if I saw a beautiful picture!" Then, taking my guitar, I would sit by his bedside, and watch the blue eyes droop and grow heavy with slumber, as I sang to him. And she, whose duty, and joy, and pride it should have been to lead those little feet to Him who biddeth "little children come" was indolently and contentedly bound in flowery fetters of her own weaving, unmindful that an angel's destiny was entrusted to her careless keeping.

* * * * * * *

Little Charley lay tossing in his little bed, with a high fever. It is needless to tell of the hold he had upon my heart and services. His childish mother, either unable or unwilling to see his danger, had left me in charge of him—drawn from his side by the attractions of a great military ball. I changed his heated pillows, gave him the cooling draught, bathed his feverish temples, and finally, at his request, rocked him gently to quiet his restlessness. He placed his little arms caressingly about my neck, and said, feebly, "Sing to me of heaven." When I finished, he looked languidly up, saying, "Where's Lizzie? I must kiss Lizzie!" and, as the words died upon his lips, his eyes drooped, his heart fluttered like a prisoned bird, and little Charley was counted one in the heavenly fold. As I closed his eyes, and crossed the dimpled hand peacefully upon his little breast, his last words rang fearfully in my ears, "Where's Lizzie?"

THE TRIUMPH OF RUSSIA IN ACCORDANCE WITH PROPHECY.—A learned Hebrew has just published a book to prove that the occupation of Egypt and the Holy Land by the British, and the formation of a Russian Latino-Greek confederacy, by which Egypt, Palestine, and Jerusalem will be invaded and conquered, are clearly laid down in prophecy; as the events which are to precede the long-expected deliverance of the Jews by the Messiah, his subjugation of the world through their agency, and the consequent establishment of the kingdom of Israel. If this interpretation of the Scriptures be correct, the Russian war promises to be a tolerably long one.

A coxcomb, talking of the transmigration of souls, said: "In the time of Moses I have no doubt I was the golden calf." "Very likely," replied a lady, "time has robbed you of nothing but the gilding."

How to Acquire Ease and Correctness in Composing.

After reading, for instance, the history of some particular period, if you will set to work and write your recollections and impressions, or construct an original narrative of your own, you will see what you can remember; you will find out what you have forgotten; you will ascertain how the historical events and characters fashion themselves to your apprehension and judgment. Such an exercise will discipline the memory, call forth your powers of discrimination, test your ability to record facts and to describe character, and in many ways may reveal to you something about yourself well worth knowing. If you read the works of some poet, and then try to write an estimate of him, putting down your impressions of his genius—what strikes you in his thoughts or style, his imagery or measures, as in any way peculiar—or what you suppose, from their effect upon yourself, must be the probable tendency or influence of his writings, you will bring out, I believe, by such an effort, thoughts and feelings which had been passing within you half unconsciously, which never would have been recalled, and never caught, but for the exercise which seizes and detains them. It is very useful to write an analysis of a book, or of some extended and elaborate discourse—to put down with your own hands, and in your own words, what appears to you to be the order of the writer's ideas—the cohesions, articulations, and success of his argument. After reading on any particular subject, either in one book or several—(two or three are often to be preferred to one, for in many departments, or at particular times, it is better to read subjects than books)—after doing this, if you try to write something on the subject yourself; to arrange your thoughts and state your conclusions; to argue and illustrate it in your own way, you will find out whether you understand it or not, or how far you understand it; and if you do understand it, you will get such a hold of it—you will so see it and apprehend it, in all its lights, aspects, and incidents, that it will most likely never be lost—never forgotten. In this way original composition may be used as an instrument of mental culture. I believe it to be one singularly efficacious. It braces the faculties; it gives them strength, nimbleness, dexterity, by the tasks it imposes, and the duties it demands; it is an enemy to self-deception, by the terrible disclosures it sometimes makes as to the crudeness of your conceptions, the treachery of your memory, the poverty of your knowledge, your inability to express clearly and competently even what you know. It is favorable to growth and progress, by virtue of the great law of our nature, that power shall be increased, and good secured, by every honest and hearty effort at using rightly the strength we have.—[A Lecture on Authorship, by the Rev. Thomas Binney.

C. F. Clarkson, formerly editor of the Indiana American, who is now traveling in Tennessee, narrates the following story in a letter published in the Brookville Democrat:

Let me recite to you the true history of a man whose farm we passed over yesterday. About fifteen years ago a Presbyterian clergyman of New York had a wayward son. We have his name and location, but choose to withhold it at present. Before he was seventeen he became so reckless and unruly that his father could no longer control him. He left for the wicked and corrupt city of New York, where he became a clerk in a drinking saloon, but his character was too bad to be retained there. He next was a bar-keeper in a theatre, but was dismissed. He went lower and still lower, until he slept in empty cellars and on the wharves of the city, a perfect nuisance and disgrace to his race. At this stage of his career an old college mate—for he was a graduate of one of the best colleges in the State of New York—determined that he would hunt him up and make one more effort to save him. He went to New York, and after a diligent search, with the aid of the police, he found him. He washed and clothed him, took him back to the country, and by every inducement that could be held out to him, persuaded him to try to be a man. He made the effort and was successful. That friend who sought him out and who saved him we are all well acquainted with. They both determined to come to Tennessee to teach school. They soon reached here, and with the high recommendations they brought, soon obtained good places. The reclaimed son of the Presbyterian clergyman, within six months after his arrival, married an orphan girl worth $40,000 in cash. She had a younger sister and a brother, who each had equal amounts. When the Mexican war broke out the brother enlisted, and made a will leaving all his estate to his brother-in-law (our hero) and his wife, in case he never returned from the war. He, like many of our noble youths, was killed at Buena Vista. Thus our hero fell into possession of the entire estate of the family, which at first was $120,000, which has increased by the advance of lands and increase of negroes to over $300,000. He is now one of the richest planters of Middle Tennessee, and does not live twenty-five miles from Nashville.

The senses of smelling, tasting, and even of feeling or touch, are liable to innumerable causes of deception. It is mentioned in the Museum of Art and Science, that if two fingers of the same hand being crossed, be placed upon a table, and a marble or pea is rolled between them, the impression will be, if the eyes are closed, that two marbles or peas are touched. If the nose be pinched, and cinnamon be tasted, it will taste like a common stick of deal. Many substances lose their flavor when the nostrils are stopped. Nurses, therefore, upon right and scientific principles, stop the noses of children when they give them doses of disagreeable medicine. If the eyes be blindfolded, and buttermilk and claret be alternately tasted, the person tasting them, after a repetition of the process, will be unable to distinguish one from the other.

Deal gently with those who stray. Draw them back by love and persuasion. A kiss is worth a thousand kicks. A kind word is more valuable to the lost than a mine of gold. Think of this, and be on your guard, ye who would chase to the grave an erring brother.

An exquisite compliment was paid lately to a lady in our presence. She had just swallowed a petite glass of wine, as a gentleman in the company asked for a taste. "It is all gone," she replied, unless you will take some of it from my lips." "I should be most happy," he replied, "but I never take sugar with my wine!"

The young lady who was "buried in grief," is now alive and doing well. It was a case of premature interment.

DISCOVERER OF THE
SYMPTOMA TRUTINORIC SYSTEM,
For Diagonising all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs,
May be Consulted daily at his Office, No. 121 PINE St., between 4th & 5th, from 2 to 5 P. M.

According to well authenticated statistical reports, one out of every six of all the deaths that occur in Europe or America, are from diseases of the lungs alone.

Judging from the above data, there are at the present time within the city of St. Louis, at least,

FIFTEEN THOUSAND

individuals who have disease seated upon their lungs. It is equally true that the Medical Profession, without exception, are unable to detect a disease upon those organs in season to effect a radical cure; and this is the reason why that class of diseases have proved so universally fatal. And hence this new discovery offers the only means extant for detecting pulmonary diseases in their incipient stages, or in time to effect a cure in every case. In all probability, 14,000 out of the above number may escape a premature grave, by at once availing themselves of the benefits of this important discovery.

Parents and Guardians should submit every member of their families to an immediate examination by this New System if they would avoid a responsibility dreadful to none but infidels. They should not suffer any pecuniary consideration to deter them from reaping its benefits if they would protect those committed to their charge from one of the most fatal diseases that exists upon this continent. If they rely upon their family physician to apprise them of the existence of this dreadful disease, depend upon it, not one case out of a hundred will ever recover. Heads of families, are you prepared to offer those committed to your responsible charge a sacrifice to prejudice, when these incontrovertible facts are before you? If so, the responsibility rests entirely with you.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.

Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

Truly happy is that man or woman, or that people, who enjoy the privileges of the Gospel of the Son of God, and who know how to appreciate his blessings. Who is that person, or that people? We are ready to reply, the Latter-day Saints are the only people on earth, that we have any knowledge of, to whom the everlasting Gospel has been given in these last days; they are the only people who are the heirs to it with all its blessings and privileges. Not to our knowledge is there any other people on the face of this globe who enjoy this inestimable blessing. True, all mankind enjoy, to a certain degree, its influence; the manifestations of the author, proprietor, and giver of the Gospel of life and salvation to fallen man.

All the offspring of Adam, from his day to this, have enjoyed, to a greater or less degree, the light, the glory, and the manifestations of the light of the countenance of their Lord. But they have not enjoyed, at all times, the Gospel, with its ordinances, blessings, and privileges. This is the only people that now enjoy those signal favors. The Priesthood has been upon the earth from time to time, and the kingdom of God has been organized to certain degrees; but we can truly say, this is the time of times; we live in the day of days; we enjoy the blessings of the blessed; and have bestowed upon us, in the fullness of times, privileges that surpass all privileges hitherto bestowed upon mankind.

In this dispensation all things will be gathered in one; and strange and marvellous as it may appear to the world, this is the people who are the instruments in the hand of God to bring it to pass. This is a truth which no argument can successfully bear down. No matter how it is despised, persecuted, or neglected as a frivolous, trifling and childish work, it is true and it will remain; it is the kingdom of heaven upon the earth. Here is the plan of salvation, here are the words of life, here is the light of eternity, here is the intelligence that will instruct kings, and impart judgment to rulers. It is embodied here in the midst of this people, and from them the rays of heavenly light, wisdom and intelligence have spread upon the wide earth, and the Spirit of the Lord that fills immensity has been poured out upon its face, giving light to every man and woman that cometh into this world.

Brethren and sisters, can we realize its greatness? Arouse the reflecting and reasoning faculties with which you are endowed; reason upon your past experience in this church, and then inquire if you are as happy as you anticipated you would be; if you have received that which you desired; if you enjoy that which was once in the future to you; and what will be your reasonable conclusions? What would an enlightened judgment tell you? what would the spirit of truth decide? That here are the pure rays of light; here is heaven on earth; and no argument, no intelligence, no influence of earth or hell combined can disprove it, or produce one good reason to the contrary.

You may then ascend to the powers supreme, and consult the intelligence that fills the bosom of eternity; you may inquire of the Creator, Organizer and Preserver of the universe, our Father who is in heaven; you may associate with the glorious retinue of saints, angels, martyrs, and the spirit of just men made perfect, and they will all, with one voice as it were, testify to the truth of this work in which we are engaged.

On the other hand, nothing short of the power of the Almighty, nothing short of the Holy Spirit of Jesus Christ can prove to you that this is the work of God. Men uninspired of God cannot, by their wordly wisdom, disprove it. Neither can they by their wisdom alone prove it to be true, neither to themselves or to others. They not being able to prevail against it, does not prove it to be the kingdom of God; for there are many theories and systems on the earth, incontrovertible by the wisdom of the world, which are nevertheless false. Nothing less than the power of the Almighty, enlightening the understandings of men, can demonstrate this glorious truth to the human mind.

When you were in your native homes in the old countries and in the United States, before you gathered with the people of God, what were your thougts and expectations when you looked forward to the period of your being embodied with the Saints? What was the vision of your mind, and the operation of the Spirit upon your understanding? When you were gathered with the Saints of the Most High, and became associated as a brother, a sister, and a neighbor, with that blessed society, you expected to enjoy the manifestations of the Lord Jesus Christ; walk in the light of his countenance; and by the power of the Holy Ghost have the oracles of truth revealed to you continually; that you would be in heaven, in the Zion of the Lord.

These were your expectations. You did not expect to hear the name of the God we serve blasphemed from morning until evening. You expected to be delivered from hearing the blasphemies of your wicked shopmates; from the tyranny of your ungodly employers, and from the persecution of the bigoted religionists, who were all united to pick you to pieces, and destroy you, both temporally and spiritually, if it were possible. On the one side you was sheared, and on the other shaved.

You were annoyed with the ungodly conversation and filthy deeds of your neighbors. Your peace was destroyed, and you could not enjoy that happiness held out to you in the Gospel. Yet you felt the influence of the Spirit of Truth burning in your heart, which kindled in you a longing desire to mingle with the Saints. You would exclaim, "O that I could enjoy the society of the Saints, and make my escape from this ungodly place. O that I had means to gather up my little family, and journey to the place of the gathering of the Saints of the Most High."

This was your feeling, and this your prayer. You anticipated deliverance from hell to find a heaven with the Saints; you expected to exchange confusion for a Zion of order and beauty; misery for peace and happiness; blasphemy and tumult for quietness and reverence to the name of God; starvation for plenty. In short, you expected to find a place where all evil had ceased, and sorrow and iniquity were brought to an end; and where you would bask undisturbed in the smiles of the countenance of your Lord from day to day. I think I have drawn a faithful picture of what were the thoughts of the majority of this people before they were gathered to the body of the church.

Now brethren and sisters, what hinders you from enjoying all you anticipated? The calm reflections of your own minds, and the conclusions of a well balanced judgment, enlightened by the Spirit of the Lord, will give you a correct answer to this question. I can answer it for myself, and perhaps for many of you.

If I do not enjoy all I anticipated; if my happiness is not as complete as I anticipated; if the light of the Holy Spirit is not in my heart to that degree I expected it would be; if I have not obtained all I anticipated when I was down in yonder world mingled with the wicked, the cause is in myself—in my own heart, in my own disposition, in the weakness of human nature; it is my own will that prevents me from enjoying all I anticipated and more. It is a mistaken idea to suppose that others can prevent me from enjoying the light of God in my soul; all hell cannot hinder me from enjoying Zion in my own heart, if my individual will yields obedience to the requirements and mandates of my heavenly Master. He has set me a pattern to copy, which if I imitate faithfully will yield to me all and more of heaven in my own heart than I could anticipate. This is my answer.

Br. Erastus Snow asked a question, namely: "If my neighbor shall do wrong to me, am I thereby compelled to do wrong to my next neighbor?" I say no. If a brother shall tread down my grain that is ripening in the field, am I thereby compelled to run through and tread down yours? No. When a person steals my poles from the fence, am I compelled to steal yours? If my neighbor, or my brother in the church shall swear, and take the name of God in vain, does it necessarily follow that I must use the same language? If my brother shall do wrong in any way, it does not follow that I shall be justified in committing one single evil in all the acts of my life.

Let each Latter-day Saint examine himself and inquire, "Am I one of those persons who will do right in all things, though others may do wrong? Am I that person that will serve the Lord with my house?—that will cease from every evil act and from every evil word, though my neighbors, or my brethren and sisters may do the opposite?" Let the spirit within you reply to these questions, and in every breast the reply is, "let me be that person; let me do right from this time henceforth and forever, without committing another evil." Then what have you got? You have got heaven in your own bosoms; you have Zion in your hearts; you have obtained all the glory, all the peace, all the joy, all the comfort, and all the light you anticipated when you was mingling with the wicked world. If you are deceived, who will deceive you? If you are wronged, who wrongs you? If you are cheated out of your crown at last, who has cheated you?

These questions may apply in different ways; they may apply to the business operations of the world, as well as to the grace of God in the heart, and the salvation of the soul; it is to the latter I wish them more particularly to apply. What has influence over any one of you, to cause you to miss salvation in the celestial kingdom of God? I will answer these questions for myself. If brother Brigham and I shall take a wrong track, and be shut out of the kingdom of heaven, no person will be to blame but brother Brigham and I. I am the only being in heaven, earth, or hell, that can be blamed. This will equally apply to every Latter-day Saint.

Salvation is an individual operation; I am the only person that can possibly save myself. When salvation is sent to me I can reject or receive it. In receiving it I yield implicit obedience and submission to its great Author, throughout my life, and to those whom he shall appoint to instruct me. In rejecting it, I follow the dictates of my own will in preference to the will of my Creator. There are those among this people who are influenced, controlled, and biased in their thoughts, actions and feelings, by some other individual or family, on whom they place their dependence for spiritual and temporal instruction, and for salvation in the end. These persons do not depend upon themselves for salvation, but upon another of their poor weak fellow mortals: "I do not depend upon any inherent goodness of my own," say they, "to introduce me into the kingdom of glory, but I depend upon you, brother Joseph, upon you, brother Brigham, upon you, brother Heber, or upon you, brother James. I believe your judgment is superior to mine, and, consequently, I let you judge for me; I will submit myself wholly to you, and place in you all my confidence for life and salvation; where you go I will go, and where you tarry there I will stay, expecting that you will introduce me through the gates into the heavenly Jerusalem."

I wish to notice this. We read in the Bible that there is one glory of the sun, another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars. In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants these glories are called telestial, terrestial, and the celestial,—which is the highest. These are worlds—different departments, or mansions in our Father's house. Now that man, or that woman who knows no more about the power of God and the influence of the Holy Spirit than to be led entirely by another person, suspending their own understanding, and pinning their faith upon another's sleeve, will never be capable of entering into the celestial glory, to be crowned as they anticipate; they will never be capable of becoming Gods. They cannot rule themselves, to say nothing of ruling others; but they must be dictated to in every trifle, like a child. They cannot control themselves in the least, but James, Peter, or somebody else must control them. They never can become a God, nor be crowned as rulers, with glory, immortality and eternal lives. They never can hold a sceptre of glory, majesty and power in the celestial kingdom. Who will? Those who are valiant and inspired with the true independence of heaven; who will go forth boldly in the service of their God, leaving others to do as they please; determined to do right, though all mankind besides should take the opposite course.

Will this apply to any of you? Your own hearts can answer. Do you know what is right and wrong just as well as I do? In some things you do, and in some things you may not know as well; but I will explain what I mean, in the following words: I will do all the good I can, and all I know how to do; and I will shun every evil that I know to be an evil. You can all do that much. I will apply my heart to wisdom and ask the Lord to impart it to me; and if I know but a little, I will improve upon it, that tomorrow I may have more, and thus grow from day to day in the knowledge of the truth, as Jesus Christ grew in stature and knowledge from a babe to manhood; and if I am not now capable of judging for myself, perhaps I shall be in another year. We are organized to progress in the scale of intelligence, and the least Saint, by adhering strictly to the law of God, may attain to a full and complete salvation, by his own faithfulness, through the grace of God.

I know how it was in Jackson county. There are familes in this city that went to that county twenty-one or twenty-two years ago last fall, if I mistake not. I know what their feelings were. All their desire was to get into the town of Independence, Jackson county, where they expected to find all sin and iniquity dried up—heaven begun on earth, and an end to all their mortal griefs. That was the motive that prompted them to go there. Poor souls! how little they knew about salvation and its mode. I might have gone there too, but I wanted to thunder and roar out the gospel to the nations. It burned in my bones like fire pent up, so I turned my back upon Jackson county to preach the gospel of life to the people.

Such were the feelings of those who went up to Jackson county; but I did not want to go there; nothing would satisfy me but to cry aloud in the world what the Lord is doing in the latter days. After a while this undercurrent began to work two ways, and they had more trouble in Independence than we had in York State. It came foaming and bellowing, and pressing upon them until they had to fly.

I wish to ask those persons who were driven from Jackson county, if they suffered as much in the actual driving as they would have done in the anticipation of it a year before it took place? You will all reply that if you had known it a year beforehand you could not have endured the thought.

I wish to apply this both ways. You that have not passed through the trials and persecutions, and drivings with this people from the beginning, but have only read them, or heard some of them related, may think how awful they were to endure, and wonder that the Saints survived them at all. The thought of it makes your heart sink within you, your brain reel, and your body tremble, and you are ready to exclaim, "I could not have endured it." I have been in the heat of it, and never felt better in all my life; I never felt the peace and power of the Almighty more copiously poured upon me than in the keenest part of our trials. They appeared nothing to me.

I hear people talk about their troubles, their sore privations, and the great sacrifices they have made for the Gospel's sake. It never was a sacrifice to me. Anything I could do or suffer in the cause of the Gospel is only like dropping a pin into the sea. The blessings, gifts, powers, honor, joy, truth, salvation, glory, immortality and eternal lives, as far outswell anything I can do in return for such precious gifts, as the great ocean exceeds in expansion, bulk, and weight, the pin that I drop into it.

Had I millions of wealth and devoted it all to the building up of this people, and said take it, and build temples, cities, and fortifications with it, and left myself penniless, would it have been a sacrifice? No; but one of the greatest blessings that could be conferred upon mortal man—to have the privilege of calling thousands, and perhaps millions from darkness to light, from the power of Satan and unrighteousness, to the principles of truth and righteousness in the living God.

I was as ready to pass through the scenes of mobbing and driving in Jackson county, as I was to pass through the troubles in Kirtland, Ohio, in Daviess and Baldwell counties, Missouri, and in Illinois, and up to this place. And what of it? I have not known or seen a single sacrifice that this people has made. There has not been one such providence of the Almighty to this people that was not calculated to sanctify the pure in heart, and enrich them with blessings instead of curses; to enrich them not only with earthly blessings, but with crowns of glory, immortality and eternal lives in the presence of God.

Where then is the sacrifice this people have ever made? There is no such thing. They have only exchanged a worse condition for a better one every time they have been moved; they have exchanged ignorance for knowledge, and inexperience for its opposite.

I want you to look at the Saints before they first gathered to be mobbed; they expected all sin to be at an end at the place of gathering. These were my own feelings, though I did not gather with them at the time; I had to go out and preach lest my bones should consume within me. But I will tell you what I did do. I commenced to contract my business operations and dealings, and laid away my ledger and note books, saying, "I shall never want you any more." I believed those who wanted to be Saints indeed should do everything to promote righteous principles and peace among men, and be perfectly of one heart and of one mind.

I laid aside my old account books because I expected we should be one family, each seeking to do his neighbor good, and all be engaged to do all the good possible. To carry out this principle faithfully would crown the people of God with good to overflowing. It is easy for us to think how things should be, but the difficulty is, things are not always as we would like to have them. Though if the Saints at the time could have rightly judged of appearences, could have understood the aspect around them, it was clear that sorrow and trouble was impending. It was right they did not see the dark cloud that was ready to burst with violence upon their heads.

In the short speech of not more than five minutes, which I delivered in the old bowery when that judge publicly insulted this people, there were men and women in the congregation who suffered more in the anticipation of what might be the result of it in future, than the generality of this people have suffered in being actually mobbed. They could see, in imagination, all hell let loose upon us, themselves strung up, their ears cut off, their bowels torn out, and this whole people cut to pieces.

After they had time to think they found themselves still alive, and unhurt, to their great astonishment. They suffered as much as though they had been sent to the bottom of the bottomless pit. They suffered all this because I told that corrupt man he ought to be kicked out of the Territory for his insolence and bare-faced presumption. I know this people have suffered more by the contemplation of trouble than they have when actually passing through it. As they have magnified future trouble almost infinitely beyond its real dimensions, so they have imagined to themselves a greater heaven than they can find in Zion at its present stage of progression. You do not enjoy the Zion you anticipated.

That mankind make mistakes in these two ways, must be apparent to those who have felt the workings of hope and fear in their nature. People suffer more in the anticipation of death than in death itself. There is more suffering in what I call borrowed trouble than in the trouble itself. On the other hand, you have anticipated more Zion, more happiness, and more glory in the flesh than you will ever realize in this mortality. Those who are apt to go to one extreme are almost sure to go to the other, which always causes disappointment, agreeably or disagreeably. These two extremes have caused the Saints much trouble; and some, for want of patience and a little reasonable thought, have laid the blame of their disappointments in the wrong quarter, and have apostatized from the church, never thinking the blame was in themselves.

Upon these weaknesses of human nature the devil works: sometimes very successfully. But brethren we cannot escape from ourselves; and while we remain in this tabernacle, our onward course will be obstructed more or less by the weakness to which the mortal flesh is subject. By and by our bodies will go to our mother earth, and receive a resurrection and become glorious; then we shall enjoy all, and more than the heart of man can conceive, unless it is inspired by the Holy Ghost. This will be the inheritance of the faithful.

There is much room for improvement in us all. If we commence from this day and do all the good we can, and never do another evil, we shall come to that which I want the brethren to preach about and endeavor to establish. I wish it preached by the bishops, by the deacons, and by every officer of the church. I wish fathers to teach it to their children, and I desire the subject to be taken up by all bodies of the Saints throughout the world, viz., establish confidence in each other. Take this for a text if you like, and preach upon it, both verbally, and practically, until confidence in each other reigns universally among the Saints, and then will be accomplished what I wish to see.

If we wish to establish a confidence such as the Gods enjoy, let us cease from every evil act, and from the contemplation of every evil design; never infringe upon another's right, but each one sustain his brother in the enjoyment of his privileges and rights, holding them as sacred as we hold our own salvation. If confidence has been lost, this is the surest and only successful way to restore it.

Hear it ye Preachers, ye Apostles and Prophets, Elders, High Priests and Seventies, ye Priests and Teachers, Deacons and Bishops—every man and woman in the church of God throughout the world—commence to preach this discourse at home, beginning at your own heart; then teach your wives and your children; then let it spread its warning and cheering influence like the genial sunbeam from family to family, until the whole church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is united as the heart of one man.

I will illustrate the method of establishing confidence in each other by taking for example the child of four or five years of age. The mother allows that child to own a small chest in which to keep his little trinkets, such as little bosom pins, ribbons, doll clothes, &c. This is considered by all the family the child's chest. Now let none go into that chest and take anything from it without the consent of the child.

This is a very small matter some may think; but begin at as small a point as this to create confidence, and let it grow up from little to much. Wives let your husbands' stores alone, if they have not committed them to your charge. Husbands commit that to your wives that belongs them, and never search their boxes without their consent. I can boast of this. I have lived in the marriage relation near 30 years, and I never was the man to open my wife's chest without her consent, except once, and that was to get out a likeness that I wanted on the instant, and she was not at home to get it for me. That was the first time I ever opened a trunk in my life that belonged to my wife, or to my child.

The child's little chest, with its contents, is as sacred to him, as mine is to me. If this principle was strictly carried out by every man, woman and child among the Saints, it would make us a blessed people indeed. We should seek to preserve our neighbor's horse or ox from starving in the cold of winter; and if we saw any of his property in jeopardy, we should be as careful of it as if it were our own. Our object would be to save everything we can, both of our neighbor's and our own.

Let every man pay his just debts. The editor of the News has published a piece in the paper about owing no man anything. Read it, reflect upon, and practice it. I can owe everybody everything; that is one side of the matter, and to pay everybody is the other. I mean to owe every man a debt of gratitude.

I have perhaps spoken too long. I have given you all a text to preach upon, and to act upon in your lives; do it faithfully, and it will do you good.

May the Lord God of Israel bless you, and save you in his kingdom is my prayer. Amen.

WHAT A BOMB SHELL CAN DO.

Round shot and shells are perpetually whizzing through the air day and night, falling in all directions, amongst and through the houses of the city. By night the shells assumed a magnificent appearance, resembling so many shooting stars, though, alas! far more formidable. One day a number of us were viewing the scene of destruction from a battery erected on the summit of a high hill. Whilst we anxiously observed the amount of damage committed by the shell, there arose suddenly from the centre of the fort what appeared to us a huge mound of earth, which gradually increased in size until it resembled a hill some six hundred feet in height; then it almost imperceptibly changed, assumed the appearance of an excessively dark thunder-cloud which eventually spread far and wide, concealing both fort and town from our wonder-struck gaze. A few minutes elapsed, and it entirely enveloped the position we were occupying although nine hundred yards from the explosion. This terrific catastrophe originated in one of our shells fortunately bursting in a powder magazine containing several tons of combustible amunition. The sublime spectacle that ensued will never be effaced from my memory; nor, I imagine, from that of any one who witnessed the sight. For several minutes the atmosphere continued very close, not even a breath of wind stirring, but a death-like stillness prevailed, precisely similar to that which precedes a Scinde dust storm. All the guns ceased firing—all eyes were directed upwards, gazing with awe at the scene thus suddenly presented them. Men even addressed each other in a whisper.—[James' Volunteer Scrambles.

The Apostles:—Their Lives, Wives and Children.

A great deal is said in the ecclesiastical history about the Apostles themselves, but very little about their families. In this view a French writer asks the following questions: Were the Apostles married? did they have children? what became of these children? where did the Apostles live? where did they write? what became of them? did they have a district? did they exercise a civil ministry? did they have a jurisdiction over the faithful? were they bishops? did they have a hierarchy, rites and cerimonies? These questions are curious, and the reply involves a great deal of obscure antiquarian learning.

1. Were the Apostles married?

There exists a letter attributed to St. Ignatius, the martyr, in which are these decisive words: "I remember your sanctity like that of Elijah, of Jeremiah, of John the Baptist, of the chosen disciples Timothy, Titus, Erodius Clement, who lived in chastity; but I do not blame those others, happy in the bonds of marriage, and I hope to be found worthy of God, in following their traces in His reign, after the example of Isaac, Jacob, Isaiah, and of the other prophets, such as Peter and Paul, and of their Apostles who were married."

Some scholars have pretended that the name of St. Paul interpolated in this famous letter. Tarien and all those who have seen the letters of St. Ignatius in Latin, in the Library of the Vatican, acknowledge that the name of St. Paul is found in them.—And Baronious does not deny that this passage exists in some Greek manuscripts; but he pretends that these were added by some modern Greek.

There was in the ancient Library at Oxford, a manuscript in Greek of these letters of St. Ignatius, in which these words are found. I do not know whether it was burned with many other books, at the taking of Oxford by Cromwell. There is still one in Latin in the same Library, in which the words "Pauli et Apostolorum" are effaced, but in such manner that the ancient characters may be easily read. It is certain that this passage is contained in many editions of the letters.

This dispute concerning the marriage of St. Paul, may be very frivolous. What matters it whether he was married or not, if the other Apostles were so? We have only to read his first Epistle to the Corinthians to prove that he might have been married like the others: "Have we not a right to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other Apostles, and of the brethren of the Lord and Cephas? Or I only and Barnabas, have not we the right to forbear working? Who goeth a warning any time at his own charges?" It is clear from this passage, that all the Apostles were married as well as St. Peter.

And St. Clement, of Alexandria, declares positively that St. Paul had a wife. The Romish discipline has changed, but that does not prevent there having been other customs in the primitive times.

2. Of the Children of the Apostles.—

We know very little concerning their families. St. Clement, of Alexandria, says that Peter had children; that Philip had daughters whom he married: the Acts of the Apostles speak of the four daughters of St. Philip, who prophesied. It is believed that there was one married, and that she was St. Hermione.

Eusebius reports that Nicholos, chosen by the Apostles to co-operate with St. Stephen in the holy ministry, had a very beautiful wife of whom he was jealous. The Apostles having reproached him for his fault, he corrected himself, and bringing his wife before them, said—"I am willing to relinquish her, let him who will, take her to wife." The Apostles did not accept his proposition. He had by his wife, one son and several daughters.

Cleophas, according to Eusebius and St. Epiphus, was brother of St. Joseph, and father of St. James the lesser, and of St. Jude, whom he had by Mary, sister of the Holy Virgin. Thus St. Jude, the Apostle, was cousin-german to Jesus Christ.

Heggesippus, quoted by Eusebius, says that two grandchildren of St. Jude were shown to the Emperor of Domitian as descendants of David, and as having an incontestible right to the throne of Jerusalem. Domitian, fearing that they might make use of this right, questioned them himself; they exposed their genealogy; the Emperor asked them what was their fortune; they answered that they possessed thirty-nine acres of land which paid tribute, and they were laboring men. The Emperor then asked them, when the kingdom of Jesus Christ would come; they said that it would be at the end of the world. After which Domitian let them go in peace, which proves he was not a persecutor.—[Saturday Evening Post.

INTERESTING STATISTICS.

We give, on another page of this morning's Times, some interesting extracts from the recently published Appendix to the Census Report, prepared by Professor De Bow. It seems, from that portion of these statements which relates to the nativity of our population, that the foreign born number only about one-eighth of the natives,—much the largest portion being in the Middle States. The largest number of immigrants to this country in any one year, was 439,437 in 1852,—though this statement is scarcely accurate, as more than a year is comprised in the returns.

The most valuable crop in the United States is that of Indian Corn, estimated in 1850 at two hundred and ninety-six millions of dollars—and being nearly three times as valuable as Wheat, and more than three times as valuable as Cotton. Six times as many acres of land are devoted to Indian Corn as are given to Cotton and three times as much as to wheat.

The value of Butter made annually in the United States exceeds fifty millions of dollars.

There were only 347,525 slaveholders in the United States, of whom only two own over one thousand negroes, only nine own over five hundred, only fifty-six own over three hundred, one hundred and eighty-seven own over two hundred, fourteen hundred and seventy-nine own over one hundred. The greatest number of slaveholders own more than one and less than five; the number of this class is 105,683.

The statement of the occupations of the people shows that the Farmers outnumber by far any other profession. Their number is 2,363,950—while the class which approaches nearest to them is that of Laborers, who number 909,786. The Carpenters stand next, counting 164,671, and then come Cordwainers, 130,473, &c.—[N. Y. Times.

"Would it were lawful to marry two wives!" exclaimed an enthusiastic young bachelor, desperately in love with a couple of country cousins. "Try one to begin with," was the rejoinder of a surly old Benedict.

The Cincinnati Columbian and the Mormons.

The Cincinnati Columbian, of Nov. 27th, has an article nearly a column in length about the Mormons—their policy and movements throughout this country—their general character, and the evils to be apprehended from their existence in the Queen City and other parts of the United States. The article contains, some truth, much misrepresentation, considerable alarm and fearful apprehensions, and decidedly more ignorance than either, so far as relates to the real character and spirit of the Mormon people. He says, "Mormonism can draw within its folds only the designing, the vulgar and the ignorant." Again, "the great body are low, ignorant and debased, with minds feebly lighted with the fire of exhausted passion. Miners of Cornwall, coliers, artizans, and the poorest and most ignorant, wherever they were to be found. Whoever had ideas but a shade removed from the brutes, &c., were fit subjects for Mormon proselyteism."

It is in such effusions as the above that most of the article alluded to abound. Now, this style of thinking and writing about Mormons and Mormonism is decidedly old and stale. Angry zealots, and self-sufficient, malignant scribblers, have so long dealt in this kind of trash, that men of sense and reflection will no longer swallow it. It is becoming unpopular. The Mormons are becoming too well known—their history and achievements begin to tell a different tale—they speak for themselves.

The followers of St. Paul and Peter were "everywhere spoken against, and counted the filth and offscouring of all things," and from that time until the present, those who possessed an unwavering attachment to truth, and the moral courage to embrace it have been traduced by the advocates of old institutions

If it be indeed true what the Columbian intimates that Mormonism gathers into its folds the lowest and most degraded, (those whom modern Christianity leaves to perish in their ignorance and filth,) and transports them to the American Deseret, and there makes of them a thriving and happy people, it fulfills for poor fallen man that mission of mercy which the Gospel of the Redeemer was sent into the world to accomplish, and which the corrupt systems of modern Christianity has failed to effect.

That our readers may know the cause why the Columbian indulges in such a train of epithets, we quote its language a little farther:

"It is no longer Mormon policy to limit the pastures of their holy flocks to the bounds of Utah.—Colonies are to be formed and churches established in all the principal cities of the Union.

The seductive pleasures of polygamy are to be thrown open as a step in advance of our present civilization. This is no idle speculation, and these things are not to be done in a corner. The Priests are already upon the ground, and our largest and most fashionable public hall is already occupied by regular Sunday service. We know that emigrants are soon expected to establish themselves in trades and manufactures, and that the leaders are to-day in our city, making preparations for their arrival. We are told by one of their own body that near 2,000 Mormons are already settled in St. Louis, and that it is expected that a corresponding number will soon find a home in our own city."

Here we have set before us the cause for this great alarm. These are the astounding facts which have startled the Columbian from its stupor, and aroused that sentinel to sound the tocsin of war and square himself for the fight.

In another place he refers to "one hundred thousand Mormons now in Europe," and shipload after shipload arriving in our ports, &c. What! and agoing "to establish themselves in trades and manufactures in our city, as well as other cities of the Union." Even those Saints "from the black soil of degredation in Europe" whose "ideas are but a shade above the brutes?" 'Tis "passing strange"—was ever the like before known? Surely is this not a sufficient cause of alarm for the 23,000,000 of American people?

It is well known that for the last fifteen years there has been an organized branch of the Saints in Cincinnati, and for the last ten years there have been in St. Louis from one to three thousand, all the time, varying with the tide of emigration, and they do now, and ever have, formed by far the better portion of the foreign population of this city. Whether as servants, common laborers, artists, mechanics, shop-keepers, clerks, or overseers, they have enjoyed and continue to enjoy a larger share of confidence and trust than any other equal number of the foreign population; and here permit us to ask, when have the Saints ever been mixed up in the riotous and disgraceful proceedings that have marked the history of this city?

It has often been a subject of remark and complaint with the English journals that the Mormons were taking off, not the dregs of their society, but their best artisans and mechanics—their most useful citizens; and it is the more common complaint of business men in this city and elsewhere, that when our people are established in places of profit and trust, they cannot keep them after the time which they have fixed upon for gathering with their brethren—no increase of wages will tempt them to remain.

The Cincinnati Columbian says in its closing paragraph: "No good citizen could look upon the establishment of a Mormon colony in our midst without deep regret, and without fearing the recurrence of events we had hoped would hereafter be strangers to our history."

Here is an illusion to the scenes of murder, robbery, plunder, fire and sword that have marked the bloody persecutions which our people have endured in Illinois and Missouri.

But know ye, oh ye people of Cincinnati, and of the whole world, that these scenes of blood—these indellible stains upon American history, are chargeable mainly upon such defamers of Mormon character, such fomenters of hate, such hypocritical pretended guardians of public morals, such blind leaders of the blind as the Daily Columbian, and other similar journals, who, while they aspire to guide public opinion, are themselves the slaves of prejudice and bigotry, catering for a vicious public taste—pampering the basest passions of the vile, and are destitute of those noble and generous impulses of universal charity and good will to man, which would enable them rightly to tone public feeling, and hold in check the turbulent spirit of popular excitement to which the multitude are but too prone.

LOOK ON THIS AND THEN ON THAT.

'Tis truly amusing to observe the ease with which political navigators adjust their sails to conflicting breezes. A few weeks since the Democrat, of this city, under the head of "Mormon War," furnished its readers a very spicy article, in which it quotes and endorses the following, from the Charleston Mercury:

"Why should the Federal Government parly and temporize, and seek by expedients of conciliation to postpone the inevitable conflict? Nothing can be gained by delay or concession. To talk of compromising with Mormonism, or of tolerating it in the least repulsive of its aspects, is to insult the reason and the conscience of the country. Relentless repression is the only cure for the evil, and the only policy which the good sense of the public will approve. The work should be done quickly. * * It is sound policy in the President to grapple with the difficulty at once, and with a resolution to concede nothing to the pretensions of Mormonism."

Violent and hot-headed as these editors appear, yet even these pause and give place to a sober second thought, for this same Democrat more recently furnishes us, from the Charleston Mercury, with the following:

"PRACTICAL VIEW OF THE MORMONS.—Attention is now strongly attracted to this strange people—strange in the monstrous absurdity of their faith, in the terrible vicisitudes of their history, in their present unassailable isolation, and in their wonderful prosperity. They have found a country miraculously like that of the old Israelites, with its Dead Sea, its Lake of Tiberias, its connecting river of Jordon, its terrible desert, its wild mountains, and its valleys flowing with milk and honey. They have reclaimed this seemingly impracticable wilderness, and made it to them fruithful with all the best products of agriculture. They have built cities and established civilization after their fashion, in a region which, according to the common Anglo-Saxon mode of valueing land, was absolutely uninhabitable. Their agriculture depends altogether on artificial irrigation.

Looking at the matter, then, in a moral point of view, it seems to us that the Mormons have acquired the right to possess that region which they alone have shown the capacity to make valuable, and as they cannot enjoy the possession in common with the United States, that they have the right to enjoy it by themselves. And, in a military point of view, it seems to us that they have every chance of maintaining their possession against all comers. Why should they be troubled, especially when the disturbers are likely to get the worst of it."

From Cincinnati—Onward and Upward.

Professor O. Spencer writes, Dec. 2nd, that he has in contemplation the publication of a monthly magazine from that place so soon as he can receive assurances of support that will justify a commencement. We are pleased with this resolution, and hope that the friends of science and true religion everywhere, and the Saints in particular, will afford him that encouragement which his commanding talents and laudable purpose so richly merit.

Are there not among the Saints and their friends in St. Louis and vicinity, plenty of men both able and willing to come to the aid of Elder Spencer and Elder Taylor, and subscribe for one hundred copies of each publication, to be sent in a package for distribution here? Those who are unwilling to pay in advance, subscribe to pay monthly.

We would by no means limit the patronage of either publication to one hundred subscribers, but we think that number, at least, should be raised to start upon; and we feel assured that if all the money spent by men who profess to be Saints, for liquor and tobacco and other health-destroying and soul-polluting meats and drinks, was paid for these literary productions, it would more than furnish the above compliment of subscribers, and with it, bring increased health, wealth and happiness to the parties.

We extract the following from Elder Spencer's letter:

"You will see a notice of our meeting in the splendid Melodeon Hall, in the "Columbian." We baptized five last Saturday and Sunday—two of them from Springfield and one from Georgetown.—Bro. S. T. Bancroft, from Georgetown, was also ordained an Elder. He is a portrait painter of much promise, and I trust will magnify his holy calling in the Priesthood to the salvation of many. A few more are ready for baptism. The devil seems to roll up his sleeves (under some mistake) to help publish the Gospel, without charge, and all things work for our good, so far as we can discover."

Mr. Francis Lepere has returned to his former place of business, south-east corner of Seventh and Franklin avenue, where he will be happy to wait on his old customers and the public generally, and supply them on favorable terms with everything in the grocery line, as will be seen by advertisement in another column. Call and see.

SALT LAKE MAIL.

The telegraphic dispatches from Independence announce the startling intelligence of the robbery of the mail which left Salt Lake, November 1st, at a point 26 miles this side Fort Laramie, on the 13th inst., and the murder of four men who were in charge of the mail.

In addition to the dispatches which we copy from the daily papers of the 6th, we learn from a private dispatch to a mercantile house in this city, that Mr. Kinkead, who so narrowly escaped, was at Fort Laramie when Mitchell's party left, and would probably recover from his wounds, six arrows having been extracted from him. In addition to the $10,500 in gold taken from Mr. Kinkead, it is supposed that a large amount in drafts was remitted by this mail destined for St. Louis merchants.

We also expected a heavy remittance for the P. E. Fund, and to meet existing liabilities of the church. The mail being rifled, and letters torn open and scattered, there is little hope left of the safety of any such drafts. They will not, to be sure, be an ultimate loss, but they cannot be renewed before next spring, and much inconvenience will result from the delay.

Nothing of the contents of this mail has yet come to hand, but we entertain a hope that at least a portion of the fragments were gathered up and forwarded, which, if they were, may soon be expected. The outward bound mails for October and November were both stopped, and all communications with Salt Lake suspended until spring.

In all the attacks by Indians upon the mail carriers in the mountains, we do not remember of an instance before when they have molested the letters. The idea at once suggests itself, and we instinctively inquire, was any villainous trader leagued with the Indians for sake of plunder?

BRIGHAM YOUNG.

The famous Brigham Young, the Governor of Utah, and Grand High Priest of the Mormons, came near having an inglorious end put to his career, in August last. He went down into his well to recover a lost bucket, when the kerbing tumbled in, the earth followed, and Brigham Young became, for the once, a subterranean Saint. But the zeal of his followers would not permit any such finish to the life of their most faithful shepherd. Spades and shovels were brought into requisition; the harem of the buried Governor assembled in force to aid the saving efforts of the male members of the flock, and, in about two hours they had the gratification of pulling him out, like a forked radish, from his sub-soil bed. He preached that night from the text: "It is well with me."—[Albany Register.

The foregoing luscious tit-bit from some wag of the Albany Register, has lately been going the rounds in the newspapers, and not wishing to deprive any of the enjoyment which its perusal might afford them, we have heretofore refrained from noticing it. Presuming that all have had an opportunity of shaking their sides over it, we now take the liberty to state that the truly wonderful escape with life, after being buried fourteen feet below the surface for the term of 2 3-4 hours, is no fiction. Full details were published in the Desert News at the time. But it was a young man by the name of Brigham H. Young, son of Phineas, and nephew of Gov. Young.

TITHING.

A Short Address by Elder O. Spencer, Delivered Sunday Afternoon, in the St. Louis Conference, Held Nov. 4th and 5th, 1854.

I am happy in having the privilege of standing in the presence of the Saints this afternoon, and would have been more happy still had I been here this time yesterday. I was unexpectedly detained in Chicago 24 hours. At the same time I feel blessed in hearing the voice of my brother, and seeing the countenances of the Saints in this commodious place. I felt like making a few remarks, not that I could add to the progressive feeling of the conference, but I wished to enter into the same spirit as you have, and get the starch and stiffness out of me, and enter into the mellowness of spirit I feel you are in possession of.

With regard to tithes, as this is the subject, I feel to make a few remarks this afternoon, as they seem dictated to me at the present time.

Is there any good grounds for reluctance of paying our tithes? It may be there is, or has seemed to be, in the minds of very excellent and worthy Saints, though I think it owing to their infancy and the want of the proper knowledge of God and his work. I cannot think of any better apology for the Saints than this.

Now suppose we set down an account with the Lord, and know how much we ought to give him. Suppose we begin with reckoning what belongs to us, and take it and put it on the side we call our own, and let the Lord have the other. If he has done or accomplished any good work by us, let him have the benefit of that. If he has organized our frames, regulated and given tone and vitality to our faculties and all our different senses, by which we get good or shun evil, let him have the credit of that. To whom belongs the credit of the senses of seeing, hearing, feeling, and handling intelligently and ingeniously? If we did not frame our own faculties or anything of ourselves—if in him we live, and move, and have our being, set that down to his credit on the balance sheet. If we pursue this subject in this way, let us take the elements. Whose are these? Did we organize them? Did we arrange them so that they are healthful? The atmosphere is favorable to health—this is a valuable item. The earth, with all its productions, its fruits, vegetables, flowers, &c., should all be put down in his favor; and if we continue the subject, shall we not find that ourselves also comes from him. The preponderance of good that pertain to you and me has originated from Him; not only so, but it is upheld and constantly sustained by His providence and Holy Spirit. And if we have got elevated views and notions of righteousness above our fellow man, if we have learned the wisdom to the repentance of our sins, if we believed the truth, to whom are we indebted for this? Who has given us repentance, and administered the gift of faith, humility, and love of righteousness? Did they originate in ourselves or him? If the latter, then he is entitled to all the benefit that can result from those good qualities. Let us then settle up and pay that back to him which belongs to him, and after that take our share of what we have originated and sustained by our own independent course of action and ability. How much would be left on our side? The sum will be pretty small—our treasury will be pretty well reduced. I do not know that it will be as large in quantity as the widow's meal and oil. Perhaps enough on this subject to show where the true treasure is, and who keeps it. Let not any of you think that you can work righteousness or get gain without it is the will of the Lord. If any of you think you can, go and try it; but the wise know better. If we have any good measure of light on the subject, we shall see all is the Lord's. There is nothing but what he has a hand in; consequently whenever we are loath to render unto him a tenth part of our substance, we are not properly humble—we are elevated; we have not our eyes open to see what belongs to him, we are in darkness; yet that darkness we want dispelled; we have not got shut of our selfishness, and we are not enlightened, we are not pure as yet.

The Lord exacts tithes in order to prove us. Take a case as follows: The prophet Elijah comes along and says, I have got no means in my hands, have you got a little meal, madam—just a little for the present necessity. Any oil? Yes. Just a little of both; all will be used up presently. Well, what did he say to this poor Saint? Unbelief whispered, don't you give any of it away, you will want it yourself; he is close-fisted, unkind, unfeeling to widows, to take a portion of her last pittance and he a man at that. Now can you imagine a case where you would be in a more trying condition than this? She might have said, could he not work for a living as I do; do not take my meal or oil; you have hands to work as well as I have. Can you imagine a case when it can be more objectional to have tried a woman, than after this manner; but he said, fetch out the meal and oil. What was the result? The result was that the meal and oil did not diminish.

Some will be ready to say, this was in the days of the prophets, in the days of miracles, but the case is different now. Would not this be the reasoning of the world? Don't they talk the same with regard to the ancient miracles and prophets? But have we not the same priesthood now as then? Is there not the same power as then—the same God yesterday and forever? Will the power of godliness ever be made manifest, but through the priesthood? The Book of Doc. and Cov. says that the power of godliness can only be made manifest through the authority and ordinances of the priesthood. Have we to come to this? Is the power of God to pass through such mere men and ordinances? Why certainly. Here we have partook this afternoon of the bread and wine, and in this we acknowledged that power, and have witnessed that we remember Jesus Christ. What do we remember about him? What is there about him to remember, and why do we ask God to help us to remember him and keep his commandments? Is it that he gave tithes (once in a while a dollar)? No; but that he gave up himself to be broken and bruised, and died for us. That is what we promise to remember; and in partaking of this ordinance we witness before each other we do remember him and will keep his commandments. Let a person come with a keen and lively recollection that Jesus Christ died, that he poured out his blood for us—not that he gave one bushel of wheat out of ten, but that he has given up his life, his body to be broken, that he did not hesitate to give himself up to die. When the Saints remember this, let them not say I am poor, I am destitute, while they have such a friend.

Do you not know that if ever you become pure men and women, and have power to work miracles, you will do it through the priesthood—through your obedience to the ordinances? Hence the woman obeyed the councils of the priesthood and gave the last of her meal, and then the power of God was made manifest in supplying and recruiting it, so that it continued to supply them. The Lord wants us to walk by faith so that we can cheerfully give up all, even if it be an only son; we are to continue to approximate that point. It is an easy thing to give up a tenth. We have not yet come to the shedding of blood, though some have already come to it. Joseph and Hyrum have done it; and many others will have to come to it. But we must not speak of this now; we will talk of dimes and dollars. This will prove men it brings them the fruits of faith.

How did this poor woman get her meal and oil increased but by faith. If such a request was made now it would be asked by some, how do I know but that he is an impostor? How do I know that good will come out of it? If you have lived up to your baptismal vow, according to the best of your ability, and heeded the teachings given of the Holy Spirit. If you have cherished that spirit and have not set yourself up to be some great one, you will know whether a man is an impostor or not. The Spirit was given unto you to lead you into that very truth and all other truths. And by it you know how many potatoes, beans, cucumbers, and how many bushels of corn and wheat constitute your tithes.

Render up your tithes then to God; let him see we have confidence in him and his priesthood, and not that we are so very captious to say we do not want to put it into your hands, we want to put it into the hands of our Heavenly Father.

I think we shall be better satisfied to put it into the hands of anybody he authorizes to receive it, and especially into the hands of men who are set to perfect the Saints and bring us to the unity of the faith and to a perfect knowledge of the Son of God.

That is what we want to come to, and we had better come to that than the best bank. The knowledge of God is better than the treasures of earth, and all is counted dross compared with the excellence of Christ. This knowledge and excellency comes to us through the authority and ordinances of the priesthood if we are Christ's. Without this, men may pray all the time; they may study science but they will be still estranged from God. May God bless you all. Amen.

Correspondence of the Luminary.

ST. LOUIS, DEC. 7th, 1854.

DEAR BRO. SNOW:

Since your last issue, I have made a short visit in the country, in company with Elder Thomas Harris, acting Bishop. We left St. Louis on the 2nd inst. for Gravois, and met our brethren of the Priesthood in Council and completed the business that related to the Branch of Church there, after which I gave them some instruction in regard to tithing and other duties, followed by Bro. Harris. Sunday, 3d, we had a good meeting; the spirit of the Lord was with us, and the Saints felt to rejoice; the Lord enabled us to give them much useful instruction, and all were edified and built up, and feel to do their duties as much as possible in future. There seems to be a much better feeling prevailing among them than heretofore. May God help them and all Saints to His will.

Monday, 4th. Returned to St. Louis; found all well; on Wednesday 6th, I baptized two; the Lord blessed us with the presence of His spirit, for all present felt to rejoice.

The Elder's quorum met on the 5th in the basement of the Church, and they had a glorious time; they felt that the Lord was well pleased with the present organization of this Stake. I will say, also, in regard to all of the quorums, that the Lord has smiled on them when they have met. The Bishops and his Councillors have entered upon their duties with a good spirit, and all things bid fair for doing good. The Saints at Alton are doing well, and a good spirit prevails among them. The Lord seems to be feeling after His Saints, and I hope that all Saints into whose hands this may fall, will strive to do all in their power to build up the kingdom of God. May peace abound in your hearts, is the prayer of your Brother in the Gospel.

MILO ANDRUS.

STORMS.—By Telegraph we have news of a tremendous snow storm, on the 4th inst., throughout the northern and western portions of York State, the snow falling to the depth of three feet. A terrible storm took place on the evening of the 3d inst. sinking the steamers Mercity, Troy, Adrian and several other boats. There was also a terrific gale at Boston on the same night. Serious disasters to the shipping, and numerous vessels at shore.

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

Very angry notes are known to have recently passed between France and England on one side, and Prussia on the other. The design of these protocols is to induce Prussia to declare for or against the Czar. There is little prospect of the war being terminated during the present year. In all probability the allies will have learned wisdom before the commencement of the campaign in 1855. Then, instead of fighting in the Crimea, at the very extremity of the Russian Empire, they may have determined to also carry the war into the vital part—to attack Russia in a central place. This can scarcely be done without the assistance of Prussia, through whose territories the hostile and invading army would have to march, as was done in 1812.

Louis Napoleon has now an army of one hundred and fifty thousand men in the vicinity of Boulogne, a position whence they could readily march upon Russia. It is alleged that this immense force, which will winter in its present encampment, is to be sent against Prussia in the spring unless Frederick William join the allegiance against the Czar. Louis Napoleon, if no other means will do it, (and protocols are only paper pellets,) may desire to entice Prussia by force. An extension of the war appears inevitable, and, should it take place, who knows but that, when the contest is concluded, a new arrangement of European territory may take place, to amend that under the treaty of Vienna, in 1815, by which France may fulfill her long cherished dream of once more obtaining the Rhine as one of its boundaries—an arrangement which, as under the old Napoleon, would take a large slice from Prussia! We are very confident that Louis Napoleon has some political views which he keeps to himself, but bears constantly in mind. By-and-by, perhaps, Prussia may be the "sick man," with France as residuary legatee.—[N. Y. Daily Times.

PREMATURE MATRIMONY.

Marriage is a divine and beautiful arrangement. It was designed by Providence not solely as the means of keeping up population, or as a mere social and economical convenience, but as the blending of two spirits into one—the masculine representing wisdom, and the femenine affection. When there is a true spiritual affinity between the two, then the design is accomplished.

Premature marriages are among the greatest evils of the times; and it would not be a bad idea in these days of reform if an anti-marrying-in-a-hurry society were instituted. Now-a-days people leap into the magic life circle with no more consideration than they would partake of a dinner—little thinking that, when once in, they are there until their end comes. There is but little, sometimes no mutual analysis of disposition, and comparison of taste and affections. They seem to fancy that if there are any discrepancies the fatal Gordian knot, which can be seldom cut, and never united, will harmonize all.

The numbers who have felt this truth—the numbers still feeling it to their heart's core—are incalculable. They recognize it as the great mistake of their lives. The chain is not to them a silken one, but a cable of iron, that tightens around them more and more, crushing out all hope and energy, substituting hate for love, and eating out with rust the very inner life of the soul.

Boys and girls now marry to a greater extent than ever before, instead of waiting till they become full-grown and matured men and women. The young dandy, as soon as he gets out of short jackets, and finds a little furze gathering on his upper lip—and the young miss, as soon as she emerges from the nursery and abbreviated frocks—think they are qualified to assume the most solemn responsibilities of life. And so if "Pa" and "Ma" won't consent, they post off to some Gretna-Green, and there take obligations that, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, they never will cease bitterly to repent.

The Cincinnati Columbian and the Mormons.

The Cincinnati Columbian, of Nov. 27th, has an article nearly a column in length about the Mormons—their policy and movements throughout this country—their general character, and the evils to be apprehended from their existence in the Queen City and other parts of the United States. The article contains, some truth, much misrepresentation, considerable alarm and fearful apprehensions, and decidedly more ignorance than either, so far as relates to the real character and spirit of the Mormon people. He says, "Mormonism can draw within its folds only the designing, the vulgar and the ignorant." Again, "the great body are low, ignorant and debased, with minds feebly lighted with the fire of exhausted passion. Miners of Cornwall, colliers, artizans, and the poorest and most ignorant, wherever they were to be found. Whoever had ideas but a shade removed from the brutes, &c., were fit subjects for Mormon proselyteism."

It is in such effusions as the above that most of the article alluded to abound. Now, this style of thinking and writing about Mormons and Mormonism is decidedly old and stale. Angry zealots, and self-sufficient, malignant scribblers, have so long dealt in this kind of trash, that men of sense and reflection will no longer swallow it. It is becoming unpopular. The Mormons are becoming too well known—their history and achievements begin to tell a different tale—they speak for themselves.

The followers of St. Paul and Peter were "everywhere spoken against, and counted the filth and offscouring of all things," and from that time until the present, those who possessed an unwavering attachment to truth, and the moral courage to embrace it have been traduced by the advocates of old institutions

If it be indeed true what the Columbian intimates that Mormonism gathers into its folds the lowest and most degraded, (those whom modern Christianity leaves to perish in their ignorance and filth,) and transports them to the American Deseret, and there makes of them a thriving and happy people, it fulfills for poor fallen man that mission of mercy which the Gospel of the Redeemer was sent into the world to accomplish, and which the corrupt systems of modern Christianity has failed to effect.

That our readers may know the cause why the Columbian indulges in such a train of epithets, we quote its language a little farther:

"It is no longer Mormon policy to limit the pastures of their holy flocks to the bounds of Utah.—Colonies are to be formed and churches established in all the principal cities of the Union.

The seductive pleasures of polygamy are to be thrown open as a step in advance of our present civilization. This is no idle speculation, and these things are not to be done in a corner. The Priests are already upon the ground, and our largest and most fashionable public hall is already occupied by regular Sunday service. We know that emigrants are soon expected to establish themselves in trades and manufactures, and that the leaders are to-day in our city, making preparations for their arrival. We are told by one of their own body that near 2,000 Mormons are already settled in St. Louis, and that it is expected that a corresponding number will soon find a home in our own city."

Here we have set before us the cause for this great alarm. These are the astounding facts which have startled the Columbian from its stupor, and aroused that sentinel to sound the tocsin of war and square himself for the fight.

In another place he refers to "one hundred thousand Mormons now in Europe," and shipload after shipload arriving in our ports, &c. What! and ageing "to establish themselves in trades and manufactures in our city, as well as other cities of the Union." Even those Saints "from the black soil of degredation in Europe," whose "ideas are but a shade above the brutes!" 'Tis "passing strange"—was ever the like before known? Surely is this not a sufficient cause of alarm for the 23,000,000 of American people?

It is well known that for the last fifteen years there has been an organized branch of the Saints in Cincinnati, and for the last ten years there have been in St. Louis from one to three thousand, all the time, varying with the tide of emigration, and they do now, and ever have, formed by far the better portion of the foreign population of this city. Whether as servants, common laborers, artists, mechanics, shop-keepers, dealers or overseers, they have enjoyed and continue to enjoy a larger share of confidence and trust than any other equal number of the foreign population; and here permit us to ask, when have the Saints ever been mixed up in the noisy and disgraceful proceedings that have marked the history of this city?

It has often been a subject of remark and complaint with the English journals that the Mormons were taking off, not the dregs of their society, but their best artisans and mechanics—their most useful citizens; and it is the more common complaint of business men in this city and elsewhere, that when our people are established in places of profit and trust, they cannot keep them after the time which they have fixed upon for gathering with their brethren—no increase of wages will tempt them to remain.

The Cincinnati Columbian says in its closing paragraph: "No good citizen could look upon the establishment of a Mormon colony in our midst without deep regret, and without fearing the recurrence of events we had hoped would hereafter be strangers to our history."

Here is an illusion to the scenes of murder, robbery, plunder, fire and sword that have marked the bloody persecutions which our people have endured in Illinois and Missouri.

But know ye, oh ye people of Cincinnati, and of the whole world, that these scenes of blood—these indellible stains upon American history, are chargeable mainly upon such defamers of Mormon character, such fomenters of hate, such hypocritical pretended guardians of public morals, such blind leaders of the blind as the Daily Columbian, and other similar journals, who, while they aspire to guide public opinion, are themselves the slaves of prejudice and bigotry, catering for a vicious public taste—pampering the basest passions of the vile, and are destitute of those noble and generous impulses of universal charity and good will to man, which would enable them rightly to tone public feeling, and hold in check the turbulent spirit of popular excitement to which the multitude are but too prone.

LOOK ON THIS AND THEN ON THAT.

'Tis truly amusing to observe the ease with which political navigators adjust their sails to conflicting breezes. A few weeks since the Democrat, of this city, under the head of "Mormon War," furnished its readers a very spicy article, in which it quotes and endorses the following, from the Charleston Mercury:

"Why should the Federal Government parly and temporize, and seek by expedients of conciliation to postpone the inevitable conflict? Nothing can be gained by delay or concession. To talk of compromising with Mormonism, or of tolerating it in the least repulsive of its aspects, is to insult the reason and the conscience of the country. Relentless repression is the only cure for the evil, and the only policy which the good sense of the public will approve. The work should be done quickly. * * It is sound policy in the President to grapple with the difficulty at once, and with a resolution to concede nothing to the pretensions of Mormonism."

Violent and hot-headed as these editors appear, yet even these pause and give place to a sober second thought, for this same Democrat more recently furnishes us, from the Charleston Mercury, with the following:

"Practical View of the Mormons.—Attention is now strongly attracted to this strange people—strange in the monstrous absurdity of their faith, in the terrible vicisitudes of their history, in their present unassailable isolation, and in their wonderful prosperity. They have found a country miraculously like that of the old Israelites, with its Dead Sea, its Lake of Tiberias, its connecting river of Jordon, its terrible desert, its wild mountains, and its valleys flowing with milk and honey. They have reclaimed this seemingly impracticable wilderness, and made it to them fruithful with all the best products of agriculture. They have built cities and established civilization after their fashion, in a region which, according to the common Anglo-Saxon mode of valueing land, was absolutely uninhabitable. Their agriculture depends altogether on artificial irrigation.

Looking at the matter, then, in a moral point of view, it seems to us that the Mormons have acquired the right to possess that region which they alone have shown the capacity to make valuable, and as they cannot enjoy the possession in common with the United States, that they have the right to enjoy it by themselves. And, in a military point of view, it seems to us that they have every chance of maintaining their possession against all comers. Why should they be troubled, especially when the disturbers are likely to get the worst of it."

From Cincinnati—Onward and Upward.

Professor O. Spencer writes, Dec. 2nd, that he has in contemplation the publication of a monthly magazine from that place so soon as he can receive assurances of support that will justify a commencement. We are pleased with this resolution, and hope that the friends of science and true religion everywhere, and the Saints in particular, will afford him that encouragement which his commanding talents and laudable purpose so richly merit.

Are there not among the Saints and their friends in St. Louis and vicinity, plenty of men both able and willing to come to the aid of Elder Spencer and Elder Taylor, and subscribe for one hundred copies of each publication, to be sent in a package for distribution here? Those who are unwilling to pay in advance, subscribe to pay monthly.

We would by no means limit the patronage of either publication to one hundred subscribers, but we think that number, at least, should be raised to start upon; and we feel assured that if all the money spent by men who profess to be Saints, for liquor and tobacco and other health-destroying and soul-polluting meats and drinks, was paid for these literary productions, it would more than furnish the above compliment of subscribers, and with it, bring increased health, wealth and happiness to the parties.

We extract the following from Elder Spencer's letter:

"You will see a notice of our meeting in the splendid Melodeon Hall, in the "Columbian." We baptized five last Saturday and Sunday—two of them from Springfield and one from Georgetown.—Bro. S. T. Bancroft, from Georgetown, was also ordained an Elder. He is a portrait painter of much promise, and I trust will magnify his holy calling in the Priesthood to the salvation of many. A few more are ready for baptism. The devil seems to roll up his sleeves (under some mistake) to help publish the Gospel, without charge, and all things work for our good, so far as we can discover."

Mr. Francis Lepere has returned to his former place of business, south-east corner of Seventh and Franklin avenue, where he will be happy to wait on his old customers and the public generally, and supply them on favorable terms with everything in the grocery line, as will be seen by advertisement in another column. Call and see.

SALT LAKE MAIL.

The telegraphic dispatches from Independence announce the startling intelligence of the robbery of the mail which left Salt Lake, November 1st, at a point 26 miles this side Fort Laramie, on the 13th inst., and the murder of four men who were in charge of the mail.

In addition to the dispatches which we copy from the daily papers of the 6th, we learn from a private dispatch to a mercantile house in this city, that Mr. Kinkead, who so narrowly escaped, was at Fort Laramie when Mitchell's party left, and would probably recover from his wounds, six arrows having been extracted from him. In addition to the $10,500 in gold taken from Mr. Kinkead, it is supposed that a large amount in drafts was remitted by this mail destined for St. Louis merchants.

We also expected a heavy remittance for the P. E. Fund, and to meet existing liabilities of the church. The mail being rifled, and letters torn open and scattered, there is little hope left of the safety of any such drafts. They will not, to be sure, be an ultimate loss, but they cannot be renewed before next spring, and much inconvenience will result from the delay.

Nothing of the contents of this mail has yet come to hand, but we entertain a hope that at least a portion of the fragments were gathered up and forwarded, which, if they were, may soon be expected. The outward bound mails for October and November were both stopped, and all communications with Salt Lake suspended until spring.

In all the attacks by Indians upon the mail carriers in the mountains, we do not remember of an instance before when they have molested the letters. The idea at once suggests itself, and we instinctively inquire, was any villainous trader leagued with the Indians for sake of plunder?

BRIGHAM YOUNG.

The famous Brigham Young, the Governor of Utah, and Grand High Priest of the Mormons, came near having an inglorious end put to his career, in August last. He went down into his well to recover a lost bucket, when the kerbing tumbled in, the earth followed, and Brigham Young became, for the once, a subterranean Saint. But the zeal of his followers would not permit any such finish to the life of their most faithful shepherd. Spades and shovels were brought into requisition; the harem of the buried Governor assembled in force to aid the saving efforts of the male members of the flock, and, in about two hours they had the gratification of pulling him out, like a forked radish, from his sub-soil bed. He preached that night from the text: "It is well with me."—[Albany Register.

The foregoing luscious tit-bit from some wag of the Albany Register, has lately been going the rounds in the newspapers, and not wishing to deprive any of the enjoyment which its perusal might afford them, we have heretofore refrained from noticing it. Presuming that all have had an opportunity of shaking their sides over it, we now take the liberty to state that the truly wonderful escape with life, after being buried fourteen feet below the surface for the term of 2 3-4 hours, is no fiction. Full details were published in the Desert News at the time. But it was a young man by the name of Brigham H. Young, son of Phineas, and nephew of Gov. Young.

TITHING.

A Short Address by Elder O. Spencer, Delivered Sunday Afternoon, in the St. Louis Conference, Held Nov. 4th and 5th, 1854.

I am happy in having the privilege of standing in the presence of the Saints this afternoon, and would have been more happy still had I been here this time yesterday. I was unexpectedly detained in Chicago 24 hours. At the same time I feel blessed in hearing the voice of my brother, and seeing the countenances of the Saints in this commodious place. I felt like making a few remarks, not that I could add to the progressive feeling of the conference, but I wished to enter into the same spirit as you have, and get the starch and stiffness out of me, and enter into the mellowness of spirit I feel you are in possession of.

With regard to tithes, as this is the subject, I feel to make a few remarks this afternoon, as they seem dictated to me at the present time.

Is there any good grounds for reluctance of paying our tithes? It may be there is, or has seemed to be, in the minds of very excellent and worthy Saints, though I think it owing to their infancy and the want of the proper knowledge of God and his work. I cannot think of any better apology for the Saints than this.

Now suppose we set down an account with the Lord, and know how much we ought to give him. Suppose we begin with reckoning what belongs to us, and take it and put it on the side we call our own, and let the Lord have the other. If he has done or accomplished any good work by us, let him have the benefit of that. If he has organized our frames, regulated and given tone and vitality to our faculties and all our different senses, by which we get good or shun evil, let him have the credit of that. To whom belongs the credit of the senses of seeing, hearing, feeling, and handling intelligently and ingeniously? If we did not frame our own faculties or anything of ourselves—if in him we live, and move, and have our being, set that down to his credit on the balance sheet. If we pursue this subject in this way, let us take the elements. Whose are these? Did we organize them? Did we arrange them so that they are healthful? The atmosphere is favorable to health—this is a valuable item. The earth, with all its productions, its fruits, vegetables, flowers, &c., should all be put down in his favor; and if we continue the subject, shall we not find that ourselves also comes from him. The preponderance of good that pertain to you and me has originated from Him; not only so, but it is upheld and constantly sustained by His providence and Holy Spirit. And if we have got elevated views and notions of righteousness above our fellow men, if we have learned the wisdom to the repentance of our sins, if we believed the truth, to whom are we indebted for this? Who has given us repentance, and administered the gift of faith, humility, and love of righteousness? Did they originate in ourselves or him? If the latter, then he is entitled to all the benefit that can result from those good qualities. Let us then settle up and pay that back to him which belongs to him, and after that take our share of what we have originated and sustained by our own independent course of action and ability. How much would be left on our side? The sum will be pretty small—our treasury will be pretty well reduced. I do not know that it will be as large in quantity as the widow's meal and oil. Perhaps enough on this subject to show where the true treasure is, and who keeps it. Let not any of you think that you can work righteousness or get gain without it is the will of the Lord. If any of you think you can, go and try it; but the wise know better. If we have any good measure of light on the subject, we shall see all is the Lord's. There is nothing but what he has a hand in; consequently whenever we are loath to render unto him a tenth part of our substance, we are not properly humble—we are elevated; we have not our eyes open to see what belongs to him, we are in darkness; yet that darkness we want dispelled; we have not got shut of our selfishness, and we are not enlightened, we are not pure as yet.

The Lord exacts tithes in order to prove us. Take a case as follows: The prophet Elijah comes along and says, I have got no means in my hands, have you got a little meal, madam—just a little for the present necessity. Any oil? Yes. Just a little of both; all will be used up presently. Well, what did he say to this poor Saint? Unbelief whispered, don't you give any of it away, you will want it yourself; he is close-fisted, unkind, unfeeling to widows, to take a portion of her last pittance and he a man at that. Now can you imagine a case where you would be in a more trying condition than this? She might have said, could he not work for a living as I do; do not take my meal or oil; you have hands to work as well as I have. Can you imagine a case when it can be more objectional to have tried a woman, than after this manner; but he said, fetch out the meal and oil. What was the result? The result was that the meal and oil did not diminish.

Some will be ready to say, this was in the days of the prophets, in the days of miracles, but the case is different now. Would not this be the reasoning of the world? Don't they talk the same with regard to the ancient miracles and prophets? But have we not the same priesthood now as then? Is there not the same power as then—the same God yesterday and forever? Will the power of godliness ever be made manifest, but through the priesthood? The Book of Doc. and Cov. says that the power of godliness can only be made manifest through the authority and ordinances of the priesthood. Have we to come to this? Is the power of God to pass through such mere men and ordinances? Why certainly. Here we have partook this afternoon of the bread and wine, and in this we acknowledged that power, and have witnessed that we remember Jesus Christ. What do we remember about him? What is there about him to remember, and why do we ask God to help us to remember him and keep his commandments? Is it that he gave tithes (once in a while a dollar)? No; but that he gave up himself to be broken and bruised, and died for us. That is what we promise to remember; and in partaking of this ordinance we witness before each other we do remember him and will keep his commandments. Let a person come with a keen and lively recollection that Jesus Christ died, that he poured out his blood for us—not that he gave one bushel of wheat out of ten, but that he has given up his life, his body to be broken, that he did not hesitate to give himself up to die. When the Saints remember this, let them not say I am poor, I am destitute, while they have such a friend.

Do you not know that if ever you become pure men and women, and have power to work miracles, you will do it through the priesthood—through your obedience to the ordinances? Hence the woman obeyed the councils of the priesthood and gave the last of her meal, and then the power of God was made manifest in supplying and recruiting it, so that it continued to supply them. The Lord wants us to walk by faith so that we can cheerfully give up all, even if it be an only son: we are to continue to approximate that point. It is an easy thing to give up a tenth. We have not yet come to the shedding of blood, though some have already come to it. Joseph and Hyrum have done it; and many others will have to come to it. But we must not speak of this now; we will talk of dimes and dollars. This will prove men it brings them the fruits of faith.

How did this poor woman get her meal and oil increased but by faith. If such a request was made now it would be asked by some, how do I know but that he is an impostor? How do I know that good will come out of it? If you have lived up to your baptismal vow, according to the best of your ability, and heeded the teachings given of the Holy Spirit. If you have cherished that spirit and have not set yourself up to be some great one, you will know whether a man is an impostor or not. The Spirit was given unto you to lead you into that very truth and all other truths. And by it you know how many potatoes, beans, cucumbers, and how many bushels of corn and wheat constitute your tithes.

Render up your tithes then to God; let him see we have confidence in him and his priesthood, and not that we are so very captious to say we do not want to put it into your hands, we want to put it into the hands of our Heavenly Father.

I think we shall be better satisfied to put it into the hands of anybody he authorizes to receive it, and especially into the hands of men who are set to perfect the Saints and bring us to the unity of the faith and to a perfect knowledge of the Son of God.

That is what we want to come to, and we had better come to that than the best bank. The knowledge of God is better than the treasures of earth, and all is counted dross compared with the excellence of Christ. This knowledge and excellency comes to us through the authority and ordinances of the priesthood if we are Christ's. Without this, men may pray all the time; they may study science but they will be still estranged from God. May God bless you all. Amen.

Correspondence of the Luminary.

St. Louis, Dec. 7th, 1854.

Dear Bro. Snow:

Since your last issue, I have made a short visit in the country, in company with Elder Thomas Harris, acting Bishop. We left St. Louis on the 2nd inst. for Gravois, and met our brethren of the Priesthood in Council and completed the business that related to the Branch of Church there, after which I gave them some instruction in regard to tithing and other duties, followed by Bro. Harris. Sunday, 3d, we had a good meeting; the spirit of the Lord was with us, and the Saints felt to rejoice; the Lord enabled us to give them much useful instruction, and all were edified and built up, and feel to do their duties as much as possible in future. There seems to be a much better feeling prevailing among them than heretofore. May God help them and all Saints to His will.

Monday, 4th. Returned to St. Louis; found all well; on Wednesday 6th, I baptized two; the Lord blessed us with the presence of His spirit, for all present felt to rejoice.

The Elder's quorum met on the 5th in the basement of the Church, and they had a glorious time, they felt that the Lord was well pleased with the present organization of this Stake. I will say, also, in regard to all of the quorums, that the Lord has smiled on them when they have met. The Bishop and his Councilors have entered upon their duties with a good spirit, and all things bid fair for doing good. The Saints at Alton are doing well, and a good spirit prevails among them. The Lord seems to be feeling after His Saints, and I hope that all Saints into whose hands this may fall, will strive to do all in their power to build up the kingdom of God. May peace abound in your hearts, is the prayer of your Brother in the Gospel.

Storms.—By Telegraph we have news of a tremendous snow storm, on the 4th inst., throughout the northern and western portions of York State, the snow falling to the depth of three feet. A terrific storm took place on the evening of the 3d inst. sinking the steamers Mercity, Troy, Adrian and several other boats. There was also a terrific gale at Boston on the same night. Serious disasters to the shipping, and numerous vessels at shore.

THE WAR IN EUROPE

Very angry notes are known to have recently passed between France and England on one side, and Prussia on the other. The design of these protocols is to induce Prussia to declare for or against the Czar. There is little prospect of the war being terminated during the present year. In all probability the allies will have learned wisdom before the commencement of the campaign in 1855. Then, instead of fighting in the Crimea, at the very extremity of the Russian Empire, they may have determined to also carry the war into the vital part—to attack Russia in a central place. This can scarcely be done without the assistance of Prussia, through whose territories the hostile and invading army would have to march, as was done in 1812.

Louis Napoleon has now an army of one hundred and fifty thousand men in the vicinity of Boulogne, a position whence they could readily march upon Russia. It is alleged that this immense force, which will winter in its present encampment, is to be sent against Prussia in the spring unless Frederick William join the allegiance against the Czar. Louis Napoleon, if no other means will do it, (and protocols are only paper pellets,) may desire to entice Prussia by force. An extension of the war appears inevitable, and, should it take place, who knows but that, when the contest is concluded, a new arrangement of European territory may take place, to amend that under the treaty of Vienna, in 1815, by which France may fulfill her long cherished dream of once more obtaining the Rhine as one of its boundaries—an arrangement which, as under the old Napoleon, would take a large slice from Prussia! We are very confident that Louis Napoleon has some political views which he keeps to himself, but bears constantly in mind. By-and-by, perhaps, Prussia may be the "sick man," with France as residuary legatee.—[N. Y. Daily Times.

PREMATURE MATRIMONY.

Marriage is a divine and beautiful arrangement. It was designed by Providence not solely as the means of keeping up population, or as a mere social and economical convenience, but as the blending of two spirits into one—the masculine representing wisdom, and the femenine affection. When there is a true spiritual affinity between the two, then the design is accomplished.

Premature marriages are among the greatest evils of the times; and it would not be a bad idea in these days of reform if an anti-marrying-in-a-hurry society were instituted. Now-a-days people leap into the magic life circle with no more consideration than they would partake of a dinner—little thinking that, when once in, they are there until their end comes. There is but little, sometimes no mutual analysis of disposition, and comparison of taste and affections. They seem to fancy that if there are any discrepancies the fatal Gordian knot, which can be seldom cut, and never united, will harmonize all.

The numbers who have felt this truth—the numbers still feeling it to their heart's core—are incalculable. They recognize it as the great mistake of their lives. The chain is not to them a silken one, but a cable of iron, that tightens around them more and more, crushing out all hope and energy, substituting hate for love, and eating out with rust the very inner life of the soul.

Boys and girls now marry to a greater extent than ever before, instead of waiting till they become full-grown and matured men and women. The young dandy, as soon as he gets out of short jackets, and finds a little furze gathering on his upper lip—and the young miss, as soon as she emerges from the nursery and abbreviated frocks—think they are qualified to assume the most solemn responsibilities of life. And so if "Pa" and "Ma" won't consent, they post off to some Gretna-Green, and there take obligations that, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, they never will cease bitterly to repent.

Marriage should never be the result of fancy. The ball-room and the evening party rarely develop real character. Under the exhilarating influence of the dance, the glare of lights, and the merry quib and joke, the disolute young man may appear amiable, and the slatternly scold lovable. Matches made at such places, or under similar circumstances, are not of the class that originate in heaven. They more generally are conceived in the opposite place, and bring forth only iniquity. The true way to learn each other is to do it at home, in the parlor, in the kitchen and on occasions that test the temper. We see the result of these unions in the almost daily divorces that are taking place—in the running away of husbands, leaving their wives and children to starve—and in the elopement of wives. Not only this, but we witness it in broken-spirited men, made old in the prime of life, struggling on for more food and clothing and shelter, and in women, cross, dirty, sluttish and wrinkled.

It would be quite impossible for us to depict faithfully the multitude of physical and moral evils that result from these sinful alliances, for sinful they are. They ruin the body, corrupt the morals, and stultify the mind. And the result does not stop with husband and wife. There are the children. They partake of the feebleness and vices of the parents, both physical and moral, and go out into the busy world stunted and guarled. God pity them?

We would not be understood as speaking against the institution of marriage. It is holy, beautiful and beneficent. But let every one take his mate or none. Let not the brave eagle pair with the stupid owl, nor the gentle dove with the carrion crow. Like should have like. It is a glorious sight to see two old people, who have weathered the storms, and basked in the sunshine of life together, go hand in hand, lovingly and truthfully, down the gentle declivity of time with no angers, no jealousies, nor hatreds garnered up against each other, and looking with hope and joy to the everlasting youth of heaven, where they two shall be one forever. That is true marriage—for it is the marriage of spirit with spirit. Their love is woven into a wool of gold, that neither time, nor death, nor eternity can sever.—[The Eclectic.

TUNNEL UNDER THE OHIO.

"The Louisville Journal has an article upon the prospects and feasibility of the construction of a tunnel under the Ohio river at Louisville, Ky., and at Jeffersonville, Ind. A charter for the work was granted by the Kentucky Legislature, March 6, 1854; and the right of way given by the city of Louisville, and the work forever exempted from taxation for city purposes, on the 27th of May 1854. The Fort Wayne and Southern Railroad Company have accepted the charter and the release of the right of way; and propose making up the stock, and, if possible, to put the work under contract this fall or early in the spring. The tunnel will be exclusively for railroad purposes, with a double track, adapted to the use of all the roads of the different guages. It will be 28 feet wide in the clear, and 17 feet high, perpendicularly, from the centre of each track. The arching will be sixty feet less than two miles in length. The descending grades into the tunnel, at either end, will be only eighty feet per mile on a straight line. From the head of the grade on one side to the head of the grade on the opposite side of the river will be but two miles and a-half. The tunnel will be constructed in the river by excavating a channel or pit in the rock and arching over with the material excavated—limestone rock of the best quality. The work has been surveyed and the cost estimated at $100,000. It is proposed to raise this sum by a cash subscription, no part of which is made payable until the whole sum is subscribed. Whenever all the stock is taken then it becomes payable in equal semi-annual instalments."

SYNOPSIS OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

LOUISVILLE, December 5.

The President commences by noticing the present year as one marked by unusual severity of disease—casualties unparalleled, and one entire crop being cut off—still we are peaceful and prosperous. Notwithstanding our avoiding entangling alliances, and our remoteness from Europe, an increasing disposition is manifested by some of its governments to supervise, and in some respects direct our foreign policy, by taking us in the account adjusting balance power. Leaving trans-atlantic nations to adjust their own political system, we assert our right to be exempt from their annoying interference. Our refusal to be subjected to their peculiar system has often created jealous distrust of our conduct, which is not warranted by our policy. The conduct of navy and army and our territorial expansion being amicable and just. Long experience has shown that when principal powers of Europe at war, the rights of neutral nations have been endangered. Our government maintains doctrine that free ships make free goods. Efforts have been made to establish this principle as international law, by an appeal of our government to all the nations of Europe. Russia agreed. No other powers yet finally acted. The King of Prussia proposes additional article renouncing privateering. But, however, to this we cannot agree, because our regular navy is too disproportionate to the extent of our commerce to be protected. The proposal to surrender the right to employ privateers, is professedly founded upon the principle that private property is unoffending. Non-combatants, though enemies, should be exempt from ravages of war; but this proposal goes but a little way in carrying out that principle, which equally requires that such private property should not be seized or molested by national ships of war. Should the leading powers in Europe concur in proposing as a rule international law to exempt private property upon the ocean from seizure, by public armed cruisers, as well as by privateers, the United States will readily meet them upon that broad ground.

He refers commendingly to the Reciprocity Treaty, the difference of opinion between the United States and Great Britain, as to the boundary line of Washington Territory, which has already led to difficulties on the part of citizens and local authorities. Recommends provision to be made for commission for the purpose of running and establishing the line in controversy; certain stipulations of the 3d and 4th articles of the treaty concluded by the United States with Great Britain, in 1846, regarding possession and rights of Hudson Bay Company and property of Puget's Sound Agricultural Company have given rise to serious disputes, and is important to all concerned that some means of settling them amicably be devised. There is reason to believe that arrangements can be made for the extinguishment of the rights in question, embracing also right of the Hudson Bay Company to navigation of the river Columbia. Consul Dillen affair settled with France by satisfactory explanations. Soule difficulty mentioned; it was settled by withdrawal of his exclusion and unequivocal disavowal of any intention denying him right of transit. Correspondence on the subject communicated. The position of affairs with Spain remain as at the close of last session.—Internal agitation has recently convulsed that country. The late ministers were violently expelled from power, and men of very different views in relation to its internal affairs have succeeded. Since this change there has been no propitious opportunity to resume and press on negotiations for the adjustment of serious questions of difficulty between the Spanish Government and the United States. There is reason to believe that our minister will find the present Government more favorably inclined than the preceding one to comply with our just demands, and make suitable arrangements restoring perfect harmony and preserving peace between the two countries.

Expects Denmark will yield to our request of discontinuance of Elsinora Sound's dues. Japan expedition announced. Our minister is unsuccessful this far getting claims of Americans against Mexico settled, probably because of the disturbed state of the country.

Our efforts to open the Amazon river, not yet successful. Recommends it as the duty of the Government to secure the avenues of transit across the Isthmus of Central America. Question with Britain still unsettled. Serious misunderstanding having arisen as to the import of some provisions of the Clayton and Bulwer treaty incidentally.

The President here fully narrates the Greytown difficulty, and sustains Borland and the bombardment, on the ground that Greytown was a piratical resort only, and that the failure of this Government to punish them, would have left them impressed with the idea, that they might persevere with impunity in their career of violence and plunder. This transaction has been a subject of complaint on the part of some foreign powers.

The revenue last year from all sources was $73,549,705 20. The expenditures exclusive of payment of debt was $51,618,249. Balance in the Treasury $20,137,000. It is estimated that the receipts this year will exceed expenses at least $15,000,000.

Recommendation of reduction of tariff renewed. An additional military force to protect frontier against Indians; urged an increased pay to army officers; four new regiments, two new infantry, two mounted men and reform organization army. Retired list; promotion in part by merit instead of seniority. Apprentice system for navy recommended; also increase of naval force. Additional legislation to promote security of passengers at sea, urged.

Expenditure of Post Office over receipts of last year, $1,753,000. Renews views of last year on the subject of grants of land for railroad purposes, but rather discourages all such projects. Views on river and harbor; veto promised in another message; some judicial reference urged. Invocation of Divine blessing, and closes.

BOSTON, December 5th.

The ship Arcadian, of Warren, Mass., from Antwerp to New York, was wrecked on Sable Island, November 26th. The vessel was totally lost. Crew and passengers saved.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The following items of Congressional news we glean from the daily papers of this city up to this date.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Mr. Atchison's letter read in the Senate, resigning his post as President of the Senate. Present 37 Senators. Mr. Cass in the chair as President pro tem. for the day.

House called to order at 12 o'clock. Roll called. One hundred and ninety-seven answered to their names.

Chas. S. Lewis, of Va.; Teller and Goodwin, of N. Y.; and Bristow, of Ky., were sworn in as new members.

The President's message received and read. Referred to the Committee of the whole on the State of the Union. Twenty thousand extra copies ordered to be printed. Adjourned.

The Secretary of the Treasury reports receipts for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854, from all sources, $73,549,705, which, with balance in Treasury 1st July, 1853, $21,942,842, gives total for service year, $95, 492,597; expenditures of the year, $75,354,690, leaving balance in the Treasury 1st July, $20,137,967. Receipts quarter, ending Sept. 30th. 1854, $21,521,302; estimates for remaining three quarters fiscal year, $42,500,000.

The amount of public debt outstanding first July, 1854, was $47,180,506. The Secretary anticipated a falling off of customs, owing to the Reciprocity treaty and short crops.

The tonnage of the United States exhibits an increase for the year of 395,892 tons. Imports for the year, 26,321,317 in excess of exports.

The flattering state of the revenue induces the Secretary again to call the attention of Congress to the propriety of reducing revenues from customs. He recommends but three rates of duty instead of the eight schedules now in use.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5, P. M.—The Senate was called to order by the Secretary at a quarter before 1 o'clock. Jones, of Iowa, offered a resolution that the Senate proceed forthwith to the election of President pro tem. After debate the resolution was adopted. The balloting was as follows: Bright 24, Dawson 2, Chase 6, Foot 1, Badger 1. Bright was declared elected and took the chair.

HOUSE.—A bill was introduced by Mr. Latham extending time for the California Land Commissioners to complete their duties.

Mr. Taylor, of Tennessee, gave notice of a bill altering naturalization laws.

Mr. Sellers gave notice of bills to prevent enlistment of foreigners into the army and navy, and to prevent pauper and convict emigration.

WASHINGTON, December 5.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—The Speaker announced the Standing Committees. They are the same as last year, except where vacancies had to be supplied.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury was ordered to be printed.

Resolutions were introduced instructing the Committee on Ways and Means to bring in a bill in regard to the duties on railroad iron. Credits of the same were taken up. Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, moved to lay them on the table; which was carried, 97 to 71.

Mr. Sellers' resolution, offered yesterday, relative to the Ostend conference, was taken up. Mr. S. said he did not wish to strike a blow at the Administration, but the general curiosity should be satisfied. He hoped the Ministers did not meet for fillibustering purposes; if from patriotic purposes, let there be light.

Mr. Bayly thought the resolution premature, and said, if nothing took place, there was nothing alarming in it. It was no unusual thing for foreign ministers to communicate with each other. A spirited debate ensued.

Mr. Wentworth followed, seconding the views of Mr. Bayly, and approving the message and foreign policy. Gray advocated the resolutions. It was merely an inquiry, and did not require the communication of anything detrimental to public interests. Messrs. Washburn and Hillyer advocated the bill, Phillips opposed, Bayly took grounds in its favor, Letcher said he would vote for it and would like it better if more were added. He distrusted our Minister at Madrid, and while he was willing Mr. Soule should have a chance of vindicating his innocence, he desired that if guilty his guilt should be made known.

Mr. Taylor, of Ohio, was glad such a resolution was introduced. No man of foreign birth ought to represent this country abroad.

After further debate, a motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs was lost, by 83 against 85, pending which the House adjourned.

CALIFORNIA NEWS.

NEW YORK, December 2, P. M.

The Star of the West arrived at three and a-half o'clock, bringing 200 passengers and $737,000 in specie. Dates from California to November 9th were brought down by the steamer Cortez. Among her passengers are Senator Weller and Hon. J. A. McDougall. The news is of very little importance. Little or no change in commercial matters. Galego and Haxall flour closed at $12 50 to $12 75. Adamantine candles 42 1-2 to 43. Clear bacon 16c; new hams 16 1-2c; lard 17c. Clear pork 22c.

Mining news favorable. Steam frigate Susquehanna, at Honolulu, 20th October; hourly expected at San Francisco, as was also the Mississippi. H. B. M. ship Amphitrite arrived at San Francisco on the 8th. The British and French squadron expected to leave soon after the arrival of the next mail. Vacancy in Supreme Judgeship by the death of Judge Wells not yet filled by Governor. Various candidates spoken of. The most prominent is Judge Fields, of Marysville.

Sonora, from Panama, arrived. Up to the 1st, official returns of the recent election show combined Democratic majority of Congressional vote 12,345. Col. Woodruff killed in a duel by Achillis Kern. Mormons are ordered to leave San Francisco by the 1st of May. Another insurrection had occurred among the State prison convicts; nineteen attempted to escape, but were overpowered by their keepers. One of the three was shot dead. Wm. Sherman elected Comptroller of San Francisco. The Alta California urges the establishment of a State mail route across the plains. Admiral Despontes, of French brig war Obligardo, had left Guyamas and Acapulco, with the object of prosecuting the enquiry concerning the death of Count Boulbon. Citizens of Carson Valley urging on annexation to that place. California Pioneer Adams' Express to St. Louis by way of Salt Lake, started for Los Angelos.

TREMENDOUS CONFLAGRATION.

The whole Row of New Stores upon the District, burnt over, a year and eleven days ago, is now in mouldering ruins.

November 22, 5 o'clock, A. M.

Two hours ago the alarm of fire was given; we hastened to the spot, and found the fire fast progressing, and too far to be distinguished, which originated, as near as could be ascertained, over Martin's Saloon. Near a thousand men were soon on the ground, and very many labored with praise-worthy exertion to save the merchadise. The store of the Messrs. Stutsman & Co. was so far enveloped in flames, that but a small portion of its contents were saved, except the goods, money, and valuable papers. Messrs. Tootle & Jackson, and Pegram & Co. were more fortunate, and saved the greatest portion of their goods. Five new business houses were destroyed. Upon a hasty calculation we should judge the loss would be in the region of $50,000. Stutsman was the most unfortunate, but takes it like a philosipher. The whole spot is still in a blaze, and goods and valuables are promiscuously strewed over the streets, alleys, and vacant places, and are even piled in the creek.—[Council Bluffs Bugle.

PARKVILLE, Mo., Dec. 5, 6 P. M.—We learn by gentleman on Marysville, Blue river, that the Sioux Indians had robbed the Salt Lake mail coming in, and killed the mail carriers, and took $10,500, besides private funds, all the mules and equipage; four men were killed and one left for dead, who survived and escaped. Mr. Jones had started to Salt Lake with outward mail, but on hearing of the murder returned.

INDEPENDENCE, Dec. 5.—The Salt Lake mail just arrived, bringing the sad news of the murder of the entire mail party by the Sioux, on the 13th November, twenty-six miles this side of Fort Laramie. Charles A. Kinkead, merchant of Salt Lake City, badly wounded, and robbed of $10,600 in gold. The Indians have sworn that nothing marked with U. S. A. shall pass.

QUEBEC, December 5th.

MORE INDIAN MURDERS.

INDEPENDENCE, Dec. 5, P. M.

The Salt Lake mail, under charge of Mitchell, has just arrived, bringing sad news. On the 13th ult., the mails under charge of John Jameson, coming to the States, was attacked, it is supposed, by parties of Sioux Indians near Dripp's trading post, six miles this side of Fort Laramie, and all of the men killed, to-wit: Jameson, James, Wheeler and Thomas Hackett. Charles A. Kincaid, from Salt Lake, a passenger, was shot and pierced with three or four arrows and left for dead. The mail bags were rifled of their contents, and letters all torn open. Kincaid was robbed of ten thousand five hundred dollars in gold. Seven of the mules were driven off, and one killed on the spot. The mail party of November, outward bound, passed by on the 17th, and found that some traders had taken care of the dead bodies and what was left. No escort could be granted at the post, and the mail parties of November could go no further than Laramie; and that of December also returned to this point, with Mitchell's men, who bring this sad news to some families in this place.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

Is the name of a weekly journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Deseret," in the city of Paris, France, and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interest of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and will be the advocate of its claims—social, moral, political and religious; and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter-day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, and pursue such a course as to him may seem best, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondence in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make the MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints, but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the east instead of the south, and as the MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon-makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route, as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the east.

A list of the prices of staple articles of several of the eastern and western cities will be inserted, as well as the prices current of Utah and California.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, a 'job has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will clear boils, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most as sore burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. MCLEAN—DEAR SIR: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed to give relief when properly applied.

DR. WHITE,

DISCOVERER OF THE

SYMPTOMA TRUTINORIC SYSTEM,

For Diagonising all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs,

May be Consulted daily at his Office, No. 121 PINE ST., between 4th & 5th, from 2 to 5 P. M.

According to well authenticated statistical reports, one out of every six of all the deaths that occur in Europe or America, are from diseases of the lungs alone.

Judging from the above data, there are at the present time within the city of St. Louis, at least,

FIFTEEN THOUSAND

individuals who have disease seated upon their lungs. It is equally true that the Medical Profession, without exception, are unable to detect a disease upon those organs in season to effect a radical cure; and this is the reason why that class of diseases have proved so universally fatal. And hence this new discovery offers the only means extant for detecting pulmonary diseases in their incipient stages, or in time to effect a cure in every case. In all probability, 14,000 out of the above number may escape a premature grave, by at once availing themselves of the benefit of this important discovery.

Parents and Guardians should submit every member of their families to an immediate examination by this New System if they would avoid a responsibility desirable to none but infidels. They should not suffer any pecuniary consideration to deter them from reaping its benefits if they would protect those committed to their charge from one of the most fatal diseases that exists upon this continent. If they rely upon their family physician to apprise them of the existence of this dreadful disease, depend upon it, not one case out of a hundred will ever recover. Heads of families, are you prepared to offer those committed to your responsible charge a sacrifice to prejudice, when these incontrovertable facts are before you? If so, the responsibility rests entirely with you.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.

Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

Marriage should never be the result of fancy. The ball-room and the evening party rarely develop real character. Under the exhilarating influence of the dance, the glare of lights, and the merry quib and joke, the disolute young man may appear amiable, and the slatternly scold lovable. Matches made at such places, or under similar circumstances, are not of the class that originate in heaven. They more generally are conceived in the opposite place, and bring forth only iniquity. The true way to learn each other is to do it at home, in the parlor, in the kitchen and on occasions that test the temper. We see the result of these unions in the almost daily divorces that are taking place—in the running away of husbands, leaving their wives and children to starve—and in the elopement of wives. Not only this, but we witness it in broken-spirited men, made old in the prime of life, struggling on for more food and clothing and shelter, and in women, cross, dirty, sluttish and wrinkled.

It would be quite impossible for us to depict faithfully the multitude of physical and moral evils that result from these sinful alliances, for sinful they are. They ruin the body, corrupt the morals, and stultify the mind. And the result does not stop with husband and wife. There are the children. They partake of the feebleness and vices of the parents, both physical and moral, and go out into the busy world stunted and gnarled. God pity them?

We would not be understood as speaking against the institution of marriage. It is holy, beautiful and beneficent. But let every one take his mate or none. Let not the brave eagle pair with the stupid owl, nor the gentle dove with the carrion crow. Like should have like. It is a glorious sight to see two old people, who have weathered the storms, and basked in the sunshine of life together, go hand in hand, lovingly and truthfully, down the gentle declivity of time with no angers, no jealousies, nor hatreds garnered up against each other, and looking with hope and joy to the everlasting youth of heaven, where they two shall be one forever. That is true marriage—for it is the marriage of spirit with spirit. Their love is woven into a wool of gold, that neither time, nor death, nor eternity can sever.—[The Eclectic.

TUNNEL UNDER THE OHIO.

"The Louisville Journal has an article upon the prospects and feasibility of the construction of a tunnel under the Ohio river at Louisville, Ky., and at Jeffersonville, Ind. A charter for the work was granted by the Kentucky Legislature, March 6, 1854; and the right of way given by the city of Louisville, and the work forever exempted from taxation for city purposes, on the 27th of May 1854. The Fort Wayne and Southern Railroad Company have accepted the charter and the release of the right of way; and propose making up the stock, and, if possible, to put the work under contract this fall or early in the spring. The tunnel will be exclusively for railroad purposes, with a double track, adapted to the use of all the roads of the different guages. It will be 28 feet wide in the clear, and 17 feet high, perpendicularly, from the centre of each track. The arching will be sixty feet less than two miles in length. The descending grades into the tunnel, at either end, will be only eighty feet per mile on a straight line. From the head of the grade on one side to the head of the grade on the opposite side of the river will be but two miles and a-half. The tunnel will be constructed in the river by excavating a channel or pit in the rock and arching over with the material excavated—limestone rock of the best quality. The work has been surveyed and the cost estimated at $100,000. It is proposed to raise this sum by a cash subscription, no part of which is made payable until the whole sum is subscribed. Whenever all the stock is taken then it becomes payable in equal semi-annual instalments."

SYNOPSIS OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Louisville, December 5.

The President commences by noticing the present year as one marked by unusual severity of disease—casualties unparalleled, and one entire crop being cut off—still we are peaceful and prosperous. Notwithstanding our avoiding entangling alliances, and our remoteness from Europe, an increasing disposition is manifested by some of its governments to supervise, and in some respects direct our foreign policy, by taking us in the account adjusting balance power. Leaving trans-atlantic nations to adjust their own political system, we assert our right to be exempt from their annoying interference. Our refusal to be subjected to their peculiar system has often created jealous distrust of our conduct, which is not warranted by our policy. The conduct of navy and army and our territorial expansion being amicable and just. Long experience has shown that when principal powers of Europe at war, the rights of neutral nations have been endangered. Our government maintains doctrine that free ships make free goods. Efforts have been made to establish this principle as international law, by an appeal of our government to all the nations of Europe. Russia agreed. No other powers yet finally acted. The King of Prussia proposes additional article renouncing privateering. But, however, to this we cannot agree, because our regular navy is too disproportionate to the extent of our commerce to be protected. The proposal to surrender the right to employ privateers, is professedly founded upon the principle that private property is unoffending. Non-combatants, though enemies, should be exempt from ravages of war; but this proposal goes but a little way in carrying out that principle, which equally requires that such private property should not be seized or molested by national ships of war. Should the leading powers in Europe concur in proposing as a rule international law to exempt private property upon the ocean from seizure, by public armed cruisers, as well as by privateers, the United States will readily meet them upon that broad ground.

He refers commendingly to the Reciprocity Treaty, the difference of opinion between the United States and Great Britain, as to the boundary line of Washington Territory, which has already led to difficulties on the part of citizens and local authorities. Recommends provision to be made for commission for the purpose of running and establishing the line in controversy; certain stipulations of the 3d and 4th articles of the treaty concluded by the United States with Great Britain, in 1846, regarding possession and rights of Hudson Bay Company and property of Puget's Sound Agricultural Company have given rise to serious disputes, and is important to all concerned that some means of settling them amicably be devised. There is reason to believe that arrangements can be made for the extinguishment of the rights in question, embracing also right of the Hudson Bay Company to navigation of the river Columbia. Consul Dillon affair settled with France by satisfactory explanations. Soule difficulty mentioned; it was settled by withdrawal of his exclusion and unequivocal disavowal of any intention denying him right of transit. Correspondence on the subject communicated. The position of affairs with Spain remain as at the close of last session.—Internal agitation has recently convulsed that country. The late ministers were violently expelled from power, and men of very different views in relation to its internal affairs have succeeded. Since this change there has been no propitious opportunity to resume and press on negotiations for the adjustment of serious questions of difficulty between the Spanish Government and the United States. There is reason to believe that our minister will find the present Government more favorably inclined than the preceding one to comply with our just demands, and make suitable arrangements restoring perfect harmony and preserving peace between the two countries.

Expects Denmark will yield to our request of discontinuance of Elsinora Sound's dues. Japan expedition announced. Our minister is unsuccessful this far getting claims of Americans against Mexico settled, probably because of the disturbed state of the country.

Our efforts to open the Amazon river, not yet successful. Recommends it as the duty of the Government to secure the avenues of transit across the Isthmus of Central America. Question with Britain still unsettled. Serious misunderstanding having arisen as to the import of some provisions of the Clayton and Bulwer treaty incidentally.

The President here fully narrates the Greytown difficulty, and sustains Borland and the bombardment, on the ground that Greytown was a piratical resort only, and that the failure of this Government to punish them, would have left them impressed with the idea, that they might persevere with impunity in their career of violence and plunder. This transaction has been a subject of complaint on the part of some foreign powers.

The revenue last year from all sources was $73,549,705 20. The expenditures exclusive of payment of debt was $51,618,249. Balance in the Treasury $20,137,000. It is estimated that the receipts this year will exceed expenses at least $15,000,000.

Recommendation of reduction of tariff renewed. An additional military force to protect frontier against Indians; urged an increased pay to army officers; four new regiments, two new infantry, two mounted men and reform organization army. Retired list; promotion in part by merit instead of seniority. Apprentice system for navy recommended; also increase of naval force. Additional legislation to promote security of passengers at sea, urged.

Expenditure of Post Office over receipts of last year, $1,753,000. Renews views of last year on the subject of grants of land for railroad purposes, but rather discourages all such projects. Views on river and harbor; veto promised in another message; some judicial reference urged. Invocation of Divine blessing, and closes.

Boston, December 5th.

The ship Arcadian, of Warren, Mass., from Antwerp to New York, was wrecked on Sable Island, November 26th. The vessel was totally lost. Crew and passengers saved.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Washington, Dec. 4.—Mr. Atchison's letter read in the Senate, resigning his post as President of the Senate. Present 37 Senators. Mr. Cass in the chair as President pro tem. for the day.

House called to order at 12 o'clock. Roll called. One hundred and ninety-seven answered to their names.

Chas. S. Lewis, of Va.; Teller and Goodwin, of N. Y.; and Bristow, of Ky., were sworn in as new members.

The President's message received and read. Referred to the Committee of the whole on the State of the Union. Twenty thousand extra copies ordered to be printed. Adjourned.

The Secretary of the Treasury reports receipts for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854, from all sources, $73,549,705, which, with balance in Treasury 1st July, 1853, $21,942,842, gives total for service year, $95, 492,597; expenditures of the year, $75,354,690, leaving balance in the Treasury 1st July, $20,137,967. Receipts quarter, ending Sept. 30th, 1854, $21,621,302; estimates for remaining three quarters fiscal year, $42,500,000.

The amount of public debt outstanding first July, 1854, was $47,180,596. The Secretary anticipated a falling off of customs, owing to the Reciprocity treaty and short crops.

The tonnage of the United States exhibits an increase for the year of 395,892 tons. Imports for the year, 26,321,317 in excess of exports.

The flattering state of the revenue induces the Secretary again to call the attention of Congress to the propriety of reducing revenues from customs. He recommends but three rates of duty instead of the eight schedules now in use.

Washington, Dec. 5, P. M.—The Senate was called to order by the Secretary at a quarter before 1 o'clock. Jones, of Iowa, offered a resolution that the Senate proceed forthwith to the election of President pro tem. After debate the resolution was adopted. The balloting was as follows: Bright 24, Dawson 2, Chase 6, Foot 1, Badger 1. Bright was declared elected and took the chair.

House.—A bill was introduced by Mr. Latham extending time for the California Land Commissioners to complete their duties.

Mr. Taylor, of Tennessee, gave notice of a bill altering naturalization laws.

Mr. Sellers gave notice of bills to prevent enlistment of foreigners into the army and navy, and to prevent pauper and convict emigration.

Washington, December 5.

House of Representatives.—The Speaker announced the Standing Committees. They are the same as last year, except where vacancies had to be supplied.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury was ordered to be printed.

Resolutions were introduced instructing the Committee on Ways and Means to bring in a bill in regard to the duties on railroad iron. Credits of the same were taken up. Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, moved to lay them on the table; which was carried, 97 to 71.

Mr. Sellers' resolution, offered yesterday, relative to the Ostend conference, was taken up. Mr. S. said he did not wish to strike a blow at the Administration, but the general curiosity should be satisfied. He hoped the Ministers did not meet for fillibustering purposes; if from patriotic purposes, let there be light.

Mr. Bayly thought the resolution premature, and said, if nothing took place, there was nothing alarming in it. It was no unusual thing for foreign ministers to communicate with each other. A spirited debate ensued.

Mr. Wentworth followed, seconding the views of Mr. Bayly, and approving the message and foreign policy. Gray advocated the resolutions. It was merely an inquiry, and did not require the communication of anything detrimental to public interests. Messrs. Washburn and Hillyer advocated the bill, Phillips opposed, Bayly took grounds in its favor, Letcher said he would vote for it and would like it better if more were added. He distrusted our Minister at Madrid, and while he was willing Mr. Soule should have a chance of vindicating his innocence, he desired that if guilty his guilt should be made known.

Mr. Taylor, of Ohio, was glad such a resolution was introduced. No man of foreign birth ought to represent this country abroad.

After further debate, a motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs was lost, by 83 against 85, pending which the House adjourned.

CALIFORNIA NEWS.

New York, December 2, P. M.

The Star of the West arrived at three and a-half o'clock, bringing 200 passengers and $737,000 in specie. Dates from California to November 9th were brought down by the steamer Cortez. Among her passengers are Senator Weller and Hon. J. A. McDougall. The news is of very little importance. Little or no change in commercial matters. Galego and Haxall flour closed at $12 50 to $12 75. Adamantine candles 42 1-2 to 43. Clear bacon 16c; new hams 16 1-2c; lard 17c. Clear pork 22c.

Mining news favorable. Steam frigate Susquehanna, at Honolulu, 20th October; hourly expected at San Francisco, as was also the Mississippi. H. B. M. ship Amphitrite arrived at San Francisco on the 8th. The British and French squadron expected to leave soon after the arrival of the next mail. Vacancy in Supreme Judgeship by the death of Judge Wells not yet filled by Governor. Various candidates spoken of. The most prominent is Judge Fields, of Marysville.

Sonora, from Panama, arrived. Up to the 1st, official returns of the recent election show combined Democratic majority of Congressional vote 12,345. Col. Woodruff killed in a duel by Achillis Kern. Mormons are ordered to leave San Francisco by the 1st of May. Another insurrection had occurred among the State prison convicts; nineteen attempted to escape, but were overpowered by their keepers. One of the three was shot dead. Wm. Sherman elected Comptroller of San Francisco. The Alta California urges the establishment of a State mail route across the plains. Admiral Despontes, of French brig war Obligardo, had left Guyamas and Acapulco, with the object of prosecuting the enquiry concerning the death of Count Boulbon. Citizens of Carson Valley urging on annexation to that place. California Pioneer Adams' Express to St. Louis by way of Salt Lake, started for Los Angelos.

TREMENDOUS CONFLAGRATION.

The whole Row of New Stores upon the District, burnt over, a year and eleven days ago, is now in mouldering ruins.

November 22, 5 o'clock, A. M.

Two hours ago the alarm of fire was given; we hastened to the spot, and found the fire fast progressing, and too far to be distinguished, which originated, as near as could be ascertained, over Martin's Saloon. Near a thousand men were soon on the ground, and very many labored with praise-worthy exertion to save the merchadise. The store of the Messrs. Stutsman & Co. was so far enveloped in flames, that but a small portion of its contents were saved, except the goods, money, and valuable papers. Messrs. Tootle & Jackson, and Pegram & Co. were more fortunate, and saved the greatest portion of their goods. Five new business houses were destroyed. Upon a hasty calculation we should judge the loss would be in the region of $60,000. Stutsman was the most unfortunate, but takes it like a philosipher. The whole spot is still in a blaze, and goods and valuables are promiscuously strewed over the streets, alleys, and vacant places, and are even piled in the creek.—[Council Bluffs Bugle.

Parkville, Mo., Dec. 5, 6 P. M.—We learn by gentleman on Marysville, Blue river, that the Sioux Indians had robbed the Salt Lake mail coming in, and killed the mail carriers, and took $10,500, besides private funds, all the mules and equipage; four men were killed and one left for dead, who survived and escaped. Mr. Jones had started to Salt Lake with outward mail, but on hearing of the murder returned.

Independence, Dec. 5.—The Salt Lake mail just arrived, bringing the sad news of the murder of the entire mail party by the Sioux, on the 13th November, twenty-six miles this side of Fort Laramie. Charles A. Kinkead, merchant of Salt Lake City, badly wounded, and robbed of $10,600 in gold. The Indians have sworn that nothing marked with U. S. A. shall pass.

Quebec, December 5th.

MORE INDIAN MURDERS.

Independence, Dec. 5, P. M.

The Salt Lake mail, under charge of Mitchell, has just arrived, bringing sad news. On the 13th ult., the mails under charge of John Jameson, coming to the States, was attacked, it is supposed, by parties of Sioux Indians near Dripp's trading post, six miles this side of Fort Laramie, and all of the men killed, to-wit: Jameson, James, Wheeler and Thomas Hackett. Charles A. Kincaid, from Salt Lake, a passenger, was shot and pierced with three or four arrows and left for dead. The mail bags were rifled of their contents, and letters all torn open. Kincaid was robbed of ten thousand five hundred dollars in gold. Seven of the mules were driven off, and one killed on the spot. The mail party of November, outward bound, passed by on the 17th, and found that some traders had taken care of the dead bodies and what was left. No escort could be granted at the post, and the mail parties of November could go no further than Laramie; and that of December also returned to this point, with Mitchell's men, who bring this sad news to some families in this place.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

Is the name of a weekly journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Deseret," in the city of Paris, France, and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interest of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and will be the advocate of its claims—social, moral, political and religious; and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter-day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, and pursue such a course as to him may seem best, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondence in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make the MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints, but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the east instead of the south, and as the MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon-makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route, as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the east.

A list of the prices of staple articles of several of the eastern and western cities will be inserted, as well as the prices current of Utah and California.

J. H. McLean—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your Volcanic Oil Liniment, according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, colds, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the same road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

DR. WHITE,
DISCOVERER OF THE
SYMPTOMA TRUTINORIC SYSTEM,
For Diagonising all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs,
May be Consulted daily at his Office, No. 121 PINE St., between 4th & 5th, from 2 to 5 P. M.

According to well authenticated statistical reports, one out of every six of all the deaths that occur in Europe or America, are from diseases of the lungs alone.

Judging from the above data, there are at the present time within the city of St. Louis, at least,

FIFTEEN THOUSAND

individuals who have disease seated upon their lungs. It is equally true that the Medical Profession, without exception, are unable to detect a disease upon those organs in season to effect a radical cure: and this is the reason why that class of diseases have proved so universally fatal. And hence this new discovery offers the only means extant for detecting pulmonary diseases in their incipient stages, or in time to effect a cure in every case. In all probability, 14,000 out of the above number may escape a premature grave, by at once availing themselves of the benefits of this important discovery.

Parents and Guardians should submit every member of their families to an immediate examination by this New System if they would avoid a responsibility desirable to none but infidels. They should not suffer any pecuniary consideration to deter them from reaping its benefits if they would protect those committed to their charge from one of the most fatal diseases that exists upon this continent. If they rely upon their family physician to suppress him or the essence of this dreadful disease, depend upon it, not one case out of a hundred will ever recover. Heads of families, are you prepared to offer those committed to your responsible charge a sacrifice to prejudice, when these incontrovertable facts are before you? If so, the responsibility rests entirely with you.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.

Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

GOD IN NATURE.

I see my God wher'eer I look
On nature's pure and simple book:
No dogmas here conflicting jar,
No creeds to set the world at war,
Nor superstition draws from thence
A faith that mocks our common sense;
But harmonizing, here we find
That faith with reason is combin'd.
Ten thousand worlds through boundless space,
Proclaim His wisdom, power and grace;
And nature's laws prove everywhere
A watchful parent's tender care.
No vengeful fury marks His path,
No traces of eternal wrath,
But all is harmony and love,
On earth below and heaven above.
Throughout the whole stupendous plan
Man finds no enemy but man;
Benevolence shows everywhere
A God to love and none to fear.
Then heaven's example still in view,
Let man to man be kind and true,
And all degrading fears discard,
For virtue is its own reward.

SPEAK NO ILL.

Oh speak no ill! A kindly word
Can never leave a sting behind,
And O, to breathe each tale we've heard
Is far beneath a noble mind.
Full oft a better seed is sown
By choosing this, the better plan,
For if but little good be known,
Let's speak of all the best we can.

Give me the heart that fain would hide—
Would fain another's faults efface;
How can it pleasure human pride
To prove humanity but base?
Nay, let us reach an higher mood,
A nobler estimate of man,—
Be earnest in the search for good,
And speak of all the best we can.

Nay, speak no ill, but lenient be
To other's failings as your own;
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known;
For life is but a passing day,
No lip may tell how brief its span—
Then, O, the little time we stay
Let's speak of all the best we can!

THE SAINT.

When we look abroad upon mankind, we behold a great variety of characters pursuing various professions or employments, either with an assiduity of application characteristic of the present age, or with a listlessness illustrative alone of the individual's respective temperament. But, with very few exceptions, such is the keenness of appetite in the human family to get gain, and consequent command of superiority in the scale of mankind, and an assurance of the good things of life, that, very rarely do we find individuals so circumstanced otherwise than so acting.

We behold the merchant freighting his ships with the riches of his own and other lands for distant climes, watching narrowly the scale of exchange, or sale, that his expedition may bring home the greatest possible amount of profit.

We look, again, upon the manufacturer of foreign produce building his gigantic establishments, and employing his thousands of laborers, many of whom toil for a comparative miserable pittance, professedly because the employer must realize sufficient profit to enable him at all times to be prepared for the fluctuations of the market, arising from the bold and effective schemes of speculators.

Again, we find the heir of opulence, or he who has accumulated sufficient gain to enable him to retire from the more active schemes of commerce and trade, seeking the honors of magisterial authority, and (to be charitable) we would allow, honorably and with honor to dispense the administration of the laws of the land.

We look once more, and behold the aspiring candidate for legislative honors, deeming, perhaps, that his voice, in the senate of the land, would have an influence to adjust the scale of administration for the success of his own system of politics, or otherwise for the general good of mankind.

We look higher still, and behold the sovereigns of nations, surrounded with the pageantry and pomp of regal dignity, receiving the acclamations of myriads, the homage of the great and mighty, who find their own dignity magnified by the reflections of royalty.

But hitherto we have looked only upon what we may deem the most successful of mankind; we might reverse the picture, and turn to the laborious, the unfortunate, the miserable, the indigent, and the vile, and behold enough to sicken humanity; we might look upon our fellow, suffering from "the inhumanity of man," the depredator committing his spoils upon his neighbor, or the diabolical of his race perpetrating his deeds of blood; but we would choose rather to turn to the contemplation of the character whose name we have placed at the head of this article.

And what is he? He is an individual who has rendered obedience unto the laws of salvation, as propounded by the great Father of mercies, and in consequence of obedience has received of the influence of the Spirit of God, even of him who is the Father of lights, the great author of all things by which we are surrounded, and to whom the whole human family are answerable for deeds done in this probationary state. By the gift of that Spirit he has learned the true nature of his standing on this planet on which he finds himself, he has discovered that all mankind are naturally aliens from God, that Satan reigneth in the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are his servants. But he has also discovered what is his true heritage, what are the possessions, that, but for sin, were his true estate; and he now by the covenant of the eternal God knows, if he be faithful in keeping his commandments, what are the glories to which he is destined. Is he an uninterested spectator of the things that are transpiring around him? By no means. He is a child of light, and not of darkness, partaking of the Spirit of Him who seeth the end from the beginning; he can look beyond the narrow sphere that limits the vision of others, and knowing the purposes of the Most High with regard to the destiny of men and things, he can behold with an untroubled gaze the changes or convulsions that transpire around him.

Is he involved in the consequences of the mad career of individuals amongst whom de dwells? Does he suffer in consequence of the principles he professes? Or is he threatened through the maintenance of his integrity with death? All these things may be allotted him, but with a noble superiority above suffering and calamity, he flinches not, for well he knows that all things shall work together for his good, and that by a faithful endurance of suffering, he is treading in the footsteps of the Highest, and the path, though thorny and perilous, is the path of glory.

Is he a selfish and uninterested spectator of the condition of his fellow-man? He is not. Being imbued with the Spirit of Him who sendeth the blessings of Providence upon the evil and the good, upon the just and upon the unjust; he also is ready to minister to the suffering and the needy according to his ability, and to do his utmost to mitigate the woes of humanity, knowing assuredly that if he hath the ability, and withholdeth his hand, he is under condemnation.

Does he long for the facilities of the merchant, that he might also become a dealer in the produce of the world? Most certainly; for he is desirous to gather from the wealth of the nations to enrich the Zion of God, and to bring the treasure of the earth for the inhabitants thereof.

Would he emulate the princely manufacturer in the production of his various articles for trade? Unquestionably. He is desirous to behold the Saints of God independent of a wicked world that is anxious only to betray and to destroy. He would desire to see the genius, the talent, and the industry of the servants and the handmaidens of the Lord brought forth in the production of things necessary for the comfort and well-being of the people of God; and he anticipates a day when, under the blessings of the Most High, they shall stand unrivalled in all things which they shall put forth their hands to do.

Is he an uninterested party in regard to those appointed to administer the laws of a community? By no means. He knoweth that when the wicked rule the people mourn; and he is desirous that the best and the wisest of the land should administer the laws thereof.

Is he also desirous of a voice in the councils of the nations? It is with a wish to be instrumental in the enactment of laws in accordance with the will of heaven, and that the purposes of God may be facilitated in bringing to pass his strange and mighty acts amongst the nations of the earth.

Does he long for the honors of royalty; for the glory and distinction of holding the reins of government? Most assuredly. Empire is stamped upon his brow! He is the son of a King! yea, of the King of kings, and Lord of lords! And he is looking forward to the possession of a throne more glorious and more potent than the mightiest of earth; to a diadem more magnificent than ever circled the brow of earth-born kings! By the light of the Spirit of Truth, he is enabled to look back upon the myriads of human beings that have been swept into eternity in days of old,

> "From him our Great Progenitor, to him
> That latest bowed beneath the stroke of death, > Numberless."

and he is conscious of being associated with the great scheme of redemption, that shall rescue from the hands of the Evil One the captives that have long been bound, and open the prison doors to let the oppressed go free. He is rejoicing in the privileges of the people of God, in the power and the authority of the holy priesthood, by which he shall stand a Saviour on Mount Zion, when the kingdom shall be the Lord's. There is nothing too great for his conceptions when quickened by the Spirit of God, nothing too high for his sanctified ambition to aspire unto. The eternal Jehovah for his father, the ever blessed Saviour for his elder brother, angels for his companions, power and authority unknown on earth, sovereignty and dominion among the spheres of the universe, and all things associated with a renewed and perfect nature, unstained by sin, unsullied by anything that can defile, and all things stamped with immortality and eternal life.

Who can contemplate the true character of the son or daughter of God, and not feel ennobled? Who, that rightly appreciates his position and the glory of his high calling of God in Jesus Christ, but must turn away from everything that is litle and mean with disgust, and seek to attain to all things that will ennoble, to all that will purify and prepare for the high society with which he expects to mingle?

Let the brethren, let the sisters, realize these things; for, assuredly as our children, on coming to maturity, become men and women, so certainly shall we, if we are born of God, if we are quickened by his Spirit, and are faithful unto the end until we attain our majority, so certainly shall we inherit the glory of our Great Parent, and realize the full fruition of a perfect existence.

Let the Saints, then, contemplate the subject; let them live for these high, glorious and eternal interests, and God will bless them, while the nations of the earth will wonder and be astonished; for the Spirit that purifies, and consequently beautifies, shall also make them terrible, and the nations of the world shall leave them unmolested, because of the might and the glory of truth.—[Millenial Star.

BAD COMPANY.

"Evil communications," says the text, "corrupts good manners." The assertion is general, and no doubt all people suffer from such communications; but above all, the minds of youth will suffer; which are yet unformed, unprincipled, unfurnished, and ready to receive any impression.

But before we consider the danger of keeping bad company, let us first see the meaning of the phrase.

In the phrase of the world, good company means fashionable people. Their stations in life, not their morals are considered; and, he who associates with such, though they set the example of breaking every commandment of the decalogue, is still said to keep good company.—I should wish you to fix another meaning to the expression; and to consider vice in the same detestable light, in whatever company it is found; nay to consider all company in which it is found, be the station what it will, is bad company.

The three following classes will perhaps include the greatest part of those, who deserve this appellation.

In the first, I should rank all who endeavor to destroy the principles of christianity—who jest upon scripture—talk blasphemy—and treat revelation with contempt.

A second class of bad company, are those who have a tendency to destroy in us the principles of common honesty and integrity. Under this head we may rank gamesters of every denomination; and low and infamous characters of every profession.

A third class of bad company, and such as are commonly most dangerous to youth, includes the long catalogue of men of pleasure. In whatever way they follow the call of appetite, they have equally a tendency to corrupt the purity of the mind.

Besides these three classes, whom we call bad company, there are others who come under the denomination of ill chosen company; trifling, insipid characters of every kind; who follow no business—are led by no ideas of improvement—but spend their time in dissipation and folly—whose highest praise it is, that they are not vicious—with none of these a serious man would wish his son to keep company.

It may be asked, what is meant by keeping bad company? The world abounds with characters of this kind: they meet us in every place; and if we keep company at all, it is impossible to avoid keeping company with such persons.

It is true if we were determined never to have any commerce with bad men, we must, as the apostle remarks, "altogether go out of the world." By keeping bad company, therefore, is not meant a casual intercourse with them, on occasion of business, or as they accidently fall in their way; but having an inclination to consort with them—complying with that inclination—seeking their company when we might avoid it—entering into their parties—and making them the companions of our choice. Mixing with them occasionally cannot be avoided.

The danger of keeping bad company, arrises principally from our aptness to imitate and catch the manners and sentiments of others—from the power of custom—from our own bad inclinations—and from the pains taken by the bad to corrupt us.

In our earliest youth, the contagion of manners is observable. In the boy, yet incapable of having anything instilled into him, we easily discover from his first actions, and rude attempts at language, the kind of person with whom he has been brought up: we see the early spring of a civilized education, or the first wild shoots of rusticity.

As he enters farther into life, his behavior, manners, an conversation all take their cast from the company he keeps. Observe the peasant, and the man of education, the difference is striking. And yet God hath bestowed equal talents on each. The only difference is, they have been thrown into different scenes of life; and have had commerce with persons of different stations.

Nor are manners and behavior more easily caught, than opinions and principles. In childhood and youth, we naturally adopt the sentiments of those about us.

And as we advance in life, how few of us think for ourselves; How many of us are satisfied with taking our opinions at second hand.

The great power and force of custom forms another argument against keeping bad company. However seriously disposed we may be; and however shocked at the first approach to vice; this shocking appearance goes off upon an intimacy with it. Custom will soon render the most disgustful thing familiar. And this is indeed a kind provision of nature, to render labor, and toil, and danger, which are the lot of man, more easy to him.

The raw soldier who trembles at the first encounter, becomes a hardy veteran in a few campaigns. Habit renders danger familiar, and of course indifferent to him.

But habit, which is intended for our good, may, like other kind appointments of nature, be converted into mischief. The well-disposed youth, entering first into bad company, is shocked at what he hears, and what he sees. The good principles which he had imbibed, ring in his ears an alarming lesson against the wickedness of his companions. But alas! this sensibility is but of a day's continuance. The next jovial meeting makes the horrid picture of yesterday more easily endured.

GILPIN.

THE JOYS OF POLYGAMY.

The Chigago Tribune has had the pleasure of examining and publishing a private letter from Salt Lake City, from which we clip this extract:

When I came to Deseret, there were not many who were in the enjoyment of more than one wife, and many or most of the new comers were opposed to it. But as they saw how beautifully and harmoniously those families lived where there were two or more wives, their prejudices gradually gave way, and among no class was this change more apparent than the women. At the present time, if a vote were taken, upon the subject, I venture to say that nine out of every ten women who had livvd here for two years, would sustain our present social system in this particular. They are more for it than the men, for upon many of the latter it entails heavy burdens—though the truth is, our wives in Deseret make no pretentions to being fine ladies, their highest ambition is to help their husbands, and their poor brothers and sisters in the Lord's Church. There are very few men here who have more than five wives, and a large part have but one, while some have none. For myself, I have three. Your cousin, whom I married in York State, has the largest share of my affections, and takes precedence in the management of the household. Two years ago I married Miss S., formerly of Ohio, and she has charge of the education of the children, and attending to the clothing. My other, which I took three months ago, is from near Hamburg, Germany. She enters into the duties of her new situation with wonderful alacrity, and is very happy, as are also Sarah Ann and Elizabeth. There is none of that jealousy—that disposition to tear out each other's hair, which you have probably imagined would show itself in such cases.

My daughter, Louisa, is engaged to be married to a man from Pennsylvania, who has already a wife and three children. It did not entirely meet my approbation, but I did not interpose a single objection, so long as she was satisfied and the marriage would be in a high degree honorable to her, as well as adventageous in a worldly view.

Now, my dear sir, you will say what is to become of all this? Let me tell you what has come of it.—In Deseret there are no libertines with their paramours, no houses of prostitution, no cases of seduction, or those which disturd the peace of families in the States, under your laws. Here every woman can have what God intended she should—a husband—and every man that wants to, may have a wife. And the woman that is the wife of a man who has one or more other wives, is more fortunate than if she were the only one, for in case of plurality the duties of the house are divided. The children here are pretty numerous, I must admit, but this should and does contribute to the happiness of the true followers of the Lord, from whom we have learned that our duty is to multiply and replenish, But, mark this: there are no illegitimate children in Deseret, no children of shame, who are ashamed of their mothers, and a dirgsace to any but the lowest society.

CHARLIE AND HIS DOG.

A correspondent of the Preston (England) Chronicle gives the following anecdote: "A good while ago, a boy named Charlie had a large dog which was very fond of the water, and in hot weather he used to swim across the river near which the boy lived. One day the thought struck him that it would be fine fun to make the dog carry him across the river, so he tied a string to the dog's collar, and ran down with him to the water's edge, where he took off all his clothes; and then, holding hard by the dog's neck and the bit of string, he went into the water, and the dog pulled him across. After playing about on the other side for some time, they returned in the way they had came; but when Charlie looked for his clothes, he could find nothing but his shoes! The wind had blown all the rest into the water. The dog saw what had happened, and making his little master let go the string by making believe to bite him, he dashed into the river, and brought out first his coat, and then all the rest in succession. Charlie dressed and went home in his wet clothes, and told his mother what fun he and the dog had had. His mother told him that he did very wrong in going across the river as he had done, and he should thank God for making the dog take him over and back again safely; for if the dog had made him let go in the river, he would most likely have sunk and been drowned. Little Charlie said, "Shall I thank God now, mamma?" and he knelt at his mother's knee and thanked God; then, getting up again, he threw his arm around his dog's neck saying, "I thank you, too, dear doggie, for not letting go." Little Charlie is now Admiral Sir Charles Napier."

MAYNARD'S PRIMER has been adopted by the United States government, after a thorough trial of its merits, and is to be placed on all the arms to be manufactured by them hereafter, the tools at the armories now being altered for that purpose, as also a part of the old muskets now on hand at the different depositories. Thus the metalic cap, which was itself a great improvement, is superseded by a still greater one, and will soon go out of use on all firearms.

IMPORTANT TO BACHELORS.—In his comedy of "Time works wonders," Douglas Jerrold says:—"Women are all alike. When they're maids, they're mild as milk. Once make 'em wives, and they lean their backs against their marriage certificates and defy you.

A GOOD HIT.

The very ludicrous manner in which many Englishmen transpose the letter h, is well hit off in the following poetical effusion. Neither is this vulgarism confined to Cockneyshire alone, as some people imagine, for other parts of England are infected with the like crudity—even men of intelligence are infected. Such is the force of habit:

Petition of the Letter "h" to the Inhabitants of Kidderminister—Protesting:

Whereas by you I have been driven
From 'ouse, from 'ome, from 'ope, from 'eaven,
And placed by your most learned society,
In *h*exile, *h*anguish, and *h*anxiety;
Nay, charged without one just pretence,
With *h*arrogance and *h*impudence—
I here demand full restitution,
And beg you'll mend your *h*el-o-cution.

Answer of the Inhabitants of Kidderminister to the Letter "h"—Greeting:

Whereas we've rescued you—ingrate!
From 'anger, 'avoc, and from 'ate,
From 'orse pond, 'anging, and from 'altar,
And consecrated you in *h*alter,
And plac'd you where you'd never be,
In *h*onor and in *h*onesty,
We think you talking an intrusion,
And shall not mend our elocution.

TRANS-ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH.—Mr. Bakewell, of England, has lately made a scientific statement on telegraphic communication between England and America. He maintained that such communication between the two countries, with a suitable line, was feasible, with comparatively small expense. Instead of the submarine wire as at present used, he would have an iron wire, double the thickness, and protected by gutta percha. He thought a single line would cost £40 per mile, which, at 2000 miles, amounted to £80,000. The cost of laying down he estimated at £20,000, making the whole cost £100,000. He expressed his confident opinion that the project would be shortly carried out.

CLOCK FOR A YEAR.—An artist in Philadelphia has invented a clock that runs a whole year without winding but once. The place of the pendulum wire is occupied by a straight watch spring, to which is attached a horizontal brass plate, of the size of a twenty-five cent piece. In the circumference of this plate are inserted six small round bars, from the outer end of which depend six heavy leaden balls. This whole arrangement turns upon its own axis, the minute hand moving with it for one minute, when it stops and turns in the opposite direction the succeeding three minutes. Each minute requires three revolutions.

NOAH'S ARK.—The largest ocean steamships (says the Sailor's Magazine) now plying on the Atlantic, bear precisely the proportions in length, breadth and depth, that are recorded concerning Noah's Ark. The dimensions of the Atlantic steamers are, length 322 feet, breadth of beam 50 feet, depth 28 1-2 feet. The dimensions of the Ark were, length 300 cubits, breadth 50 cubits, depth 30 cubits. The Ark, therefore, was nearly twice the size in length and breadth of these vessels, the cubit being 22 inches; both had upper, lower and middle stories. After all the equipments of forty-two centuries, which have elapsed since the Deluge, the shipbuilders have to return to the model afforded by Noah's Ark.

Is Mr. Heraud known at all to you? He is the author of "The Descent into Hell." Apropos of which, he was once annoying Douglas Jerrold with importunate questions at an unwelcome time.—Among others, he queried. "By the bye Mr. Jerrold, did you ever read my "Descent into Hell?" "No sir," replied the infuriated dramatist. "but I should like to see it." Douglas dear," said his wife, appealing to him in a small feminine dispute, "do you think I am generally bad tempered? "No, my dear," says he, "I think you are particularly so."—A young author, talking of Lamartine, in Jerrold's hearing, said, "He and I row in the same boat." "Ah!" replied the wit, "but not with the same sculls."

A NEW EDITION OF LOCKE.—Colonel Vaumarell of the 30th regiment, had a hundred pair of old boots in a box fastened with a huge padlock, and denominated "Locke on the understanding."

In the year 1850 no less than 3884 males, of twenty years and upwards, died violent deaths in England and Wales. Of these 532 were killed by carringes, carts, and horses, and 110 on railways.

The following Temperance Toast was given at a temperance dinner in Yankeeland:—"The revolutionary army and the cold water army; the one drove the red coats from our land, the other the red noses."

A friend of the late Thomas Hood's afflicted with the same mania, said, with tears standing in his eyes, "Ah, poor fellow—died from motives of generosity—wanted to enable the undertaker to urn a lively Hood."

Nineteen coaches crowded to overflowing, arrived at Cleveland on the Lake Shore road in one train, last Wednesday, containing twelve hundred passengers.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

DR. WHITE,
DISCOVERER OF THE
SYMPTOMA TRUTINORIC SYSTEM,
For Diagonising all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs,
May be Consulted daily at his Office, No. 121 PINE St., between 4th & 5th, from 2 to 5 P. M.

According to well authenticated statistical reports, one out of every six of all the deaths that occur in Europe or America, are from diseases of the lungs alone.
Judging from the above data, there are at the present time within the city of St. Louis, at least,
FIFTEEN THOUSAND
individuals who have disease seated upon their lungs. It is equally true that the Medical Profession, without exception, are unable to detect a disease upon those organs in season to effect a radical cure; and this is the reason why that class of diseases have proved so universally fatal. And hence this new discovery offers the only means extant for detecting pulmonary diseases in their incipient stages, or in time to effect a cure in every case. In all probability, 14,000 out of the above number may escape a premature grave, by at once availing themselves of the benefits of this important discovery.
Parents and Guardians should submit every member of their families to an immediate examination by this New System if they would avoid a responsibility desirable to none but infidels. They should not suffer any pecuniary consideration to deter them from reaping its benefits if they would protect those committed to their charge from one of the most fatal diseases that exists upon this continent. If they rely upon their family physician to apprise them of the existence of this dreadful disease, depend upon it, not one case out of a hundred will ever recover. Heads of families, are you prepared to offer those committed to your responsible charge a sacrifice to prejudice, when these incontrovertable facts are before you? If so, the responsibility rests entirely with you.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.
Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

REMARKS OF GOVERNOR YOUNG,

I realize the nature of my position in rising to speak to an assembly of intelligent gentlemen and ladies on such an occasion as the present. I probably feel my incapability more than can be perceived by my hearers, still my mind is active, and my understanding is fruitful, whether I have ability or not to express that which is in me.

While my friends have been speaking I have been much amused, edified, and delighted, especially in having whiggery and democracy so ably illustrated. I do not think they could have been exhibited more easily, more naturally, more to the understanding of all, and more true to the spirit and universal deportment of those leading parties of the nation as they now exist, than they have been by my predecessor in the stand to-day; and I presume I am speaking the feelings of the greater part of this assembly.

While brother George A. Smith was speaking upon the rise and progress of the American revolution, a few items ranging in the same line occurred to my mind, which I have a desire to express in the hearing of this assembly.

The revolutions made by the Government of the United States, with regard to real progression generally, are small indeed; so small that it is impossible to perceive any advancement. It is true the Constitution has been revised by the voice of the people; but wherein is it bettered? Some say it is bettered; but as to the light and knowledge that now exist with regard to the true spirit of republicanism, the revolution is on the retrograde motion. No one will question for a moment that many revolutions in the United States have become in a great degree popular, notwithstanding they have been in many instances unconstitutional, and in open violation of the statute laws, and have been winked at by the most influential officers of the Government. There has been a progressive revolution since the close of the war, but not in virtue, justice, uprightness and truth. It has become quite a custom, and by custom it has the force of law, for one party to mob another, to tear down and destroy Catholic churches, drive citizens from the ballot box, disallowing them the right of franchise, and persecute, plunder, drive from their possessions, and kill a great many people. Revolution in the United States is progressing, but to the true spirit of democracy and the science of government, the revolution I refer to is strictly opposed.

With regard to democracy and whiggery, no person can exhibit them better, and in a truer light, than Judge Shaver has to-day. The general government, as a whole, do not understand truly what democracy and whiggery really are.

What would my friend George A. Smith tell you with regard to these two political bodies which now rule over our country, were he to address you upon this subject? He would tell you that one of them is a monster having many heads, and the other is a monster having no head at all. The impulse that is given to the government is like that of the animal creation; when they are hungry, they are impelled to eat, and to drink when they are thirsty. When this necessity presses upon them all the sensative powers are on the alert to search for food; all their natural impulses to action originate in the appetite; they receive them from the demands the interior of the animal makes upon the creature; it then becomes the duty of the head to search out a method to supply these demands with food suitable to the nature of the animal, which administers health, strength, vigor, growth, and beauty to the whole body.

What ought to be the government of the United States? And what are whiggery and democracy as they now exist? Nothing and a little less.

I believe in a true republican government; but where is the man capable of exhibiting in their true character the principles of such a government? I do not profess to be that man, still I believe that I am as capable to search into the merits of the subject, and can understand the general principles of true republicanism as well as any other man, though I may not be capable of setting it before the people in its perfection. I can, however, talk a little about it.

Is there a true republican government on the earth? There is. Do you inquire, where is that government? I answer, it is here. I am a true republican, if I understand what the term signifies; but I put my own definition upon such terms, for in many instances our lexicographers have widely mistaken ideas, and widely disagree upon the meaning of words. They may trace the etymology of words through the living and dead languages to their roots, as they suppose; but there is a great probability of their being mistaken still.

A government that is perfect would be called democratic. True republicanism, and what is meant or understood by true democracy is the same; but the full extent of true democracy cannot be told by any man at this time. In entering upon a point that I do not fully understand, and can in no wise fully explain, I shall content myself to talk about it according to the extent of my capacity, and the understanding I have of the subject, and leave the little I have to say with the people. The question, what is a true republican government, is easily answered. It is a government or institution that is perfect—perfect in its laws and ordinances, having for its object the perfection of mankind in righteousness. This is true democracy. But democracy, as it is now, is another thing. True democracy, or republicanism, if it were rightly understood, ought to be the government of the United States. They might have had that government long ago; but as it was said by my predecessor in the stand, "Whom the Lord would destroy He makes mad;" consequently he must take away the wisdom of that man, or of that people. No man or people possessing wisdom will give vent to wrath, for that is calculated to weaken, to destroy, to blot out of existence.

When the Supreme Ruler of the universe wishes to destroy a nation He takes away their wisdom in the first place, and they become insensible to their own interests, and they are filled with wrath: they give way to their anger, and thus lay the foundation of their own destruction. To him who seeks to save, He gives wisdom, which enables any people, nation, or individual to lay the foundation for strength, increase, and power. When we look abroad upon the nations we can see this truth verified. We see that wisdom is actually departing from the lawgiver, and the knowledge and the discretion the judge possessed years ago have vanished. We discern that the very policy adopted by the nations to fortify them in strength, is calculated to sap their foundations. The ax is laid at the root of the tree, and all nations are filling up the cup of their guilt.

Suppose I were speaking to the assembled millions of the inhabitants of the United States, what counsel or advice could be given to them that they might regain what they have lost? Can any temporal means be adopted to save them from the vortex of ruin into which they are fast approaching—a doom which they can never avert without sincere repentance? Yes, there is seemingly a human policy, if adopted, that would snatch them from destruction. What is it? Let the people rise en masse to lay the foundation of a wholesome, independent, free, democratic, (as the people call it,) republican government—a government which, if carried out, will be perfect in itself.

Let us look at it in another point of view. Suppose this people inhabiting these mountains are broken off entirely from the nations of the world, rendering no allegiance to any earthly power, combined or isolated; free to make laws, to obey them, or to break them; free to act, to choose, and to refuse, and in every sense of the word to do as they please, without any fixed order of government whatever, and they wish a constitution, a system of government for mutual protection and advancement in the principles of right, to be framed according to the best wisdom that can be found in this community; I say, let them govern themselves by a republican system of government, selecting a man from their midst to preside over them. And who should they select to fill so important a station? The best man they can find. Should they keep him in office only four years? Should they make a clause in their constitution that a President shall serve at most for only two terms without a vacation in his services? That is an item that should not be found in the Constitution of the United States, nor in the constitution made by this or any other people. We should select the best man we could find, and center our feelings upon him, and sustain him as our President, dictator, lawgiver, controller, and guide in a national capacity, and in every other capacity wherein he is a righteous example. Though we find as good a man as there is the nation, yet we should not lay facilities before him to become evil, were he so disposed. Great care should be exercised to guard against placing such a power at the command of any mortal.

Shall we give him twenty-five thousand dollars per annum, and make him superior to any other honest man in the Territory, State or Kingdom, in things pertaining to this world? or lay inducements before him to become proud, haughty, and neglectful of the true interests of the people? No; for if he is capable of ruling the people and dictating them he is capable of taking care of himself. If we cannot find a man willing to control and guide us without our pouring the gold and silver into his coffers, and exalting him above the rest of us, then we will take one less capable who will do it for nothing.

Do you ask why I would recommend this course? I answer, because of the weakness of man. Were we to elect a man to preside over us in this capacity and give him three, four, five, eight, or fifteen thousand dollars a year, the streets would be full of demagogues; you would see them perched upon every ant-hill; croaking out their stump speeches for this or that man to be ruler; and the paid lackeys for each candidate for office, in the streets, in the public places, would be using their influence for their employers in their respective circles, and wherever they would be listened to.

Whether such a man as a ruler will do good to the people, is not thought of, either by the candidate or by his lackeys; but the one is after his thousands of dollars, and the other after his paltry fee. The welfare of the people they do not consider. What will be the best policy to pursue for the good of the people at large is not in all their thoughts.

Let the people see to it that they get righteous men to be their leaders, who will labor with their hands and administer to their own necessities; sit in judgment, legislate and govern in righteousness; and officers that are filled with peace; and to see to it that every man that goes forth among the people as a traveling officer is full of the fear of the Lord, and would rather do right at a sacrifice than do wrong for a reward.

What would be the result if this course was adopted by the people of the United States? It would destroy the golden prospects of those who were seeking for gain alone, and men would be sought for in the nation, State, or Territory who were for the people, and would seek earnestly for their welfare, benefit, and salvation. We want men to rule the nation who care more for, and love better, the nation's welfare, than gold and silver, fame or popularity.

Are there any such in the United States? Yes, plenty of them among all classes of men, though they have little or nothing to say about politics. Many of them are much like one Mr. Hovey, from Cayuga county, New York, that I once asked if he was going to the election? "No," he replied, "I will never give another vote in the United States." I asked the reason for such a course. "Why," said he, "they will set up the devil as a candidate for the office of President, then set up his apostate brother, who has forfeited his inheritance, and run him in for the sake of opposition." There are plenty of men who would do that and worse. The nation, however, is not lost yet; there are as many as five righteous men in the city at least.

Let the people lay the foundation for carrying out the republican government which was instituted by our fathers, instead of maintaining a government of anarchy, confusion and strife. Were this people here an independent people, and had the privilege of selecting their own officers, and I should be chosen to dictate them in their selections, I would watch and guard faithfully their rights, and see that they selected men who had not the dimes in view. The motto should be, "if you do not labor for the good of the people irrespective of the dimes, we do not want your services; for if you labor for the money, you seek to benefit yourselves at the people's expense." I make this application and turn it eastward, which you know is the way the world rolls. If the government knew what the wants of the people were, they would take away the salaries of political demagogues, and stop their running, and their stump preaching from one end of the land to the other, to make proselytes to their cause. This would have a tendency to put an end to party names, to party jealousies, and to party conflicts forever; and the people should concentrate their feelings, their influence, and their faith, to select the best man they can to be their President, if he has nothing more to eat than potatoes and salt—a man who will not aspire to become greater than the people who appoint him; but be contented to live as they live, be clothed as they are clothed, and in every good thing be one with them.

It is yet in the power of the people of the United States to lay a foundation for the people to redeem themselves from the growing consequences of past errors. What would be the result were the United States to take this course, viz: to strike out that clause in the Constitution that limits the services of a President to four years; or the term of service of any good man; and continue to revise the constitution and laws as they become familiar with their defects; then reduce the salaries of all officers in all the departments? Would not such a course revolutionize any kingdom or government, and be very likely to produce union and prosperity?

Are there any more improvements that might be made? Yes. If we are what we profess to be, a republican government, there is no State in the Union but what should be amenable to the general government, holding to the old English rights in Rhode Island; then Congress, with the President at their head, could meet, and veto every act made by any department of the government, if it was necessary. So let Congress come together when any of the States transcend the bounds of right, and hold them amenable for their actions. The general government should never give any portion of the nation license to say they are free and independent; this this should only apply to the nation as a whole. We have a little experience in this kind of independence. For instance, the government of the United States are willing to take my money for lands in Missouri, which were in market, but the people in that sovereign, that free and independent State, rose up and mobbed me—drove me from my possessions, and confiscated my property to themselves, and the general government has no power to redress my wrongs. This is only one instance among many of the kind, which I might enumerate to shew the impolicy and downright mockery of such boasted independence. While such outrages remain unredressed, this nation never should defile the sacred term by saying, they have a republican government.

The general constitution of our country is good, and a wholesome government could be framed upon it, for it was dictated by the invisible operations of the Almighty. He moved upon Columbus to launch forth upon the trackless deep to discover the American continent. He moved upon the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and he moved upon Washington to fight and conquer, in the same way as he moved upon ancient and modern prophets, each being inspired to accomplish the particular work he was called to perform in the times, seasons, and dispensations of the Almighty. God's purpose in raising up these men and inspiring them with daring sufficient to surmount every opposing power, was to prepare the way for the formation of a true republican government. They laid its foundation, but when others came to build upon it they reared a superstructure far short of their privileges, if they had walked uprightly as they should have done.

What shall be done? Let the people, the whole American people rise up and say they will have these abuses regulated, and no longer suffer political demagogues to gamble away their money, but turn them out of office to attend to their own business. Let the people make a whip, if not of good tough raw-hide, of small cords at least, and walk into the temple of the nation, and cleanse it thoroughly out, and put in men who will legislate for their good, instead of gambling away their money, and trifling with the sacred interests of the nation, which have been entrusted to their keeping.

I would not speak so plainly were it not that statesmen use the same privilege, and that too in the halls of legislatures. We can never get a republican government upon any other principle. The object those have in view who look and long for the gaudy trash of this world should be removed, that men may occupy the high and responsible seats of the nation who will care for the welfare of the people, and cannot be bought with money, or that which it can purchase.

Can the constitution be altered? It can; and when we get a President that answers our wishes to occupy the executive chair, there let him sit to the day of his death, and pray that he may live as long as Methuselah; and whenever we have good officers strive to retain them, and to fill up vacancies with good men, until there are none who would let the nation sink for a can of oysters and a lewd woman.

The signers of the Declaration of Independence, and the framers of the constitution, were inspired from on high to do that work; but was that which was given to them perfect, not admitting of any addition whatever? No, for if men know anything, they must know that the Almighty has never yet found a man in mortality that was capable at the first intimation, at the first impulse, to receive anything in a state of entire perfection. They laid the foundation, and it was for after generations to rear the superstructure upon it: it is a progressive, a gradual work. If the framers of the constitution, and the inhabitants of the United States, had walked humbly before the God who defended them and fought their battles when Washington was on the stage of action, the nation would now have been free from a multitude of place hunters, who live upon its vitals. The country would not have been overrun with murderers and thieves, and our cities filled with houses of ill fame as now; and men could have walked the streets of cities, or traveled on conveyances through the country, without being insulted, plundered, and perhaps murdered; and an honest, sober, industrious, enterprising and righteous people would now have been found from one end of the United States to the other.

The whole body is deranged; and the head, which ought to be the seat of sense and the temple of wisdom, is insensible to the wants of the body, and to the fact that if the body sinks the head must sink also.

I want to tell a political anecdote, or at least I will tell it so nigh that you may guess the whole of it. Two fellows were stump speaking for office in the State of Illinois; one of them was a lawyer of flowery eloquent speech, and the other was a rough and ready homespun mechanic, but a man of sound sense. The lawyer made his speech in flaming language—interlarded it with expressions of sensitive regard for the people's interests. The mechanic mounted the rostrum, and says he, "I cannot make a speech to cope with this man's speech, but I can tell you what he and I want. He wants your votes; now if you will give me your votes, when I get into office you may ——— and be damned." They both felt so; and there are but few exceptions to this practice. Office seekers are full of tricks and intrigues of every kind to get an office, and then the people may ——— and be damned.

The progress of revolution is quite considerable in every government of the world; but is the revolution for the constitutional rights of the people in progress? No, it is on the retrograde. I know how they can be brought back to the people, and the government be redeemed, and become one of the most powerful and best on the earth. It was instituted in the beginning by the Almighty; He operated upon the hearts of the revolutionary fathers to rebel against the English King and his Parliament, as He does upon me to preach Mormonism; both are inspired by Him, but the work unto which they are called is dissimilar. The one was inspired to fight, and the other to preach the peaceable things of the kingdom of God. He operated upon the pusillanimous king to excite the colonists to rebellion; and He still is operating with this nation, and taking away their wisdom, until by and by they will get mad and rush to certain destruction.

Will the constitution be destroyed? No; it will be held inviolate by this people; and, as Joseph Smith said, "the time will come when the destiny of the nation will hang upon a single thread; at that critical juncture this people will step forth and save it from the threatened destruction." It will be so.

With regard to the doings of our fathers and the constitution of the United States, I have to say they present to us a glorious prospect in the future, but one we cannot attain to until the present abuses in the government are corrected.

You have heard our Judge relate an incident which is only one more among numberless abuses perpetrated by the rulers of the nation. The particulars of this incident can be found upon our dockets, showing that the President of the United States assumes to himself power to remove a circuit Judge. I am not a lawyer, but I wish to propound a question—By what law, constitutional or statute, has the President a right to remove a United States Judge, except for illegal conduct or inability? It is, to say the least, a flagrant assumption of power. What business have they thus to remove our judges? What end have they in view? I'll tell you, it is—

"Tickle me, tickle me, O Billy do,
And in your turn I'll tickle you."

I have perhaps, detained the congregation too long. May God bless you. Amen.

Charge to a Newly Installed Editor.

The editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, who is something of a wit in his way, in welcoming to the tripod one of his brethren, who has lately been appointed editor of a religious paper, thus solemnly charges him as to the proper method of discharging his duties.

Firstly—If any man be in this office by purpose, he is not in by rights. No boy was ever brought up for an editor. No father ever thought, "I will educate my son for an editor." No aspiring young man said, "I will be an editor." It is an accidental succession. Now if you desired to be an editor, lived for it, saw it coming, calculated it a week before you found yourself one, you are not in the regular line. (This to test our calling.)

Secondly—If you have any particular friend go and embrace him for the last time. For when you refuse his advice "how to make your paper more interesting," or exercise the editorial discretion in declining an article that he said in an N. B. you may do as you like without the least offence, he is off after that offish. (Encouragement.)

Thirdly—Make to yourself friends of the Postmaster General and all the Postmasters in particular. (Reasons obvious.)

Fourthly—Do all the good you can and as little harm, for these will be your main chances.

Fifthly—Put away the delusive notion that all honest men pay their debts. (Exceptions.)

Sixthly—Blessed be they that expect nothing for they shall not be disappointed; as you will, if you expect an easy life or rich living. (Instance.)

Seventhly—Acquaint yourself early with those agents who do nothing, and strike them off, and those patrons who consider they do a favor by reading the paper and having nothing to do with them. Neither ever yet supported a paper, and the more such friends it had, the worse for it.

Eighthly—Reject many of your own manuscripts as well as other people's.

Nitnthly—Never think you are done or through when you are through. Begin again.

Finally, and to conclude—Look out for all things. Be prepared to go through thick and thin—especially through thin.

THE GULF OF BOTHNIA.—There is not an inch of the Gulf of Bothnia but we have crossed over; it is a very strange place; the effect of the irregular refraction is very singular; the other morning we saw a light-house up in the air, and on looking at the chart it proved to fully 50 or 60 miles off. Ships appear when they are nearly a day's sail from them, now with three hulls, now without sails, in a moment with a cloud of canvass, now turned upside down, and half a dozen ships are over the other, all as large as the biggest three-decker; when you come up with her she is some insignificant little coaster. We are within a couple of degrees of the Arctic Circle; the sun does not set until 10 P. M., and rises about 2; we have broad daylight all the time he is below the horizon. We are going on up to the head of the Gulf, and when there we shall see the sun at midnight.—Letter from an Officer in the Napier Fleet.

☞ Dr. P., who is attached to a Parisian theatre in the quality of a physician, expressed his astonishment that a man and woman were not created at the same time, instead of the latter springing from the rib of our first parent. A young actress standing by, remarkable for the graceful turn which she ever gives to the expression of her ideas said—"Was it not natural, sir, that the flower should come after the stem."

THE INDIANS.

Who are they? and how should they be treated? In another column of to-days paper will be found an account of an important movement in the Choctaw nation of Indians.

No true Christian or Philanthropist, much less a Latter-day Saint, can view with indifference the onward march of civilization, among the noble sons of the forest, and the changes affected by the introduction of science and the arts of civilized life again among these degraded, descendants of illustrious sires. Illustrious, from their early history, as set forth in their sacred records — the Book of Mormon — when two great and powerful nations from the loins of Abraham, spread over the greater portion of North and South America; the ruins of whose magnificent cities and stupenduous works of art are profusely scattered over this vast continent.

These exhibit unmistakable evidences of departed greatness, and proclaim in silent grandeur, the fulfillment of that prophetic declaration of Lehi, their common progenitor, that "inasmuch as ye keep not the commandments of the Lord, ye shall be cut off from his presence."

Yet the promise is extended unto their children — that a remnant shall be saved and restored to the knowledge which was had among their fathers, and gentiles shall become nursing fathers unto them; and notwithstanding their long night of darkness, they are destined again to play an important part in the history of this country.

Because we hear of occasional robberies and murders committed by the warlike bands that roam among the mountains and deserts of the far West, many of our countrymen are led to breath out threatenings against the whole race, and can scarcely refrain from wreaking their vengeance upon every one they chance to meet, as if the poor Indian possessed not one redeeming quality.

This is as absurd and manifestly wicked as it would be to deal in like manner with our own citizens indiscriminately, because roberies and murders are committed among us.

Chastisement should be inflicted upon them only so far as necessary to hold them in check, while we teach them our superiority more by an enlightened and generous policy towards them, than by our military prowess.

While true policy on the part of our government, would dictate that all our frontier settlements and military outposts should be guarded by a strong force, sufficient to over awe the Indians, yet all our intercourse with them should be characterized by that integrity and forbearance, that will convince them that their conquerors are their friends, and the white man, though master, is not a relentless tyrant.

THE MORMON GOVERNOR.

Brigham Young must be a spirit-rapper, if we are to believe his statement as to how he gained wealth. In a lecture at the Tabernacle he said:

"Thousands of dollars worth of property in houses and lands, which the Lord gave me, are now in the East in the hands of our enemies. I never said they were mine, they were the Lord's, and I was one of His servants. When I went to Kirtland I had not a cent in the world, for previous to this I had given away everything I possessed, that I might be free to go forth and proclaim the plan of salvation to the inhabitants of the earth. Neither had I shoes to my feet, and I had to borrow a pair of pants and a pair of boots. I staid there five years, and accumulated five thousand dollars. How do you think I accomplished this? Why, the Lord Almighty gave me those means. I have often had that done for me that has caused me to marvel. I know as well as I know that I am standing before you to-day, that I have had money put into my trunk, and into my pocket, without the instrumentality of any man. This I know to a certainty."—[St. Louis Presbyterian.

Wonder if Jesus was not a spirit rapper? When he needed money to pay his taxes he sent Peter to catch a fish which had in him the necessary coin. When they needed a little more wine at the wedding, he set them to pouring out water, and behold when they drank it was wine! When 5,000 people satiated their voracious appetites off his five loaves, he gathered up twelve baskets fragments!

Elijah must have been one also, for sometimes his meals were brought to him by the ravens ready cooked; at another time the widow's cruse of oil supplied him for months; and when he had to flee from his country for killing the priests of Baal, an angel awoke him from sleep, as he rested himself in the woods, and gave him a pitcher of water and a cake baked upon the coals, which meal lasted him forty days!

His successor, Elisha, was just another such a one; for when the widow cried to him for means to satisfy her husband's creditors, who were about to sell her children, he set her to pouring oil out of a little pot, and the oil continued to run until she had filled all her own vessels and her neighbors too, and then sold the oil to pay her debts!

Think Job must have been one too, for God gave him much wealth; and after the devil robbed him of all his children and friends, his horses, cattle, sheep, asses, cash and goods, the Lord gave him again more than all he possessed before. Indeed, the men of God, anciently, seemed to be all of that sort. Query: Does the Spirit ever rap the Presbyterian?

MISSIONARIES FROM UTAH.

The address in to-day's paper from the first Presidency to the Missionaries from Utah, has been mislaid, and until now our searches for it were fruitless, which is our apology to the elders for it appearing so late in our columns; it will, nevertheless, be gratifying to them to learn, though late, that while they are engaged in the self-sacrificing and arduous labors of love among strangers and in distant climes, they are not forgotten in the councils and prayer circles of their brethren in Zion.

Gov. Young's Fourth of July address, which we publish to-day from G. D. Watt's report in the Deseret News, and which we listened to with much satisfaction as it was delivered in Salt Lake City, though spontaneous and unpremeditated as all his discourses are, contain many important suggestions relative to the government and institutions of the United States, to which we invite the attention and consideration of all our readers.

LECTURE.

We attended the Lecture given by Mr. Copway, at the Centenary Church, on Thursday evening last, his subject — the Religion, Poetry and Eloquence of the American Indians — was well handled, but his remarks showed that he had not studied the religious part of his subject as well as he might have done; we could refer him to a work that would show him where the connecting link between the Indian and white man is, and give him stronger arguments than the serpents going on his belly to prove it. — His next lecture comes off on Monday evening next at the same place.

We find ourself firmly seated in the editorial chair supplied from the establishment of Mr, A. T. Riley, 115 Morgan St., where our friends can not only obtain new chairs, but get their old ones reseated, as well as their sofas, and all kinds of furniture repaired.

Correspondence of the Luminary.

The High Council to all the Saints in St. Louis, and throughout this Stake of Zion—Greeting:

Beloved brethren and sisters, being called of God, and accepted by you as the High Council of this stake of Zion, we wish to prove ourselves worthy of this high and holy calling, and of your utmost faith and confidence; and as we cannot converse with you all personally, as we would desire, we purpose writing you from time to time such counsels and instructions as we may deem necessary for your welfare and salvation in the kingdom of our God.

We wish in our debut to call your attention to the subject of tithing. In as much as we have covenanted in our late General Conference to observe the law of tithing, it is henceforth the duty of all Latter-day Saints in this stake of Zion, to pay the tenth of all they possess, and the tenth portion of their income to the Bishop. This law is now as much binding upon us as is baptism for the remission of sins, and the imposition of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, or any other commandment of the Almighty. This may appear to some a hard saying, and may call forth the rebellious spirit of man; and some may be ready to say, who is the Lord, that I should deliver unto Him or His servants a tenth of my hard earnings? And how do I know that it is a commandment of God? "Oh fools, and slow of heart to believe all the prophets have spoken"—Jesus. Now be not hasty in judging, nor quick in condemning—things are not at all times as they appear. He who has given you an existence, spiritually and temporally, and has given you reasoning faculties—the gift of hearing, seeing, tasting, and smelling—and who has sustained you all your life long, is the Lord God of Israel; and He it is who requires you to live by every word that proceedeth from His mouth. Call to mind your past experience in His church. When you were baptised did you not receive the remission of sins according to His promise? When the Elders of Israel laid their hands upon your heads, did you not receive the gift of the Holy Ghost? Have not your sick been healed through anointing with oil in the name of Jesus? Have not your sons and your daughters prophecied by the power of God? And have you not seen visions and dreamed dreams by the same spirit? Have you not been blessed with a positive knowledge that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the Lord, that the Book of Mormon is a revelation of Jesus Christ, and that this church and this kingdom is that spoken of by the prophet Daniel, that "should be set up in the last days and never come to an end, but be given unto the Saints forever and ever?" The good spirit within you answers, yes; I know that these things are true and faithful. Then why hesitate to give unto the Lord that which is his own? Is not the gold and the silver His, and the cattle upon a thousand hills? Then be humble and obedient ye Saints of the last days, and honor the law of tithing by honestly paying the uttermost farthing, so that your heart condemns you not; for remember God is greater than your heart, and may call you hence to give an account of your stewardship in a day or hour you think not of.

Some will say, surely the Lord does not take cognizance of such trivial matters as whether I pay tithing or not. Let no man thus deceive himself, for trifles make the sum of life. He that is faithful over a few things shall be made ruler over many. The Lord does not consider this a trivial matter; He condemns the disobedient to the law of tithing as robbers. He once charged His entire nation with robbing Him; and that people were considered the best, and were certainly the most favored people on the earth. We who are called to be Saints are yet more favored and more greatly blessed than were they—our obligations are therefore proportionately increased. Then, shall we rob God? Heaven forbid! better far that we pay a tenth as a sort of interest of the capital our Heavenly Father has lent us, than be cursed as was ancient Israel—sent to hell and there compelled to pay the uttermost farthing. The prophet Malachi says, Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, wherein have we robbed Thee? In tithes and in offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house; and prove me now herewith saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Perhaps some may be ready to say, well I don't object to the principle, for I believe it is a true doctrine; but I don't feel like paying my money into the hands of men for fear they should use it improperly; if Jesus, Moses, or the old prophets were on earth, I would not mind trusting it with them, but these men are mortal like ourselves. I don't mind being baptised by them, and receiving the holy spirit through their administration, and indeed, I dare trust my salvation in their hands, but my blessed money I dare not trust with any man

Oh consistency, whither hast thou fled? We profess to be children of Abraham; then let us learn a lesson of him upon the subject. As Father Abraham was returning one day from the battle-field, he met on his way the King of Salem, who was a High Priest and President of the Saints of the church of God in all the world (as Brigham Young is at this time). The name of this King was Melchisedec. He was, moreover, the Lord's principle agent for tithing funds. We are informed that Abraham paid him the tenth of all he possessed, but what he did with it the Bible does not inform us; and I don't suppose Abraham ever asked him to show his cash book, and if he did he was answered, doubtless, "melez vous de bos affairs."

Suppose you pay your tithing to the Bishop, and he should act dishonestly with it, would the sin lay at your door? Certainly not; but the Bishop would be empowered to judge you and condemn you according to the law of the Lord, but you could have no jurisdiction whatever; then judge not that ye be not judged. Has the Bishop license to do wrong with impunity? Certainly not. See Doc. and Cov. page 156, 5th section: "And even the Bishop, who is a judge, and his counsellors, if they are not faithful in their stewardships, shall be condemned, and others shall be planted in their stead." But how do I know that this tithing is a commandment of God? says one. Do you believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and that the book of Doc. and Cov. contains the revelations of Jesus Christ? Oh, yes; I believe that with all my heart. Read section 107: "Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the Bishop of my church of Zion for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, &c. * * * And after that, those who have thus been tithed shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually, and this shall be a standing law with them forever. * * And I say unto you, if my people observe not this law to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy; behold, verily I say unto you, it shall not be a land of Zion unto you; and this shall be an example unto all the stakes of Zion; even so. Amen."

No person possessing the Spirit can possibly be mistaken with the foregoing. Every one who has a desire to know the will and commandments of the Lord must see from the above revelation that tithing is a positive command from heaven, and no man or woman will be found worthy to stand who will not comply with it.

No man or woman whose heart is properly attuned, or whose spirit is right before God, will refuse to obey this law. And as for the excuses some are making for their disobedience and rebellion, we are perfectly ashamed of them.

Some will plead poverty as an apology for non-obedience. If you can persuade the Lord that you are too poor to be honest—well, but on the other hand, suppose you cannot, "there's the rub." Go ask the followers of Erving in England, Scotland, France, or elsewhere, if they can pay tithing, and they will answer you affirmatively. And their circumstances are as indifferent as were yours in the Old World. Yet they can pay tithing, and they do so—and that to support a false religion. How much more ought we, since we know that it is a commandment of God, and is for the support of a religion that is true as the Almighty, and pure as His throne.

The fact is, we have been so much indulged in our infancy in this church, that some of us are like spoiled children. We have been fed with milk and other weak aliment in our own father-land, and by the time we ought to become teachers of men, we have need that some one teach us the first principles of the Gospel of Christ.

Then awake to righteousness, all ye people who have taken upon you the name of Christ; deal honorably with all men, and more especially with the Lord your God. Do not procrastinate the day of tithing, but act promptly and energetically in the discharge of every duty; do not say in your heart as some have said, I intend to pay tithing, but I will wait until I get to the valley. Suppose such die on the way, what will be their position? They will be classed with the rebellious of the house of Israel, and their lot will be cast with thieves and robbers until they learn to be honest.

In conclusion, we say unto you, work whilst it is called to-day, for to-day is a day for the tithing of God's people, for he that is tithed shall not be burned at the coming of the Son of Man; for after to-day cometh the burning; see Doc. and Cov. page 155, Sec. 5th. And be assured that unless your righteousness exceed the righteousness of Irvingites, Scribes and Pharisees, and Christians, ye can in no wise enter the kingdom.

Signed in behalf of the Council.

SALVATION AND SACRIFICE.

How intimately blended together are salvation and sacrifice! What magnanimity of soul has been developed by the practical elucidation of these subjects. Sacrifice is the accumulating handmaid of salvation and the reward of conformity—how prolific! and virtue as embodied in the nobility of a heavenly order shrinks not from her manifestations. God gave his Son in sacrifice as a pattern to the world and for the redemption of humanity. What a vast donation! The Saviour's whole life was a scene of sacrifice. "The foxes had holes, and the birds of the air had nests, but He had not where to lay His head;" and through Him virtue was exemplified unto perfection; and through Him a salvation was to be effected which comprehended the world, its inhabitants, and everything which it contains. Annihilation was no feature in any department of His universally extended plan; said Jesus: "Gather up the fragments that nothing may be lost;" and herein is conveyed liberality and economy—the righteous adjustment and application of extremes. He marked out the straight line of propriety in all things: save everything and lose nothing was the sentiment he breathed. He gathered by liberality, and saved by generous sacrifice. By goodness and virtue He obtained wisdom from His Father to circumscribe all things and render them profitable to the economy of heaven, and glorify God the Eternal; by the spirit of His office as Saviour and Redeemer, which He obtained through obedience to His Father's will, He taught, both by precept and example, the necessity of adhering to the true and everlasting plan of salvation, which was in Him magnified and made honorable; and Him his Father glorified, and the glory which He received He gave unto His disciples, that they all might be one who went forth in accordance with the divine mandate, to teach salvation. "Gather my Saints together unto me: those that have made a covenant by sacrifice; Ps. l., 1. Let the language of simplicity be briefly employed to convey a domestic idea of this salvation—"Gather up the fragments that nothing may be lost;" neither eat up nor hoard up, for to eat after having a sufficiency promotes gluttony and destruction of the body. Be temperate in all things, and to hoard up, arrests the progress of God's heavenly gifts for the good and necessary use of man; freely ye have received, freely give. Give play to those illuminating principles which truly enrich the possessors and are attainable without money and without price—temperance, charity, and liberality. Be sober, be honorable, be generous, frank and free, that the Gods may smile upon us, their impress and workmanship.

My brethren and sisters in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, let us maintain the dignity of our high and holy callings; let us be chaste, pure, and virtuous; mighty in weakness to fulfill the purposes of Jehovah, and our whole deportment abound in that which is lovely for the truth's sake, and as witness thereof in meekness to the end, that we may be saved in the kingdom of our God, and partake of the rich and everlasting treasures of life, eternal glory, honor, and immortality, which that righteous organization so overwhelmingly affords; where the redeemed will dwell rejoicing in the virtuous exercise of every accomplishment; where capacity and education will greet each other until spiritual charms in heavenly effusion will gladden eternity, beat swords into plough shares, spears into pruning hooks, and tame the lion. W. M.

TO THE MISSIONARIES FROM UTAH.

Dear Brethren—Though at times you may be tempted to imagine that you are forgotten at home, while struggling amid the powers of evil and darkness, and among strangers, without purse or scrip, to proclaim the pure principles of the everlasting Gospel, and to gather out the honest in heart from every nation under heaven, still you are ever sustained by our faith, and remembered in our prayers. We are perfectly familiar with the trials to human nature which have to be endured by all who magnify their calling in the Priesthood.

In obedience to counsel, you have turned your backs upon the endearments of family, home, and the sweet society of your brethren, and cheerfully gone forth to meet the scowls of evil spirits, and the scoffs and revelings of the wicked, with hearts burning with salvation for your fellows; and the contrast is so great that the unaided spirit of man would not only shrink from the calling, but utterly refuse and be entirely incompetent for the task.

To cheer and assist you in your arduous, though most pleasing of all labors to a Saint, we shall occupy a portion of the columns of the Deseret News, from time to time, in furnishing you home news that may be of interest, and making those suggestions and giving such counsel as may be dictated by the Holy Spirit.

In times of sore temptation and trial the human mind is prone to doubt and despondency, and, without strict humility, faith and obedience, is liable to make shipwreck of the fairest prospects, hence the instruction to get the Spirit of the Lord, if you have not got it, and keep it and walk in it continually, taking it for the man of your counsel, cannot be too often reiterated or too closely adhered to by all Saints, and more especially by those who are bearing truth to the nations of the earth.

Your distant and scattered situation renders it impossible for you to receive direct communication from us on every question that may arise, even when you may be very anxious to do so. This is wisely designed for our benefit in the far-reaching policy of the economy of God in regard to this probation, for by this plan all are made subject for light, guidance and true intelligence, to Him who rules and controls all things in wisdom, and "lighteth every one that cometh into the world,"

Therefore, upon true faith, repentance, baptism by the proper authority, and the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost, it is not only the privilege, but the duty of every individual to live in accordance with the light and requirements of the Gospel, as to be able to ask and receive revelation from the Almighty at all times, and under all circumstances, whenever necessary, to enable him to magnify his calling, roll forth salvation and honor our Father in heaven.

These are simple truths which you are familiar with, and which you all do, or should, know for yourselves, for salvation is an individual work—each for himself primarily, and secondarily each for all in assisting his brethren and the human family at large, so far as lies in his power.

The mission to the British Isles is now under the immediate superintendence of Elder Franklin D. Richards of the Quorum of the Twelve, and circumstances enable him to consult us at times on most questions of grave importance. This is not so much the case with the Scandinavian, French, Channel Islands, Swiss, German, Italian, Hindoston, Australian and Cape of Good Hope missions. From this cause, from office connections and other facts, it is deemed advisable that the missionaries on the Eastern Continent look more immediately to Elder Richards for counsel on those movements and views about which they may happen to feel any serious dubity; at the same time we shall always be pleased to learn from you your situations and prospects, and be ever ready to give such replies to questions, and offer such instructions as the exigencies of the case may require.

The Elders from Utah now in Australia, Hindostan and the Cape of Good Hope, are at full liberty, upon the reception of this article, to tarry in their respective missionary fields, to extend their labors to new fields, or return home, as the Holy Ghost may dictate in their councils, with reference to their respective joint or individual movements, and all will be right.

Our public works are progressing steadily, but not at all times with that energy and speed that we could desire; still the Saints in Utah are constantly increasing in faith and good works.

Lest you may not get full files of the News, we will add that the foundation and adobie portion of the wall around the Temple Block are finished, and the workmen are now laying the caping stone, which will prepare the wall for the iron railing.

Workmen are busily engaged in placing the huge blocks of sandstone and fine conglomerate in the massive foundations for the Temple.

The natives are at peace with us, and with each other, and the Lord is still blessing us with the choice blessings of heaven and earth, insomuch that we rejoice in His Spirit, in union and general good health, with an abundance of the necessaries, and many of the luxuries of life.

From your brethren in the Gospel,

Brigham Young,
Heber C. Kimball,
Jedediah M. Grant.

The overland India and China mail had arrrived with dates from Bombay to Oct. 31, Hong Kong to Oct. 11. It is asserted that the Russians have invaded Bokharia, and had defeated a force of 50,000 men sent out by Badshah Koban. It is reported that the King of Kohan had sent a request for British aid against the Russians. In China there was no change of moment in political matters.

At Canton there had been less fighting, and the insurgents had retired further from the city. The Chinese families were returning to Canton, but there was nothing doing in the port. Shanghai dates to Oct. 2, state, the Imperial cause was progressing favorably. The plempotentiaries of the United States, England and France, had arrived at Shanghai, and would start for Pekin on the 5th.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

Arrival of the Steamer North Star.

The steamer North Star has arrived from California with dates to the 16th, and 1,384,000 in specie. The Falcon arrived at Aspinwall on the 13th, and would leave the same evening for Havana.

The Susquehannah was at San Francisco on the 11th, and the Mississippi at Honolulu on the 23d.

The English and French squadrons were at San Francisco.

The news is unimportant. The mining news is cheering.

The North Star brings 309 passengers; her mails came down by the Golden Gate.

The Panama railroad is progressing finely.

The Susquehannah has gone to Borneo.

Commander Ringgold, S. C. Ringgold, Secretary of the exploring expedition, and E. D. Perry, bearer of dispatches, passengers on the Susquehannah, arrived on the North Star.

The emigrants by the plains arrive daily, and report great hardships on the route.

The steamer Golden State arrived at San Francisco, from New York in 23 days 10 hours (?) the quickest time on record.

The papers generally favored the proposed mail stage route across the plains.

The interest on the bonds due in January has been forwarded to New York.

The Legislature meets on the 3rd of January; there are half a dozen candidates for speaker.

There have been several storms on the Isthmus; not much damage done; the weather is now settled.

There is nothing important from the revolution; Mela still holds a strong position and command of the army—with the exception of Bagota; the provinces are quiet, and declared in favor of the government and constitution.

Dates from the Sandwich Islands are to the 28th. The officers of the Susquehanna report the annexation feeling strong; the heir apparent, whose signature is only wanted to complete the treaty of cession, has sent word that he was prepared to sign it. Propetry had risen in anticipation of the event.

Independence, Dec. 9.—Our citizens held an adjourned meeting to day, to memorialize Congress on the subject of affording greater protection to life and property of persons passing over the plains. The necessity of the goverment doing something in the matter has long been felt, but our representations have availed nothing. The loss of the United States mail, let alone the lives, may open the eyes of the authorities at Washington.

A private dispatch to Child, Pratt & Co., of this city from C. A. Kinkead announces his arrival at Weston accompanied with an escort and the Salt Lake mail.

Slander.—Against slander there is no defense. Hell cannot boast so foul an end, nor man deplore so foul a foe. It stabs with a word, with a nod, with a shrug, with a look, with a smile. It is a pestilence walking in darkness, spreading contagion far and wide, which the most wary traveler cannot avoid. It is the heart-searching dagger of the assassin. It is the poisoned arrow whose wound is incurable. It is as mortal as the sting of the most deadly asp; murder is its employment, innocence its prey, and ruin its sport.—Burke.

In Solid Earnest.—One of the guns used to fire a salute in Roxbury, at the Know-Nothing demonstration, was loaded with ball cartridge. The ball struck the residence of William Emerson, on Winthrop street, and passed entirely through one side of the house, entering the second story just below the window sill, and scattering the lath and plastering all over the front chamber, where the family sleep, and doing considerable damage.

Miscellaneous.

The Indian Murder near Fort Laramie.

We have been permitted to examine letters from Mr. C. A. Kinkead and C. L. Barnes, from which we learn some particulars of the recent massacre and mail robbery by the Sioux Indians, near Fort Laramie.

It appears that Mr. Kinkead left Fort Laramie on the 13th of November, in company with Mr. Jamison, the conductor of the Salt Lake mail, and his his two assistants, one of whom was named Wheeler—the other's name is not stated. When the party had reached a point about twenty-two miles from Laramie and six miles from Maj. Dripps' station, they were attacked by fifteen Sioux Indians, and at the first fire two of the party were killed and a third mortally wounded. When Mr. Jamison, who was about 100 yards in advance was shot, his mule ran back to the wagon in which Mr. Kinkead was seated, as yet, unhurt. Mr. K. concluded to mount him and escape, but as he emerged from the wagon, a ball grazed his neck, and he had hardly mounted the mule, when he received two arrows in his breast, two in his hips, and two in his back. He fell senseless to the earth, but recovering soon, he saw two Indians making off with his mule. They made signs for him to go back from where he came, and he started for Dripps' Station. Fortunately, Major Dripps was out, engaged in scattering arsenic to poison wolves, which abound in that region. He met Mr. Kinkead, and assisted him to the house. Arrived there, Mr. Kinkead dispatched a messenger to Fort Laramie, and an escort was sent to bring him to the fort.

He is now staying at Fort Laramie, and is rapidly recovering. At the time the attack was made, he had with him about $20,000—one half in coin, and the rest in drafts. The coin was carried off by the Indians, but he succeded in saving the drafts.—The mail bags were cut open and ransacked, but according to Mr. Barnes' statement, the letters were recovered, and will be forwarded as soon as possible.—[Republican, 13th.

Important Movement in the Choctaw Nation.

In the Fort Smith Herald, of the 25th ult., we find some very important information from the Choctaw nation. They have met the religious enthusiasts constituting the American Board of Missions in the proper way. It will be recollected that in a meeting held at Hartford, Conn., some time since, they passed a resolution requiring the Choctaw legislature to repeal a law which they had passed, prohibiting the Missionaries of the Board from giving instructions to the slaves of the Choctaws, in the Mission or Sunday schools. To this law, the Prudential Committee, headed by Rev. Mr. Treat, objected, and threatened to withdraw their patronage from the Choctaw schools. The Board, by their recent session at Hartford, approved the decision of the Prudential Committee, and this restriction was transmitted to the Council of the nation. Col. Harkins, the Chief, has met the threat in a manly manner. In a recent communication to the Council, he says:

It seems that the American Board, at a recent meeting held at Hartford, Conn., had under consideration the School Act of the last session of the Choctaw General Council, and were so offended at it that they at once passed resolutions to dissolve their connection with the Choctaw schools. What are we to infer from this, but that they have had their secret designs, and a greater feeling for the welfare of the slaves among us than for the Indians? There is no State in the South that would be willing for the abolitionists to teach their slaves; and in fact they dare not attempt it; and is it because we are Indians, that they suppose they can have this privilege among us? If the abolitionists are not satisfied to teach our children alone, then I say for one, let the connection between us and the American Board be dissolved, and every abolitionist be driven out of the nation at once. We have treated the Missionaries sent out to us by the American Board as well as ever Missionaries were treated by any unenlightened people.

We placed our children in their hands. We gave them lands to cultivate, and placed under their management our school funds, thus showing on our part not only a reliance upon their labors, but our open and confiding spirit, and never once have we persecuted them, or attempted to drive out of the country even those whom we knew not to be good men. We have not prevented them from preaching to our slaves. This has been the course pursued by the Choctaws towards the missionaries sent out among us; but we had a right to pass laws prohibiting them from teaching our slaves, because we know them to be a dangerous people, who neither regard the law of God or that of man as binding upon their conduct or conscience. Because we have done this, the Board looks upon it as an outrage, and declares her intention to withdraw her teachers from our schools. Let it be done, and the sooner the better. And now let us look for missionaries and teachers from such as we can live in peace and unity with, from whom we will have no fears that they will not teach any thing beyond what the apostles of Jesus Christ taught in their day.

If to please the abolitionists the Council should repeal the act which has given so much offense to the Board, you will see a party spirit arise among us, which will not be put down until every abolitionist is made to leave the nation.

Repeal that act, and you may at once agree upon your Council being dictated to by the abolitionists of the North.

Our people need not fear that the schools will cease on account of the threatened withdrawal of the present teachers by the American Board, for it was our money that brought them hither, and surely our money can again bring as good, if not better, teachers.

Upon another matter Col. Harkins has taken an equally important step. He approves the bill introduced by Hon. Mr. Johnson, into the Senate, providing for the establishment of three Territorial governments out of the Indian territory inhabited by the Choctaws, Cherokees, Creeks, Chickasaws, and other Indians, with provision for their ultimate admission into the Union as States. The Cherokees, under the direction of John Ross, have manifested strong opposition to this proposition; but Col. Harkins and the Choctaws take a more rational view of it, and are willing to accept the terms of the bill.

In a communication to the General Council, Col. Harkins says:

The Choctaws ought, in my opinion, at this Council, to give notice to the Government of the United States, that they are willing to adopt Johnson's Territorial bill, and wishes to see it pass Congress in its present shape. That bill certainly gives the Choctaws all they can ask for—it secures them in their homes, and places them on a stronger footing than ever; and not only that it makes them a free people—citizens of the United States—gives them the same protection that an American would have at home or in a foreign country. It places the Choctaws on a level with the white man. It gives them a delegate in Congress, to represent them on all questions involving the interest of the people. We have sustained great losses by not having a delegate.

And now when the United States holds out her arms to us, and are willing to receive us as one of the Territories of the Union, without interfering with any "Treaty Stipulations"—but securing more strongly our right to the country we now hold, giving us the right to dispose of it as we please. We can either retain the lands as a national property, or divide them among our citizens.

Is it right or wise in the Choctaws to reject a kind and liberal offer, and follow the fate of the Nebraska Indians?

I ask, what is to become of the Choctaws if they reject this bill? Can they expect to remain a distinct people always? It cannot be; but will eventually, and that before many years, be swallowed up, and perhaps regardless of their just rights.

We may depend upon it as being a fixed fact, that our Indian days of peace are forever departed from us, and that no opposition from us can stay the onward march of the people of the United States in their career to greatness and the full occupancy of the American Continent. We have no power or influence to bear upon any movement of the Government, for we are looked upon as children—as wards under her care and protection, and that she has the power to do as she pleases with us. There is nothing the Choctaws can do to change the course of things.

Their only chance to live and exist as a people, will be to educate and civilize as fast as possible the rising generation. And surely now is the time for us to stand unitedly. We should consider well our situation, and the course we are about to take at this time, for one misstep may prove disastrous and fatal to our people. I recommend that the Council take this matter into consideration, and appoint a committee to report and point out the advantages and disadvantages of the bill to the Choctaws.

The committee, it is understood, had made a report favorable to the bill, but the Council had taken no final action on the subject. All enlightened Choctaws were for it—the missionaries are opposed to it, and will probably influence all the church members to go against the bill. The Chickasaws are represented to be opposed to the bill. The Fort Smith Herald says: "From the present aspect of affairs in the Choctaw nation, we may safely conclude that they will soon become one of us," and hopes, at some future day, to see Col. Harkins "a member of Congress from the State of Chata."

THE RESCUE OF DR. KANE.

The great drift of Artic Ice of the floe of 1853-4 has ceased, but Dr. Kane has not yet arrived, and fears are entertained for his ultimate safety.

There can be, we think, no doubt that this vessel, the Advance, is frozen in, and has therefore no means to come away until another floe, and years may elapse before another takes place. There have been but three great Arctic drifts in the last fifteen years; the first of these reached lat, 50 deg. north in March, 1852, and continued until September of that year; the second commenced in December, 1850, and continued till August 1851. Upon that drift the Advance and Rescue rode, in spite of cold so intense that it congealed quicksilver full six months and six days—a wonderful testimony of a super-intending Providence; the Erebus and Terror, Franklin's abandoned ships, rode past the coast of New Foundland in April, 1851, on the same chrystal floe, and were the ships "housed-in," seen by a vessel bound from Limerick to Quebec; the third drift commenced in December, 1853, and continued in prodigious flow till into the month of October, 1854, a term of greater duration than I have ever before recorded. Past observation leads me to the conclusion that another drift of great extent need not be expected the coming year.

Dr. Kane and his little band of sixteen noble souls, went forth to the frozen zone, upon a glorious errand—they went to seek and to save those who were lost. Should they who so nobly stepped forward in a work of mercy, who periled life to save life, be abandond to starvation and to death? No, no, they must be rescued! Thousands and tens of thousands of kind hearts will sustain me in this reply.

The venerable father of Dr. Kane, (Judge Kane, of the United States District Court of Eastern Pennsylvania,) received letters from his son at Upernavik, which is within the Artic circle, and in latitude about 73 deg. north; he then was on his way to Cape Alexander, which is in latitude about 77 deg. north, longitude about 75 degrees west, and intended to proceed thence as far to the north as the ice would permit, and then make his way by land toward the long and anxiously sought geographical pole of our earth. It is probable that the great flow of ice has opened a way, and his youthful ambition has tempted him still onward, and in the mean time his vessel has remained frozen in, and on his return to the Advance has been unable to get away.

Truth.—If there is one more than another which we would teach a child, it would be a love of truth. All other things would be worthless without that growing excellency in human character. Without it, the noblest structure is but a whited sepulchre. With all qualificatins a man is to be shunned when deficient in this. The beholder may admire a fabric of general beauty and semetry, but when the seam of falshood is found running from capstone to base, he will shun the dangerous presence. There are few things more painful, experienced in our intercourse with men, than to feel that they are unworthy of our confidence—that they are not what they seem—that they will betray while they smile—that they tread upon a carter's crust, where all is hollow beneath. Teach the child to tell the truth—venerate and love it. Teach him so that whatever wrong he may commit, he will frankly and promptly admit it all. Reward the honest speech. Washington's father never was prouder of his boy than when he acknowledged his fault.

WHO WILL ECONOMISE CONSISTENTLY?

Conversing with a leather dealer a few weeks ago he said that his business was good at all times, for men and women, must be shod whether times are hard or easy. Very true. All must economise during the present emergency, and too many will economise upon the principle of convenience and present comfort. Many a child will be taken from school, because the school teacher and mantau-maker and milliner can not both be paid. To appear, during the hard times, which may last one or two years in a less fashionable dress or bonnet, would be a present mortification that must be avoided even at the expense of the mental cultivation of the child. Yet two or ten years hence, no one would think the less of the one who economized in dress, while the dwarfed intellect will be felt and regretted, for a whole life time. Many a boy will be taken out of school, on account of hard times, the whole current of life will changed because parents are unwilling their children shall wear cheaper clothing during hard times.

For the sake of appearing fashionably dresssed, the development of mind must be given up. We beg of parents to begin to economise elsewhere than in the school house. Next to the school, comes economy in books. The family that bought ten dollars worth of books last year, must do this year with five dollars worth, or without any; for when retrenchment begins on this subject, it seldom stops short of cutting off the entire supply. The accustomed amount must be paid for boots and shoes, and hats and caps, but the family must sit the whole evening in silence or worthless conversation; or the boys must be allowed to play in the streets because hard times require economy in books. It will be poor economy to allow the precious season of childhood to pass without mental food. Better curtail the expenses of the table than the expenses of the library. Give food to the mind as well as to the body. Some will unthoughtedly stop their papers on the score of exconomy. It will be bad economy. Papers are for the poor. They furnish the cheapest and ought to furnish the best reading. Rich men can afford books, poor ones can afford only papers.

Let any man reflect what an amount of good reading can be furnished at four cents a week, and he will be slow to discontinue his paper. Let any father mark the effect of the paper on the mental development of his children, and then ask if retrenchment should not begin elsewhere. Twenty-four pounds of sugar less, per year—two pounds less per month—one ounce less per day—will furnish a paper in the family. Who could not save an ounce of sugar per day, without missing it half as much as they would a good paper? We might speak of many articles of clothing that could be better dispensed with than a paper. Of course we would not ask a man to do without tobacco for such a purpose. He must slobber if he never reads. We advise all our readers to economise, but let them do it wisely. Let it not begin with the immortal part. Keep good books, good papers, and good schools.—[Indiana American.

TECUMSEH'S HONOR.

AN INDIAN'S WORD AND GRATITUDE.

A correspondent of the Detroit Free Press gives the following, among other deeply interesting anneedotes of the great Indian warrior and prophet, Tecumseh:

While the enemy were in full possession of the country around Monroe and Detroit, Tecumseh, with a large band of his warriors visited the river Raisin. The inhabitants along the river had been stripped of their substance. Old Mr. Rivard (a Frenchman,) who was lame and unable to procure a living for himself and family, had contrived to keep out of sight of the wandering bands of savages a pair of oxen, with which his son was able to procure a scanty support for the family. It so happened, that while at labor with his oxen, Tecumseh who had come over from Malden, met him in the road, and walking up to him said:

"My friend, I must have these oxen. My young men are very hungry, and they have nothing to eat. We must have the oxen."

Young Rivard remonstrated. He told the chief that if he took the oxen his father would starve to death.

"Well," said Tecumseh, "we are the conquerors, and everything we want is ours. I must have the oxen; my people must not starve, but I will not be so mean as to rob you of them. I will pay you one hundred dollars for them and that is far more than they are worth; but we must have them."

Tecumseh got a white man to write him an order on the British Indian agent, Colonel Elliot, who promptly refused to pay it saying:

"We are entitled to our support from the country we have conquered. I will not pay it."

The young man with a sorrowful heart, returned with the answer to Tecumseh, who said:

"To-morrow we will go and see."

In the morning he took young Rivard and went to see the Colonel. On meeting him, he said:

"Do you refuse to pay for the oxen I bought?"

"Yes," said the Colonel; and he reiterated the reason for the refusal.

"I bought them" said the chief, "for my young men, who were very hungry. I promised to pay for them, and they shall be paid for. I have always heard that white nations went to war with each other, and not peaceful individuals; that they did not rob and plunder poor people. I will not."

"Well," said the Colonel, "I will not pay for them."

"You can do as you please," said the Chief; "but before Tecumseh and his warriors came to fight the battles of the great king they had enough to eat, for which they had only to thank the Master of Life and their good rifles. Their hunting grounds supplied them with food enough, and to them they can return."

This threat produced a sudden change in the Colonel's mind. The defection of the great chief, he well knew, would immediately withdraw all the nations of the red men from the British service; and without them, they were nearly powerless on the frontier.

"Well," said the Colonel, "if I must pay I will."

"Give me hard money," said Tecumseh, "not rag money." (Army bills.)

The Colonel then counted out a hundred dollars in coin, and gave them to him. The chief handed the money to young Rivard, and then said to the Colonel:

"Give me one dollar more."

It was given, and handing that also to Rivard he said:

"Take that, it will pay for the time you have lost in getting your money."

On Monday the 27th ult., the great Quebec and Richmond Railway was opened. The State of Maine thus speaks of the occasion:

The great event of connecting Quebec and Lower Canady, by Railway, with the Atlantic Ocean at Portland, was hailed along the line with every demonstration of joy. Numerous triumphal arches, with flags and rows of trees, decorated the road at all points, and the inhabitants of Point Levi, Hallow, New Liverpool, and Chaudiere, together with the workmen whose labors have now terminated, mustered in goodly array to welcome the first passenger train from Quebec that has visited their district, and greeted its approach by loud acclamations and firing of guns and cannon.

THE PREACHER AND THE LAWYERS.

THE WIT OF JESSE LEE.

Jesse Lee one of the first Methodist Preachers in New England, was a man who combined unresting energy and tenderness of sensibility, with an extraordinary propensity to wit. Mr. Stephens, in his new work on the "Memorials of Methodism," gives the following specimen of Lee's bonhommie:

As he was riding on horseback one day he was overtaken by two young lawyers, who knew that he was a Methodist preacher, and were disposed to amuse themselves somewhat at his expense. Saluting him, and ranging their horses one on each side of him, they entered into conversation something like the following:

1st Lawyer. I believe you are a preacher, sir?

Lee. Yes, I generally pass for one.

1st L. You preach very often, I suppose?

Lee. Generally every day; sometimes twice, or more.

2d L. How do you find the time to study, when you preach so often?

Lee. I study when riding and read when resting.

1st L. But do you not write your sermons?

Lee. No, not very often.

2nd L. Do you not very often make mistakes in preaching extemporaneously?

Lee. I do, sometimes.

2nd L. How do you do then? Do you correct them?

Lee. That depends upon the character of the mistake. I was preaching one day, and I went to quote the text, "All liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone;" and, by mistake I said, "All lawyers shall have their part ——"

2nd L. (Interupting him.) What did you do with that? Did you correct it?

Lee. O, no indeed! It was to nearly true, I didn't think it worth while to correct it.

"Humph!" said one of them, (with a hasty and impatient glance at the other,) "I don't know whether you are the more the knave or the fool!" "Neither," he quietly replied, turning at the same time his mischievous eyes from one to the other; "I believe I am just between the two!" Finding they were measuring wit with one of its masters, and excessively mortified at their discomfiture, the knights of the green bag drove ahead, leaving the victor to solitude and his own reflections.

HOW THE FIRST CHRISTIANS LIVED.

An approved writer, in describing the religious character of the primitive Christians, observes that when they gave themselves to Christ, they counted all things loss for him and his salvation; and the surrender was an honest, whole-hearted transaction, never to be reconsidered, never to be regretted.

Hence, from the hour of their conversion, they made little amount of property. If it was confiscated by government, or destroyed by the mob, they "took joyfully the spoiling of their goods," assured that in heaven they had a better and incorruptible inheritance. When the cause required, how ready were they to lay it at the feet of the missionaries. Generally, they were poor. A rich Christian! why such a thing was hardly known. However, it may be now, it was then "easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." And if, as an act of special sovereignty, a man of wealth was converted, he seldom retained his riches for a long period; for such was his sympathy for the despoiled and suffering brotherhood, and such his solicitude for the conversion of the perishing that his funds were poured forth as water. Yet poor as were the first Christians, they were liberal to a degree seldom surpassed. We, from our much, give little. They, from their little, gave much. "Their deep poverty abounded unto riches of their liberality." Baptized covetousness was the product of a latter age.

They understood Christ to be in earnest, when, standing but one step from the throne of the universe, he said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." It was not, therefore, with them a matter to be considered, whether they should go or not go.

What a Woman should be, Alphabetically. A woman should be amiable, benevolent, charitable, domestic, economical, forgiving, generous, honest, industrious, judicious, kind, loving, modest, neat, obedient, pleasant, quiet, reflecting, sober, tender, urbane, virtuous, wise, exempalry, yielding and zealous.

What a Woman should not be.—Artful, bold, cross, deceitful, envious, fretful, groveling, hollow-hearted, idle, jadish, knavish, lazy, morose, nonsensical, officious, petulant, quarrelsome, ranting, snappish, talkative, unreasonable, vain, wrangling, extravagant or yawning.—Port Bulletin.

The Revolution in China.—Letters from Canton, dated up to Sept. 26, state, the rebels still hold Faitsham,—the twin city, as it is called,—of Canton, some fifteen miles distant. The Tartar or Imperial camp is plainly to be seen on the hills, and occupying the castles in the rear of Canton, and skirmishes, in which a great deal of powder is expended, and a few are killed or wounded, are of daily occurrence. The rebels have possessed themselve of several forts below Canton, between it and Whampoa, and the river is filled with pirates, so that it is dangerous for an unarmed boat to pass between the two places.

Very little tea comes in from the country, a heavy black mail being demanded by the rebels, who occupy stations between the tea districts and the Canton market. It is said, however, an arrangement has been entered into between the producers and rebels, by which it will be permitted to come down verys hortly. One or two chops have come down and been towed from off Canton to Whampoa by steamers that ply between Canton and Hong Kong.

How beautiful are the smiles of innocence; how endearing the sympathies of love; how sweet the solace of friendship; how lovely the tears of affection. These combined are all characteristic in women. They are the true poetry of humanity, rich pearls clustering around the alter of domestic happiness.

Mormonism in Denmark.—Momonism is said to be making very great progress in Denmark. There are now Mormons in the smallest hamlets. In the Isles of Amack, which is situated quite close to Copenhagen, almost all the women have adopted the worship of the Mormon. Five hundred Jutlanders, recently converted to Mormonism, are about to emigrate to the Mormon colony in the United States. The great eclesiastical commission at Copenhagen has received orders from the government to make researches as to the propagation of Mormonism in Denmark.

LINES TO MY HUSBAND.

I'm thinking of thee, fond one, and my heart
Seems filled to overflowing with the love,
The boundless love for thee, which day by day
Gains fuller, firmer empire o'er my breast;
Thy manly tones, thy whispered words of love,
First woke within my heart the slumbering chords,
Which thrilled responsive to thy touch alone,
And breathed sweet music o'er my inmost soul—
And then as o'er each thought thy image stole,
I deemed I'd given thee all of earthly love
That human heart could ever feel or know.
But when the sacred vow which bound our hearts
Was registered in heaven, and sealed on earth
By those holy and endearing bonds
Which made our being one; when on my brow
You pressed a husband's kiss, and called me wife,
Then, then, I felt a deeper, holier thrill
Vibrating o'er my heart, than e'er before
Had stirred its trembling chords, while o'er my soul
Love's music pealed in deeper, stronger tones.
Since then long years have passed, freighted for us
With much of happiness and earnest joys,
And somewhat too of grief. Life could not be
All fair and bright—heaven wills not thus for man.
And we have had some sorrows midst our joys;
Yet every cloud which darkened o'er our souls
But served to rivet more closely the holy bond
Which bound my heart in deathless love to thee.
When sorrow's storm raged darkly o'er my breast,
Thy soothing tone, thy gentleness of love,
Like "oil upon the troubled waters" fell,
(Tho' thine own heart was bleeding sore the while)
And made me feel though heaven's all-wise decree
Had summoned hence our precious buds of hope,
Whose blossoming we'd fondly thought would shed
Such blissful radiance o'er our hearts and home,
'Twas done in tenderness and not in wrath;
While much was left to cause my erring heart
To swell with thankfulness. That precious gem,
A husband's boundless love, was still mine own.
And bound with mighty ties my heart to earth.
Oh fond one! in this calm and silent hour,
When memory backward glances o'er the past,
Thy countless acts of earnest, manly love
Come up in bright review before my mind,
Causing my heart to thrill with that deep joy
None but a happy wife can ever know.
Oh! if I loved thee when thine earnest tones
First poured their magic o'er my trembling heart,
Waking each holier feeling into life—
If deeper grew that love, when first thy lip
Breathed in mine ear the sacred name of wife,
Surely no words of mine can 'body forth
The depth and fervor of that passion now,
While still thou'rt adding, day by day, new links
To the bright chain which binds my soul to thee.

Discourse by President Heber C. Kimball, Tabernacle, March 19, 1854.

During the past winter I have spoken but seldom in this Tabernacle; for I have been engaged in teaching in other places.

Were the false traditions of past and present generations thrown off entirely, it would be much to the advantage of this people, and of the human family. Jesus Christ could not teach his disciples as freely and as publicly as he otherwise would, had he not been bound from the same cause.

There are many who think, that because they are unlearned, they have not the same amount of tradition as those who are learned; but there is not much differcnce between the two classes in this respect.—The inhabitants of the whole earth, are coated over, as it were, with false traditions, which form an almost impenetrable barrier to the shafts of truth.

I am not what the world calls a learned man; neither is President Young. We never went to any college, except the one sustained by the Latter-day Saints, and we have been in that from the beginning. Let me tell you, gentlemen and ladies, if we had been brought up in palaces, and been sent to school all the days of our lives to get all the education of the world, and were practical men only in these things, would we be of any advantage to this people? A man may pass through a course of education designed to fit him for a doctor, a minister, or a lawyer, and it is often the case that he comes out an ignoramus, or worse than a useless member of society.

President Young and I were born of poor, but honest and industrious parents, in the State of Vermont, when it was new; and we have been in new regions of country from that day to the present time, except when we were in the British Isles preaching the gospel of salvation to a perishing world. We have cleared and subdued the land at various points from Vermont to this place, so that we have had no opportunity for becoming what the world calls educated. But, if it were possible for me to exchange my information for that of the most learned man upon the earth, I would not do it; it would be like exchanging a good, warm substantial suit of clothing for a filthy mess of rags.

He has not my experience; it cannot be purchased with money, nor can men, by all their learning attain to it. Although I have no education of a worldly nature, I have a spirit that knows right from wrong—what is true education, and what is not.—There is quite a difference between the true edueation that all men should have, and that which pertains merely to this life—tho' when coupled together they are both good.

When the flowers begin to bloom on the mountain sides, the ladies try to imitate them with artificial ones. Which would you rather possess in education—the real flower, or the artificial one? Would you not rather have true education, direct from heaven, than the artificial one of the world? The one educates the head and the heart, the other the head alone.

The circumstances I have named rendered it impossible for me to obtain the education of this world; yet the education we have received from God has qualified me and my brethren to instruct kings and rulers, and bring to nought the wisdom of their wise men.

I do not wish you to understand from these remarks that you may with propriety relax your endeavors to educate your children, when you have an opportunity. I should have educated my children, but I have been poor and penniless. Instead of helping my children, who have now come to maturity, they have been required to help me obtain an honest subsistence. This would not have been the case, could I have retained my possessions; but no sooner had I accumulated a little property than it was taken from me by legalized mobs, and neither me nor my brethren could obtain redress.

Query—Which is the most profitable at present to the people and to the rising generation—President Young, and Heber C. Kimball, or their children?—You will all say, let us have the fathers, instead of the children, for the time being. Some would say, put the children to school, and let the old men work until they are dead! dead!! dead!!! I say, let the boys help the father, and let the father and mother live as long as they can; and let the daughters also do their part, for life is as sweet to the parents as to the children. Life is just as sweet to me now as ever it was; but the world has lost its sweetness to me.

A person asked me this morning how it was that the enjoyments of this world, in which he used to take great pleasure, had sunk so much in his estimaton. He said the theatrical performances and other amusements, used to give him much satisfaction and comfort. Then the real and substantial pleasure, and happiness which he now enjoys in heavenly realities, was not in his possession; he therefore took comfort in artificials; but when the real rose, blushing in the midst of its own heavenly perfume, attracted his notice, the gum flowers lost their charms.

When Mormonism absorbs the whole soul, it yields such a rich feast to the passenger, that earthly enjoyments become insipid and valueless. I have attended theatrical performances, from which many good morals can be gleaned. I have also engaged in the dance, which is good exercise to the body; but when compared with the eternal realities of our holy religion, these enjoyments are, in comparison, like chaff to the sterling wheat—the one contains the essentials of life, the other is comparatively valueless. When I go to a dance, it is to please my brethren and my family, at the same time thinking I may perhaps get the spirit of dancing; and when I do, I improve it, and engage in it, as in Mormonism, with all my heart, mind and strength.

I care not what I do, if I do not do wrong, so that I comfort myself, my family or my brethren. But anything that is wrong—anything that violates the holy principles of chastity, virtue, and holiness, I say away with it, and let me be associated with the principles of righteousness, and you who want it may take the whole budget of the world and its fleeting pleasures; only let me have pure, unalloyed metal; and all who desire it, are freely welcome to the dross.

This people, taking them as a community, I believe, would exchange many errors for one truth, and one truth is worth all the errors in existence.—Yea, further—one principle of truth and righteousness is worth the accumulated wealth of all the world, with all its pomp, titles and tinseled show.—The dross which is separated from iron ore is of no great value, but the metal is of worth to make iron and steel, which can be converted into utensils for the use of man, such as plows, shears, spades, shovels, &c. Gold is valuable as a circulating medium, because of its scarcity compared with other metals; otherwise it has no particular value more than any other portion of the globe, only in administering to the necessities of man.

So far as we are concerned, we were taken from the earth, and we may expect to return to it again; and that portion of me which is pure, after the dross of this mortality is separated from it, I expect will be brother Heber. It is that which will be resurrected; but all that is not pure will remain; that is, it will not go back into my body again; and if there are ten parts out of the hundred which are dross and corruption, they will remain in the earth; I do not expect to take that up again, but I expect to take up the purified element that will endure forever; still the dross is beneficial in its place.

I expect that will be the case with brother Willard Richards. He has gone, and it will not be long before brother Brigham and Heber follow after. He has gone to a world of spirits to engage in a work he could not do if he had remained in the flesh. I do not believe he could have done as much work for the general good of the cause of God, had he remained in the flesh, as he can accomplish now in the spirit; for there is a work to done there; the gospel to preach—Israel to gather that they may purify themselves, and become united in one heart and hand.

"What! in the spirit world?" Have I not told you often that the separation of body and spirit makes no difference in the moral and intellectual condition of the spirit? When a person who has always been good and faithful to his God, lays down his body in the dust, his spirit will remain the same in the spirit world. It is not the body that has control over the spirit as to its disposition, but it is the spirit that controls the body. When the spirit leaves the body, the body becomes lifeless. The spirit has not changed one particle of itself by leaving the body. Were I to fall into a mud-hole, I should strive to extricate myself; but I do not suppose I should be any better—any more righteous—any more just and holy when I got out of it, than while I was in it.

Our spirits are entangled in these bodies—held captive, as it were, for a season. They are like the poor Saints, who are for a time obliged to dwell in miserable mud shanties that are mouldering away and require much patching and care to keep them from mingling with mother earth before the time.—They feel miserable in these old, decaying tabernacles, and long for the day when they can leave them to fall, and take possession of another good house.

It seems natural for me to desire to be clothed with immortality and eternal life, and leave the mortal flesh; but I desire to stick to it as long as I can be a comfort to my sisters, brethren, wives and children. Independent of this consideration, I would not turn my hand over to live twenty-five minutes. What else could give birth to a single desire to live in this tabernacle, which is more or less shattered by the merciless storms which have beat upon it, to say nothing of the ravages made upon it by the tooth of time? While I cling to it I must of necessity suffer many pains, rheumatism, head ache, jaw ache, and heart ache; sometimes in one part of my body, and sometimes in another. It is all right; it is so ordained, that we may not cling with too great a tenacity to mortal flesh, but be willing to pass through the vail, and meet with Joseph and Hyrum and Willard, and Bishop Whitney, and thousands of others in the world of spirits.

Are they all together, as we are to-day? I believe all Israel have to be gathered; and to accomplish this, the elders, both in this and the world of spirits, will go forth to preach to the spirits in prison.—Where? Down into hell? I appeal to the elders who have been from this place to preach the gospel to the world, if it was not like going from heaven to hell. It is a world of sorrow, pain, death and misery, and you cannot make anything of it.

Brethren and sisters, I intend to be a Saint in heart, and life; but if I conducted myself as many do, with the knowledge I have, I will tell you what I would do, and what I would advise you to do in such a case—leave these valleys. If you do not intend to be faithful, to do the will of God, and to keep his commandments, if I were in that situation, I would at once withdraw. There are some few who are leaving, and I am heartily glad of it. If it was a member of my own house, whom I loved as I do my life, I do not believe my head would ache because such an one left the society of the Saints, on account of having no inclination to mingle with them. If such were determined to go, I would say go; and I would help them off, if they were unable to get away.

I do not feel as I used to when I see a man going away from the society of the church of God. I used to be filled with sympathy, and plead with them for hours and hours, importuning with them until my head would ache and my heart sicken; and I never had the satisfaction in even converting one such character in my life. If I should happen to get one converted, he would not stay converted; so I have concluded, and I think wisely, to let them go, and not suffer myself to have any more feeling about it than I would about any of the common occurrences of life.

What are my kindred to me, when the counsel of God is in the opposite scale? They are only as the dust of the balance. Br. Brigham is my kindred, for we have become kindred spirits; what I say of him will apply to many more of my brethren. When you hit one of those men, you hit the whole of them.

You have often heard me speak about my kindred. Many wish to return to the old countries, to bring out their kindred, their sons and their daughters, their fathers and their mothers. Why would I not go back for mine? Because they would abuse me, as they always have. When I was poor and penniless and so thinly clad that you might well say I had the blues, for my face and body looked blue, I went to my friends, who are all independently rich, and said, I am poor and penniless, and naked, and I am sent forth as a servant of God to the nations of the earth—will you give me some clothing or a little money? and not one soul of them would help me to a single dime.

Do you suppose I shall run after them? No.—Will they be saved? Yes, they will, but they will be saved as I have told you many of this people will; they will first go to hell, and remain there until the corruption with which they are impregnated is burnt out; and the day will yet come, when they will come to me and acknowledge me as their saviour, and I will redeem them and bring them forth from hell to where I live, and make them my servants; and they will be quite willing to enter into my service.

Before we heard Mormonism, we have said a thousand times, "if we could but live to see a man of God, like Paul, or Peter, James, John, Timothy, or Jesus Christ, and hear their instructions, we would be willing to suffer any kind or amount of human suffering, and not complain. My friends who have rejected me and my testimony will yet feel towards me.

Who have you now in your midst? Have you Abraham and Isaac, and the Apostles Peter, James and John? Yes, you have them right in your midst—they are talking to you all the time. Do you believe it? More or less of you say you do.—But do you know it? Br. Rhodes was saying what he believed; he says he "believes what brother Brigham says is the word of God." I say, pray that you may have a knowledge that it is the word of God, and be able to declare it in the stand, in your families and in all the world. What brother Rhodes said was good and true. Did he not teach us good principles? Yes; he taught us the revelations of Jesus Christ. I did not hear anything else.

I beg of you, brethren, and beseech you in the name of Jesus Christ, to be subject in your office and in your callings. I know you do not realize your important position as you ought.

Some of you will be asking brother Kimball why he does not talk here as he does up in the Council House. There are many of this people who have come here to-day, and perhaps you have said what is very commonly said in the world, "Come, wife, let us go to meeting to-day, and get warmed up under the droppings of the sanctuary, and become strengthened in our faith." Why did you not attend to that before you came here to-day? I defy any man on earth to preach the same to you, as to a few individuals of one heart and of one mind.

There is as great a variety of spirits in this house as there is of countenances; and there are no two who look exactly alike; is it not high time that there should be a reformation? We must become of one heart and of one mind, just as though we were one man. Before this people can enter into the celestial world, there must be a great reformation among them. Every man and woman must know, and faithfully perform their duties, day by day. Do you think I am disobedient to my file leaders? I never had such a disposition in my heart; if I had, I would banish it from me as quick as I would the devil, because such a dispositiou is pernicious to the interests of the cause of truth, and will end in the destruction of those who encourage it.

Brethren and sisters, I want you to understand these things, and cultivate them in your minds, and pray that you may be subject in the sphere in which you are appointed to act, whether in the Priesthood, or in the family capacity. You have to learn that lesson, or you can never go into the paradise of God to mingle equals with those who are counted faithful.

There is no man in the flesh whose right it is to direct or control Br. Brigham Young in the first thing. If I have not a right to lead and control him, I want to know who has? It is my meat and my drink to do the will of my Father who is in heaven; and if I do this to the day of my death, as brother Willard did, I am as sure of salvation as you are that the sun will rise and set again.

Is Br. Willard saved? Yes, he is where Joseph is; and I tell you there was a happy meeting. Was Br. Willard obedient? Yes, just as obedient as a well trained child. He has not got a wife or a child on earth as obedient as he was. And God knows there never was a being on the face of his footstool that could be more kind to me than Br. Willard and Br. Bingham. Were they ever cross and snappish with me? Never—no, never.

There was another trait in his character that will serve to illustrate the profound deference he paid to the man he acknowledged to be his leader. When on visits with Br. Brigham and myself, or when he would accompany us to a ball room, or to a meeting, he never would enter the room before his leader.—I have tried a dozen times to have him do so, but I always failed in accomplishing it. He had so cultivated the spirit of obedience and submission, that it seemed to be incorporated with his being.

I tell you these things to answer as a kind of spur to encourage you to more dilligence, and greater obedience to the commandments of God, that you may live forever.

There is nothing I fear in this church except contention, and a disposition in the people to run over their fellow beings. What I mean by this is, when a man is appointed by the proper authorities to preside over one of the outposts of the Kingdom of God, in this Territory or anywhere else, there is a disposition in some to create an influence against that man, not to be obedient themselves, and to endeavor to make everybody else disobedient. Now a man will be condemned for not obeying the person appointed to preside over him, as much as he would for not obeying Br. Brigham if he were there; and the people will be as much condemned if they do not obey Br. Brigham, as they would if they should disobey the Lord God, were he here in person.

When we sent Br. Samuel Richards to England to preside over the affairs of the Kingdom of God there, it became his province to rule and dictate all matters in that flourishing and extensive field of labor, and his word is the word of God to the people. When he sends a man to preside over a conference and another over another conference, they are his representatives, and their word is the word of God to the people over whom they preside; and brother Samuel is their Delegate to the General Conference, the same as Br. Bernhisel is the delegate of this Territorial Government to the General Assembly in Washington.

I wish you to learn these things, for I wish you to prepare your minds to receive the word of God every day that you live; and not only live like Saints when you are in this Tabernacle, but when you are abroad, and in all your actions. Can you be saved with a complete salvation if you do not do this? No, you cannot. No man or woman can receive a full salvation upon any other principle, than by continuing in the new and everlasting covenant. When a person violates his covenant he loses all he ever obtained in the Priesthood; whether it is wives, children, or possessions; they all go out of his hands. You have been taught this, and have been instructed by night and by day in these important matters. I have felt of late as though I never could cease exhorting the people. I have felt like a lion in strength.

I want you to pursue the path that is marked out for you by the servants of God, that I may continue to enjoy your society here and hereafter. I wish to enjoy your society, and you mine. Do you not wish to go where I go? You all believe I wish to enter into the kingdom of heaven, and be saved with the sanctified.

I care not how the Lord saves me. I am willing to pass through anything under the heavens that He requires me to pass through, that I may do His will and keep His commandments, and have favor in His eyes through accomplishing the work He has given me to do.

A Singular Case.—"A number of pins were recently exhibited to the Pathological Society of London, removed from various parts of the body of a young woman, who was taking down cloths from the drying lines, and putting the pins in her mouth, when some one came behind her and seized her by the arms, startling hee so much that she swallowed the mouthfull; sickness and emenation followed; a small swelling showed itself under her left breast, which ulcerated and burst, giving passage to a pin, the head of which was gone. Sixteen others were removed from about the same spot, and others from the the left knee, from over the breast bone, and from the wrist—twenty-two in all. They had all lost their heads except two."

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

DR. WHITE,
DISCOVERER OF THE
SYMPTOMA TRUTINORIC SYSTEM,
For Diagonising all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs,
May be Consulted daily at his Office, No. 101 PINE St., between 4th & 5th, from 2 to 5 P. M.

According to well authenticated statistical reports, one out of every six of all the deaths that occur in Europe or America, are from diseases of the lungs alone.
Judging from the above data, there are at the present time within the city of St. Louis, at least,
FIFTEEN THOUSAND
individuals who have disease seated upon their lungs. It is equally true that the Medical Profession, without exception, are unable to detect a disease upon those organs in season to effect a radical cure; and this is the reason why that class of diseases have proved so universally fatal. And hence this new discovery offers the only means extant for detecting pulmonary diseases in their incipient stages, or in time to effect a cure in every case. In all probability, 14,000 out of the above number may escape a premature grave, by at once availing themselves of the benefits of this important discovery.
Parents and Guardians should submit every member of their families to an immediate examination by this New System if they would avoid a responsibility desirable to none but infidels. They should not suffer any pecuniary consideration to deter them from reaping its benefits if they would protect those committed to their charge from one of the most fatal diseases that exists upon this continent. If they rely upon their family physician to apprise them of the existence of this dreadful disease, depend upon it, not one case out of a hundred will ever recover. Heads of families, are you prepared to offer those committed to your responsible charge a sacrifice to prejudice, when these incontrovertable facts are before you? If so, the responsibility rests entirely with you.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.
Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

MR. BROWN'S CHRISTMAS.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

"How many days to Christmas, papa?" inquired an earnest little voice, as a pair of soft hands were pressed fondly against the cheeks of Mr. Brown.

"Just ten days," answered Mr. Brown; but not in tones of equal interest.

"Ten days! Oh, that is such a long time! I wish it was to-morrow."

"You do?"

"Yes, indeed, papa—ten days! That's more than a week, isn't it?"

"Yes, three days more than a week."

"Well, I wish it was to-morrow."

"Why so soon, petty?"

"Don't you know?" And the child smiled archly in her father's face.

"How should I know?" said Mr. Brown.

"Don't know why I wish to-morrow was Christmas! I guess mother knows; don't you mother?"

Mrs. Brown smiled lovingly upon her little one, the youngest and dearest of her flock. Just then the two elder children came into the room.

"Don't you wish to-morrow was Christmas. Fanny?—and don't you, too, John?" inquired the child.

"Don't I, Maggy?" answered John, a merry smile playing over his countenance. "Yes, indeed! But it isn't to-morrow; and wishing won't do any good."

"It's only ten days off," said Fanny quietly. "A little more than a week, Christmas will be here."

"And then," said John, glancing meaningly toward his father.

"And then," chimed in Fanny.

But, from some cause, the subject was not agreeable to Mr. Brown, as was evident in the gravity of his manner. The children were quick to see; and it cooled their enthusiasm. Silence followed. In a little while Maggy slipped down from her father's knee, and drew quietly to her mother's side; from whence she looked at her father with fitful glances, half timidly and half wonderingly. Somehow, this reference to Christmas was not agreeable to Mr. Brown, and the children perceived it.

The evening passed without further remark on the coming festive season; yet not without thoughts of it in every mind—in fact, little else was thought of, either by Mr. or Mrs. Brown, or the children. After the latter had retired for the night, Mr. Brown said—"I am really troubled about this matter of Christmas presents, Mary, it does seem such a waste of money. Last year it didn't cost me less than fifty dollars; and what good come of it all?"

Mrs. Brown looked earnestly at her husband, sighed, but made no answer. Her heart was with her little ones; and the thought of their being disappointed in their childish hopes, threw a cloud over her spirits.

"I am not rich," continued Mr. Brown; "but even if were, I couldn't feel right about the matter, if I spent fifty dollars uselessly."

"Uselessly?" said Mrs. Brown, in a tone of inquiry, that implied a doubt as to the fairness of her husband's conclusion.

"What good came of all our waste of money in Christmas presents last year?"

"We made the children happy for one thing," replied Mrs. Brown. "and you'll own there was good in that,—money spent in procuring happiness for any one can hardly be called money wasted."

"Present pleasure is sometimes bought at the price of future unhappiness," said Mr. Brown.

"True," returned his wife, "but how the remark applies here, I do not so plainly perceive."

"You see that the children have set their hearts on a repetition of the same extravagance this year. Now, it does not seem to me right to spend money in this way. If I do not, of course they will be disappointed and unhappy. So the pleasure conferred last year will be the cause of pain now."

Mrs. Brown was silent. Not that she felt the force of what her husband said—her heart, as we have before remarked, was with her little ones, and the thought of their disappointment troubled her spirits; and all the more, because she saw that Mr. Brown was really in earnest.

"I made up my mind last year," said Mr. Brown, "that I would never waste so much money foolishly again. Fifty dollars in China dolls, jumping jacks, sugar toys, and such like Tom-fooleries was a wicked waste—and so much real want and suffering all around us. It kept me awake a good many hours, thinking about it. And I don't believe the children were any happier in the end."

"They had too many incongruous things, I will admit," answered Mrs. Brown. "Too much to divide the attention and dissipate the interest that ought to have been pleasantly concentrated. But you must remember, husband, that you went to an auction and bought twenty-five dollars worth of assorted Christmas goods at a single purchase—enough to have set up a small toy shop."

Mr. Brown shrugged his shoulders, saying: "Yes, that was a foolish blunder. I saw it clearly enough, but then a perception of the folly came too late. The wreck and ruin that followed made me sick. It has had one good effect, however—that of opening my eyes to the foolishness of this whole system of Christmas waste and extravagance.

We must make the children comprehend it. I want you, Mary, to talk to them seriously on the subject; you'll not find the task a difficult one; they'll hear to reason, I am sure."

But Mrs. Brown understood the children much better than that. Talk to them about the folly of making Christmas presents!—she might almost as well have talked to a hungry man about the waste and extravagance of eating!

So she shook her head and replied—"It won't do Edward." "It MUST do," Mary, was the decisive answer; and Mr. Brown got up and walked the floor, buttoning, as he did so, his coat up to his very chin—an involuntary act that expressed the firmness of his purpose. "My mind is fully made up; in fact, has been made up on this subject ever since a clear perception came of last year's folly. There'll be no fifty dollars wasted at Christmas; of this you may rest assured. I can't afford it; and if I could, a sense of right would not permit the extravagance."

Mr. Brown continued to talk on, in the hope of convincing his wife, inducing her to act freely with him in the matter. But Mrs. Brown said little in reply; that little satisfied her husband that her co-operation was not to be counted upon.

Next morning at breakfast the children, in whose minds vague questionings and suspicions had been aroused, examined curiously the rather grave faces of their parents. But there was no light there.

"How many days to Christmas now, papa?" said little pet Maggy, breaking in upon the brooding silence that hung heavily over the family circle.

Mr. Brown looked at the child, but made no answer.

"Just nine days," answered Fanny in a half whisper, bending towards Maggy, yet keeping her eyes fixed upon the countenance of her father.

"Nine days," repeated the child. "Nine days is such a long time; I wish Christmas was to-morrow."

Mr. Brown said nothing, and Mrs. Brown kept silence. How busy was thought in the minds of both.

"What's the matter, Edward? Are you not well this morning?" said Mrs. Brown, as her husband arose from the table, after taking but a single cup of coffee.

"I'm very well," replied Mr. Brown, with affected cheerfulness; "but I havn't much appetite, and I am in a hurry to get to the store this morning," and left the room abruptly. Mrs. Brown sighed as the door closed upon her husband. An animated talk among the children about the coming Christmas followed, in which the mother saw how largely their expectations were excited. In fact, the evil of an unwise expenditure on the previous Christmas was now manifesting itself in vague and extravagant anticipations. Mr. Brown's injudicious and wholesale purchase of a large lot of assorted toys, most of them unsuited to the tastes and wants of his children, was now bearing fruit according to the seed.

"Hadn't we lots of things?" said John, with great animation.

"Yes indeed," answered Fanny. "There was a whole wheelbarrow load."

"I guess father will have a wagon to bring the toys home this year," said John.

"I'd rather have a gold watch and chain than all the toys father could buy," remarked Fanny.

"And so would I," said John. "A gold watch and a gun. Just tell father about this, won't you, mother?"

"How wildly you talk," remarked Mrs. Brown, who felt the necessity of correcting these liberal ideas, and gathering the wishes of her children into something like reasonable limits. "Your father is not rich. He cannot afford to buy you gold watches, even if he thought such things suitable for children of your age, which I know he does not."

"I wish he would buy me a pony," said John, his mind not really penetrated by the main argument of his mother. "How much would a pony cost? Not more than a wheelbarrow load of toys, would it, mother?"

"You musn't expect even a wheelbarrow load of toys, this year," replied Mrs. Brown.

"What are we to have then?" inquired the children, in tones of disappointment.

"The love of your parents, who will seek to bless you with all blessings in their power to bestow," answered Mrs. Brown, as she placed an arm around each of her children, and drew them gently to her side. There was a penetrating tenderness in her low tones that went instantly to the hearts of John and Fanny.

"Christmas presents," continued Mrs. Brown, "are meant to express to you the good wishes or affection of those who make them. They are not to be so much regarded for their value, or even usefulness, as for the evidences they bring of love in the giver. Think of this, my children, and then whatever you receive will be highly prized, even though in itself it be the merest trifle. Your father loves you all dearly. Early and late he is engaged in business, and you, his children, receive from his toil and care a thousand blessings. For you he provides this pleasant home, and crowns our table with plenty. He buys you warm clothing; he sends you to our best schools. Of all the good he is daily doing to his children words would fail me to tell. Not all children have so kind so excellent a father."

"Oh I love him very much," said Fanny, as she clung tightly to her mother's arm.

"And I love him," said John.

"And don't I love him best of all?" broke in dear little pet Maggy. "I love mother too." And as the sweet child thus spoke she turned her lips upward for a kiss.

"Yes, you all love father very much; and you ought to love him, for he is one of the best of fathers," said Mrs. Brown.

"I wonder what he will buy us?" remarked John, a little while afterwards, as his mind came back from thoughts of his father's love for him to something of the old interest in their anticipated Christmas presents.

But ere Mrs. Brown could frame an answer, a lady friend, who had just called, entered the room where they were still sitting at the breakfast table; she was an intimate friend and neighbor, and came in, thus early, without ceremony, and with only a brief apology for the intrusion.

"I've run in a moment," said she, speaking earnestly, "to tell you about poor Mr. Elkhart over the way. I've felt sick ever since I heard of it."

"What of him?" inquired Mrs. Brown.

"You haven't heard of it. Well, he had a dreadful fall, yesterday, through the hatchway in the store where he works. He came down three stories, and is sadly hurt. One leg and one arm are broken; and they say he has had internal injuries. Poor man! What will his family do?"

"Oh, that is sad, sad!" answered Mrs. Brown. "He has so many litle ones dependent on him. What will they do?"

"I've just come from there," said the neighbor. "Ah, it is a sight to make the heart ache! Mrs. Elkhart's baby is only two weeks old; and she is still too feeble to be about. The shock has thrown her back very much; five little children, the father disabled for months, and the mother yet sick with a young baby—Oh, Mrs. Brown, there is heart trouble. We who have so many comforts around us can but dimly realize the suffering of that poor wife and mother."

"Let us not be to her as the Priest and the Levite, but as the good Samaritan," said Mrs. Brown.

"Spoken like a woman and a Christian," responded the neighbor. "Yes, let us act the part of the good Samaritan."

While the lady conversed with their mother, the children listened with deep interest. Soon after she went away John and Fanny started for school. At dinner time Mr. and Mrs. Brown talked much about poor Mr. Elkhart and his family, and suggested various means of relief. They were willing, they said, to do all for them in their power, but feared that an adequate support for several months could not be relied upon.

Three or four days went by without anything more being said by the children in reference to Christmas. Their rather extravagant expectations had been lowered by the manner of their father when the subject was previously mentioned, as well as by the conversation held with their mother. Even little Maggy perceived that Christmas presents was not an agreeable theme, and she too kept silence before her father.

Only a few days now intervened between the present and the long looked for and pleasantly anticipated festive holiday. It was evening—the tea things had been removed, and Mr. and Mrs. Brown, with their three children, set before the red glowing grate, feeling very comfortable, and talking together very pleasantly. All at once little Maggy, who was on her father's knee, and had one arm around his neck, said, half timidly, and with worm blushes mantling her cheeks, as if she knew the subject would not be altogether agreeable—

"Won't you give me a dollar, papa, for my Christmas gift?"

"A dollar, child!" Mr. Brown looked grave, and spoke quite seriously.

"Yes, papa, a little round gold dollar. I wont ask for anything else; and you needn't buy me anything."

Maggy's sweet little face was now almost crimson, for she felt that her request was not pleasant to her father.

"What do you want with a dollar, Maggy dear?"

Mr. Brown was recovering himself, and his voice was now tender and encouraging.

"I want to give it to poor Mrs. Elkhart to buy clothes for her little baby."

"Dear child," murmured Mr. Brown in a low unsteady voice, as he hugged Maggy to his heart. The reqnest, so unexpected, touched him deeply.

"You will give me one, won't you?" still urged the child in her earnest little tones.

"Yes, dear, you shall have two gold dollars for so good a purpose," answered Mr. Brown. "God's loving angels have inspired the generous wish."

"I'm so glad! your such a good father!" said the child, as she flung her tiny arms about her father's neck, and clasped him eagerly.

"Just the Christmas gifts that Fanny and I want," said John, now pressing up to his father's side. We talked about it all the way from school this afternoon."

"You did?"

"O yes," answered Fanny, as she stood beside her brother. "We don't want anything for ourselves"

"It is more blessed to give than to receive," said Mr. Brown, as he laid a hand upon each young head; "and you will prove this, I trust, ere many days have passed. It gives me true pleasure, my children, to find in you such unselfish purposes. Poor Mr. Elkhart's little ones are worthy of all your generous sympathies; and in denying yourselves for their good, you are procuring heartfelt delight that will bless you for years, nay longer—throughout your whole lives. Yes, yes, your wishes shall be gratified. Maggy shall have two gold dollars, and John and Fanny three gold dollars apiece, as Christmas gifts."

How joyfully the children clapped their hands at this announcement.

"My difficult problem is solved," said Mr. Brown, after the children had retired for the night; "and solved in a way little anticipated."

"Dear hearts!" said Mrs. Brown. "Their generous purposes were not awakened by any suggestions of mine."

"How much better to spend money in relieving the suffering and the needy than to waste it in useless gew-gaws," observed Mr. Brown.

"I must not be more selfish than the children," remarked Mrs. Brown; "so let my Christmas present go in the same direction."

A few days more glided by. It was the 24th of December—time, evening. Mr. Brown was seated at the center table, around which gathered the children. He had his purse in his hand.

"What do you say now, Maggy, dear? to-morrow is Christmas, you know."

"Yes, papa," answered the child, lifting her large clear eyes to his face. There was in them heavenly beauty that arrested the father's attention, and caused him to gaze almost wonderingly into their liquid depths.

"Do you still want a gold dollar for your Christmas gift?"

"You said I should have two gold dollars," answered Maggy.

"Well, then, two gold dollars?"

"Yes, papa."

"What will you do with them?"

"Give them to poor Mrs. Elkhart, for her baby."

"There they are love," said Mr. Brown, as he laid two yellow coins in the soft, pink hand of Maggy.

"Thank you, papa; I'm so glad!" How her little eyes sparkled and danced. What dimpling smile went wreathing over her innocent face.

"Now Fanny and John, what do you say?" Mr. Brown turned to his two older children.

"Just what Maggy has said," was their unhesitating answer.

"Three dollars for you, Fanny, and three for you, John." Mr. Brown handed the glittering coins to his children as he spoke.

"Eight dollars in all," said John.

"It will do them so much good. How glad Mrs. Elkhart will be when we take them to her." Fanny mused a little while, and then said—

"I want to give something to Mary Elkhart. She is a dear little thing. Oh, now I think of it!" How bright her face became instantly. "She shall have the little wax doll father brought for me last Christmas. I had three then; two large ones and a small one. The small one is just as good as new. May I give it to her, mother?"

"If you wish to, Fanny."

"Then she shall have it," said the little girl, firmly. "Mary does not get many nice play things. And now that her poor father is hurt so badly, and cannot work and earn money, I don't believe she will have a single Christmas gift. Yes, indeed, I will send her that pretty wax doll."

"There's Eddy and Willy Elkhart." John's interest for the little boys was now awakened. "Everybody gets presents at Christmas. I think I'll take half a dollar of the money to buy something for them. No, I won't either. Now I think of it, there's a box of building blocks most as good as new, in the garret. Eddy shall have them; and for Willy—let me see—what have I for Willy? yes—now I think of it—Willy shall have my humming top."

"And little Jane shall have my A B C blocks," said Maggy, her sweet young face beaming with light.

"So we needn't spend even half a dollar of the money." This seemed to give John and Fanny especial pleasure. "Eight dollars! How glad it will make poor Mrs. Elkhart."

"Don't forget now," remarked Mrs. Brown smiling, "that my Christmas present must go in the same direction."

Mr. Brown looked thoughtful for a few moments. He was turning the subject over in his mind.

"I meant to have bought you—but I won't say what. It would have cost just twelve dollars. Here is the money. Do with it as your heart may prompt."

The children looked earnestly at the mother, as she received the sum of twelve dollars. She held the gold in her hand for a little while, and it seemed as if there were some questionings in her mind. Then she laid it on the table saying—

"Twelve and eight make twenty. How much more good the money will do for this distressed family than it would have done to us, had we spent it, one for the other, in Christmas presents. Such tokens are not needed as evidences of affection."

For some time there was a pleasant excitement among the children. Gradually this subsided; and although they continned at intervals to speak of the happiness their presents would create in the morning, yet it did not create the observation of either father or mother that a certain joyousness of feeling was absent. They were more silent than usual; and their tones, when they spoke, were subdued.

"We won't hang up our stockings to-night for Kingle," said Fanny, as she gave her parents the usual good night kiss. She had meant to speak very bravely and cheerfully, but the effort was not very successful. Something in her voice betrayed the disappointment, touching the morrow, which she so earnestly sought to overcome and conceal. But, even if her voice had remained firm, her humid eyes would have revealed her sinking heart.

"Good night, dear. The blessed angels guard you in slumber," said Mrs. Brown, as she returned the fervent kiss.

"Good night, father! Good night, mother!" said John, in an off-hand, bravado sort of way, gliding from the room as he spoke—thus revealing to the acute perceptions of both father and mother, that all was not right with him either.

A long silence followed the withdrawal of the the children—a silence burdened with thought, questionings and earnest debates. At last Mr. Brown said:

"I remember, now, that I promised to see a gentleman this evening, so I shall have to go out. But I won't be gone over an hour."

"Don't stay long."—Mrs. Brown spoke in a very quiet, subdued tone of voice. There was a pressure on her feelings, and her husband percieved it.

"I will return very soon." As Mr. Brown left the apartment, the sewing upon which his wife was engaged fell into her lap, and leaning an elbow on the table, she rested her head on her hand and was soon lost in a maze of thought. She did not feel satisfied about the children. They were but children and creatures of feeling. In their generous self-denial, they devoted all they were to receive at Christmas to the relief of poor Mr. Elkhart's family. Nothing had been kept back for themselves. The consciousness of having blessed the needy and the suffering, was to sustain them on the festive morrow, and make their hearts glad, though they received no tokens of love. She did not believe that they were equal to their self-imposed trial. Nor did she believe that it was right to let them bear it. But Mr. Brown, from having been extravagant in Christmas goods last year, had now passed over to the other extreme. He was a firm man when his mind was made up about anything, and Mrs. Brown, therefore, felt she had better bear with her children, what the morrow would bring, than have a useless discussion in which dogmatism would chafe and wound her clear perceptions.

It was near ten o'clock when Mr. Brown came home. A marked contrast there was between his animated countenance and manner, and the heavy eye and weary air of his wife.

"You are late," she said.

"Yes; almost an hour later than I meant to stay. But I couldn't get home any earlier. I have done some good, however, and that will compensate for absence. I was able to interest several gentlemen in Elkhart's case. They have made up a purse of twenty-five dollars, which I am commissioned to spend in fuel and groceries, and send to the family as a Christmas present to-morrow."

The face of Mrs. Brown grew bright instantly. "How glad I am to hear you say this. For all their misfortunes, the day will not be altogether dark to them."

"No; not altogether dark," said Mr. Brown, now speaking in an absent manner. Some new thought had come into his mind, and was occupying it almost exclusively.

"I don't think the children feel altogether right about to-morrow," said Mrs. Brown, venturing upon a subject very near to her feelings.

"How so?" enquired her husband.

"Children are children."

CALIFORNIA SHEPHERD DOG.

The San Jose Tribune gives the following interesting account of the fidelity and vigilance of the California shepherd dog.

Many of the rancheros of this valley send out their sheep daily under the charge and protection of their dogs alone, and feel assured that in the evening they will be returned safely to the fold. Day after day, and night after night, nay, year after year, and through a whole lifetime the faithful sheep dogs are found devoting every hour of their existence, with a faith that knows no change to the important trust reposed in them by their owners. Whether beneath the scorching rays of the summer's sun, or amidst the storms and chilling winds of winter,—whether fed to repletion, or enduring the keen pangs of hunger, he cheerfully goes each morning to the performance of the task, leading his flock over valley and mountain, guarding them from the attacks of all enemies throughout the day, and at the approach of night returning them to their corrals. No persuasions, allurements, or sufferings, can induce him to relax his vigilance or watchfulness. As the first note of danger falls upon his quick ear, his defiant voice is heard, and he at once throws himself between his flock and the approaching enemy, to fight their battles and cover their retreat. And many hard and gallant battles they are forced to fight with the wolf, the covote, and dogs that have acquired the habit of sheep killing. We have seen many an old veteran sheep-dog bearing the honorable scars of a hundred hard fought battles in defence of their flock. If driven to the sad alternative, they would perish beside their flock with hunger before they would touch one of them. Often have we paused in admiration to watch these faithful and sagacious animals in the performance of their tasks, and thought that if man would only perform the trusts reposed in him with the same unwavering, unchanging fidelity—would stand unawed, true and firm amidst surrounding dangers, unmoved by the allurements of ambition, and the seductive influences of flattery, unbought by gain—how much more just would be his claim to superiority and dominion over all created things.

NEWS FROM UTAH.

ARRIVAL OF THE SALT LAKE MAIL.

Monday morning last we found our post box filled with letters and papers from Salt Lake City, which had been recovered and forwarded after the late horrible massacre of the mail party on the plains.

By this arrival we have our files of Deseret News up to November 2d, and much private correspondence.

The General Conference held in Salt Lake City, commencing Oct. 6th, was attended by an immense concourse of people, including large representations from all parts of the Territory.

There was not so much business of general importance before the Conference as on former occasions, but the three days of its continuance was occupied more in important instructions from the Presidency and others, which are reported in the Deseret News, and to which we will treat our readers more fully hereafter. We give in this week's issue a condensed report of the Conference and other items from the News.

Gov. Young and suite had completed a tour through the southern settlements, and held several "talks" with the Indians along the route, giving them and also the settlers such counsel as was deemed necessary to promote and perpetuate friendly relations between them.

Col. Steptoe, with his command, had gone to Pau van valley, the place of the slaughter of the lamented Gunnison and party; probably with a view of calling to an account the Indians who committed the onslaught.

From private sources we learn that some of the soldiers required very close watching to keep them out of mischief, but the conduct of their officers was very commendable. A few robberies and liberties taken with females are referred to. Among the former we would mention the robbery of Hon. O. Hydes' house, of clothing, jewelry and other valuables, but the rogues were overheard, and fled, leaving behind them their chief prize, viz: a trunk containing $3,000 cash.

The sugar works were nearly completed, and would be ready for operations in about six weeks.

The weather had been good, and the fall season excellent for business, and improvements were going on finely in the valley; but the surrounding mountains were white with snow, and the black clouds were emptying their contents upon them when the mail left.

Hon. I. C. Haight writes from Iron county, that the new furnace of the Deseret Iron Company was completed with a supply of coke ovens and other important improvements which the company have been making in their works, and they would commence operations again in a few days.

Mills and other improvements were going ahead rapidly in that part of the Territory, although, as he says, the "yellow fever" was about to carry off from Cedar City a few families, who wish to exchange that country of iron for a land of gold. We are greatly mistaken, or else when they try the realities of life in California they will rue their bargain.

Mr. C. A. Kinkead arrived in this city on Saturday evening last, having so far recovered from his wounds as to be able to complete his journey, though he still is suffering considerably from them, and looks much enfeebled. He contradicts the previous report that the outward bound mail for November had stopped at Laramie, and further adds, that the mail for December, which returned to Indepenence, had again started, and both would go through to Salt Lake if possible.

To all to whom this Letter shall Come:

Know that the bearer, Erastus Snow, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is in full faith and fellowship with the same, and has, by the authorities of said church and the vote of the General Conference, assembled in this city on the 8th day of April, A. D. 1854, been duly appointed a mission to St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, to take the Presidency of the Church in that city, and establish it as a gathering place for the Saints. He will receive and take care of all Saints who shall arrive under his Presidency; counseling them as to their locations and pursuits as he shall be led by the Holy Ghost, and take the oversight and superintend the further gathering of all such as are able, and who may be deemed worthy to swell the numbers in Deseret; he has authority in his mission to receive donations and collect tithing for and on behalf of said church, and he is hereby appointed agent for said church, to make such a disposition of said funds, and to transact all such business as may be required of him from time to time.

We now invite all men to give diligent heed to his teachings and counsels as a servant of God, sent to teach them the way of life and salvation, and assist him in his labors in whatsoever things he may need. So shall the blessings of the righteous descend upon them, and the approbation of the Father be manifested unto them; and we pray God, the Eternal, who rulest in the heavens, to bless Elder Erastus Snow in his ministry and teachings, that grace, mercy and power may be multiplied unto him, that he may rejoice continually in his labors und faithfulness in Thy kingdom, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Signed in behalf of said Church at Great Salt Lake City, Utah Territory, United States of America, this 30th day of October, A. D. 1954.

BRIGHAM YOUNG,
HEBER C. KIMBALL,
J. M. GRANT,
First Presidency.

Beloved Saints—I have deemed it advisable to lay before you the above certificate from our beloved brethren and Presidents, that you might be better able to view properly the relation I sustain to you, and more seriously consider the weight of responsibility that rests upon me, and what it is that the church expects at my hands.

And I trust that the major part of the Saints in this part of the country will take pleasure in affording me every facility in their power, and strive to carry out those counsels which may be imparted unto them from time to time by the Holy Ghost. The preliminary steps have already been taken, and the improvements in the organization of the church necessary for a gathering place of the Saints have been introduced, and bid fair to work harmoniously and successfully for the good of Zion.

I congratulate you, my brethren and sisters, in the renewal of your covenants with the Lord, and the cheerfulness with which a portion, at least, of the Saints respond to the law of tithing; every true friend of the kingdom of God will follow their example as soon as their circumstances will permit. 'Tis here the church wants to use your tithing instead of Salt Lake City. Heavy outstanding bills are to be paid in this city for goods and materials for the public works, which went out in the church train last summer, and other bills are to be filled for the same next spring. The recent mail robbery and loss of $10,500 on the plains, will satisfy you of the risk and inconvenience of sending funds from Utah, and the advantage it will be to the church to receive your tithing here where it is needed. Besides the above, I have also papers from the P. E. Fund Company, authorizing me to act as agent for the Company for the emigration of the poor; to receive and appropriate donations to the Fund for that purpose; and this is the channel, brethren, through which your free-will offerings for the emigration of your more indigent brethren should be appropriated.

In addition to acting as agent for the church and for the P. E. Fund Company, the duty is also devolved upon me of superintending the further emigration of those who may arrive from other lands as well as those now here, and "who may be deemed worthy to swell the numbers in Deseret."

You will perceive that this feature of the subject is the same as set forth at the General Conference last April, and shows that the church desire those only to gather there who have first learned and fully satisfied themselves and those who are placed over them in the Lord, that they desire to go there to serve the Lord and live and die with the Saints. Dear brethren, with a due sense of my weakness and an earnest desire for your co-operation, and your faith and prayers in my behalf, I hope to be able to impart the counsels of the Holy Spirit unto all who may seek it, in reference to these or any other duties that pertain to our holy religion.

I remain your brother and servant for Christ's sake.

ERASTUS SNOW.

THE WEATHER.

Winter is upon us. On Monday evening, the 18th, about three inches snow fell in this city, and the weather since continuing cool and dry, we have what we call beautiful winter weather, and the streets of St. Louis presents a favorable contrast to their usual appearance at this season of the year, having been all the fall so dry as to make artificial watering necessary until within one week past.

NEW MORMON GOVERNOR.

Col. Steptoe, of the U. S. Army, has been appointed Governor of Utah. He has been for some time at the Salt Lake with a detachment of U. S. Troops. This appointment is hailed in some quarters, as giving promise of difficulty between the Mormons and the United States government. There are those who would like to see such a difficulty, from pure love of mischief. There are thousands of men in this country who are not comfortable without an "excitement." If Col. Steptoe is a rash and mischief-loving man, he will have it in his power to bring much trouble on the Mormon community.—Occasions and provocations leading to collisions can be manufactured, if they do not rise spontaneously. The wolf, we know, couldn't drink of the stream, because the lamb, who was drinking lower down from the same stream, muddied its waters. But we are yet to learn that Col. Steptoe is a man of this make. We take this view of the Mormons: They care no great deal who governs them, provided the government is equitable, and does not interfere with their "peculiar institution." That there will be no legal interference, is, we think, very clear. In the first place, it is not at all likely that Congress will pass any law suppressing polygamy. In the next place, no such law can be expected from the Legislature of Utah. Governor Steptoe may, and probably will feel bound to recommend such a law, but it is not conceivable that the Assembly of Utah would heed his recommendation. We think the Mormons are, for various reasons, disposed to conduct themselves as good citizens; and that, therefore, no trouble need be apprehended from them, unless there is some illegal interference with polygamy, or some unjust and wanton molestations on other accounts, to the injury of the Mormons.

We all know that the Mormons are an industrious people; that they consume a large amount of goods, and make a most desirable market for our traders. We trust so peaceable and flourishing a community is not to be broken up on a point which, to all the world beyond it, is a mere "abstraction," and which eventually must be given up by the community itself, in the absence of all outside pressure. A "Mormon war" may be very "exciting" to the fancies of all filibustering Americans; but we hope that the piratical portions of our people are not yet quite in the ascendant among us.

We most cordially commend to our readers the foregoing sensible article, from the Morning Herald of this city. It has, of late, been so uncommon for editors and scribblers to allude to the Mormons, in any other than a vindictive spirit, and in a manner most absurd and extravagant, misconstrueing every act and word of Governor Young and the Mormons; manifesting a most holy horror of a man who dare honor and maintain his wives and his children, instead of following in the footsteps of those hypocrites, into the dens of infamy and corruption which taint the moral atmosphere of all our large towns, and flourish under the nose and fostering care of these moral lecturers who crawl out of licentious sheets to write their morning address, and urge on the government to war upon the Mormons. We repeat, it has been so uncommon to hear an honorable editor speak out with sense and discretion, and rebuke the braying of these asses, that when it does occur we find ourselves instinctively reaching out to shake hands with him.

We would call the attention of all lovers of good tea, to the advertisement of Van, the Tea Man in another column; an far as we have seen he keeps good tea, and sells at reasonable rates.

Correspondence of the Luminary.

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 20, '54.

Dear Br. Snow:—Since my last to you of the 7th inst., I have thought that some of the transpiring events that have come under my observation would not be uninteresting to your friends and readers of the Luminary, feeling at all times an ardent desire to communicate to my brethren those things that cause my heart to leap for joy—that is, the onward march of the holy gospel and its sanctifying influence among the Saints of the most high God.

On the 15th inst., at 8 1-2 A. M., I started by the cars for Cheltenham, near the Dry Hill branch of the church, having sent an appointment to preach there that evening. I spent the day in visiting the Saints and giving them such counsel as will have a saving influence, if given heed to. Evening came, and the Saints met together—the Lord blessed us with His holy spirit and gave me utterance. I was enabled through His blessing to discharge my duty in laying before my brethren the principles of life and salvation. We had a joyful time together; and I trust many will rejoice in days to come. I spent the night there, and started early in the morning for St. Louis. After spending a few hours in the city, I again started for Centreville, a distance of 10 miles, where I had an appointment for Sunday. Arrived there late in the evening; found the Saints all well. Sunday, 17th, the congregation met at 11 o'clock. I preached to them the gospel of salvation. The people gave me good attention, and I pray that the spirit of the Lord may rest upon the honest inquirer after truth, until their minds are illuminated with the sacred truths of the gospel. There are some that are candidly investigating the principles in that place. I pray my heavenly Father to bless them in their search after the pearl of great price.

Monday, 18th, started at 6 o'clock for St. Louis; arrived there at 9 o'clock; and to my joy found that the mail from the valley of the Saints had arrived, bringing the joyful news of the prosperity of the Saints.

I glean from several private letters, items that may be of use to the Saints. In a letter from Elder Wm. Hyde, I learn that he set sail for the American shores, in company with 63 Saints, on the 22d day of March last. During the passage of 96 days he preached twice each week, although his health was poor in consequence of his constant labors in the Australian mission. The result of his preaching was, the captain and the first mate were converted to the gospel. After Br. Hyde had the satisfaction of seeing his company safely landed at San Barnandino, he started on the 27th July for the valley of the Saints, where he arrived on the 14th August.

To read his description of the joys of meeting his family, and to breathe the pure atmosphere of heaven after being so long in an opposite climate, makes the heart dance for joy in view of that day when all the faithful servants of God will return after fulfilling their missions. Br. Hyde says that his health is improving fast; he attributes it to the blessing of the Lord in answer to the prayers of the Saints. The Elders and Saints will feel glad to hear that this faithful man of God is gaining his health again; may he live long among the tall cedars of Israel.

Also, from Elder Isaac Bowman we learn that peace and prosperity is the common lot of the Saints in the Bee-hive State; provisions and money plenty; the Saints happy, and the Indians peaceable. We also learn that the remains of Capt. Rodney Badger, who was drowned a year ago last May in the Webber, while trying to save the lives of an emigrant family, was found on the 25th October last, about two miles below, on a small island. The body had decayed, but the clothes were around the remains, though in a rotten state; the money that he had in his purse was found laying on his thigh bone. The Elders abroad will rejoice to hear that the remains of the brave Rodney are found.

There were five baptised in St. Louis last week, besides several re-baptisms and much inquiry after the principles of the Latter-day Saints. Much interest is manifested by the Elders and Saints in general to roll forth the work of the Lord according to the ability given them.

Brethren and sisters keep yourselves pure in the sight of the Lord; pray much that the light of the Holy Spirit may abide with you forever; be kind, and prove yourselves true to each other, and the spirit of peace will be with you forever. Amen.

MILO ANDRUS.

Paris, Nov. 20.—Lord Palmerston and Louis Napoleon have been almost inseparble since the former allighted from the Hotel Windsor. Their interview have resulted in a decision to unfurl the banner of Polish, Hungarian and Italian nationality, if Prussia and Austria hesitate longer to declare unequivocally against the Czar.

Mr. Ross, one of the leaders of the Cherokee Nation, has arrived in Washington for the purpose of disposing to the Government a body of 800,000 acres of land which that nation owns in Kansas,

The High Council to all the Saints throughout this Stake of Zion—Greeting:

Beloved brethren and sisters—Our now perfect organization in this region of country has brought with it new duties and increased responsibilities and obligations, which if carefully observed and faithfully discharged, will make us more perfect, even as our present government is more perfect.

If there is one duty more weighty, or obligation more binding to us than another, it is to feel after your welfare, to lead you by our example, and counsels, and instructions to your respective duties; to mingle our feelings, sympathies and spirit with yours, that you may learn to be better fathers and mothers, better husbands and wives, better servants and masters, better members of society, and in a word, that you may become better Saints of the Most High God.

You are chosen, dear brethren, from among an ungodly world, to be repositories of the revelations of Jesus Christ, to be champions of truth; and you are required to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered and now restored to the Saints.

You have covenanted with the Lord at the waters of baptism to keep His commandments and obey His laws, and to live by every word that proceedeth from His mouth. Your obligations and responsibilities are, therefore, a hundred fold greater than they were before you made this sacred engagement, and renewed the holy seal of the covenant, even the Holy Ghost, the comforter which has taken of the things of Jesus and revealed them unto you.

Do you wish to learn more fully your duties and obligations? Then listen to the voice of wisdom and counsel, and obey the same in meekness and simplicity, and the spirit of God shall rest upon you; the visions of heaven shall be unfolded to you, and you shall never be confounded worlds without end.

Are you elders of Israel? Then strive with all diligence to magnify your high and holy calling; cleanse yourself from all uncleanness and all manner of unrighteousness; study not to please man, but study how you may please the Lord and His servants; put not your trust in man, but trust at all times and for all things in the mighty God of Jacob. Call to mind the noble acts and generous deeds of the Elders of Israel in ancient days, who, through their faith and righteousness, are renowned and honored both on earth and in heaven. "Through faith the Elders obtained a good report." Let your ambition ever be to excel in the knowledge of truth, the exercise of wisdom, and the practice of righteousness.

Are you Priests, Teachers, or Deacons? Then watch with fidelity over the church, over which the Lord hath made you overseers. Treasure up in your hearts words of wisdom and comfort, that you may have wherewith to strengthen and console the weak and desponding; honor and obey the counsels of your brethren, that the Saints may honor and obey you; be men of faith and prayer and live continually in the fear of the Lord and in the light of His spirit and no good thing will be withheld from you—but you shall be called the ministers of God. Let all your aspirations for greatness be resolved into goodness; and be contented in the station in which the Lord has placed you—only magnify the same and you shall be honorable. Do not aspire for office and power; but remember that a wise and faithful Deacon is greater in the sight of the Lord, and has more power and influence than an unfaithful Elder; and the office of a Teacher is the most important and honorable that man can hold.

To husbands: love your wives. Treat them kindly and tenderly, as Christ does his church. You are appointed to be the head of the woman; then do not resign the government into her hands, but sustain with honor and dignity the position you are called to enjoy. Be not austere and tyrannical, harsh and cruel, for He who has given her unto you is her Father, and He will listen unto her complaint, and unless you repent and reform she may be taken from you and given to one more worthy of her. Do you aspire to be the saviour of your wives? Then learn, brethren, to save yourselves. If you would have your wives obedient to you, learn to be obedient to those men who are placed over you. If you would be honored by your wives, be temperate in your words and deeds, and prove to them by your wisdom, integrity, and righteousness, that you are worthy of their love and confidence, and your wives will feel satisfied that you are the men to lead them to celestial glory.

To wives: honor and obey your husbands as your future presidents on earth, and your future representatives in heaven, and your husbands, if good men, will bless and honor you; but if they curse and swear, and take the name of the Lord in vain, and give themselves to drunkenness, whoredoms, and otherwise defile themselves, then love them as you would a viper, and honor them as you would the devil.

To parents: The Lord has given to your care an important charge. Your children are an heritage and gift of God; and if you train them up in the fear of the Lord they shall be the crown of your rejoicing and glory in the kingdom of our God. Be careful that you set a proper example before them. If you curse and swear your children will be likely to do the same; if you mingle with the vulgar, the drunken and profane, your children will do so likewise; if you neglect your duties as a Saint of God, and rebel against the authority he has placed over you, your children will most probably drink into the same accursed spirit; and remember that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.

We will now present you with another view of the subject, drawn from the ancient Nephites, who once lived upon this land. There were among them two thousand young men, who had received what we will venture to call a model education, which give them the strength of lions and the power of Gods. The prophet Heaman says: "Now they had not fought, yet they did not fear death; and they did think more upon the liberties of their fathers than they did upon their own lives; yea, they had been taught by their mother that if they did not doubt God would deliver them; and they rehearsed unto me the words of their mother, saying: 'We do not doubt our mothers knew it.' * * * And I with my two thousand did surround the Laminites, and did slay them; yea, inasmuch as they were compelled to deliver up their weapons of war, and also themselves as prisoners of war. * * * And now it came to pass that when they had surrendered themselves up, behold, I numbered those young men who had fought with me, fearing, lest there were many of them slain; but behold, to my great joy there had not one of them fallen to the earth: yea, and they had fought as with the strength of Gods; yea, never were men known to have fought with such miraculous strength; and with such mighty power did they fall upon the Laminites, that they did frighten them; and for this cause did the Laminites deliver themselves up as prisoners of war."

If you would have now such faithful, brave, and zealous young men, we must have corresponding parents; and if you would be thus honored and distinguished, obey the oft repeated counsel of the prophet Brigham, namely: "Live your holy religion." You shall then be blessed, honored and glorified in your children, who will, through eternal ages, call you blessed.

We moreover say unto all Saints, be temperate in your thoughts and actions; pray without ceasing; let your prayers be heard in your families day by day; seek not the riches of the world, but seek rather the riches of heaven, "which neither moth or rust doth corrupt, and which thieves do not break through and steal;" cease from murmuring, complaining, and speaking ill of one another; cherish the spirit of God in your hearts and cultivate the spirit of charity in your bosoms, which hopeth all things, believeth all things, and endureth all things, and which hideth a multitude of sins. Do not act so foolishly as some have done, who for some real or imaginary wrong committed by some Cain or Judas, Balaam or Simon Magus, have kicked up their heels, denied the faith, and cursed God, or that which is equivalent, His faithful servants: by the by, we will remind such of a German proverb—"the curses of the wicked are like chickens, they generally return home to roost." Take heed, brethren, that you be not led into so unwise a course, which has led many apparently good men and women into the depth of sin and the vortex of apostacy; be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

Cease from loud and boisterous laughter, that you grieve not the spirit of God, for God is not pleased with any excess in his children; "and excessive laughter is sin." See Doctrines and Covenants, page 148.

In conclusion, we say unto you in the words of 2d Peter, 1st chap., 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th verses: "Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience Godliness, and to Godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity; and if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren or unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. * * * Wherefore brethren give diligence to make your calling and election sure, for if you do these things you shall never fall."

Signed in behalf of the Council.

Adopted.

The military Academy was under consideration. Mr. Barry devoted an hour's speech to condemnation of the Know-Nothing movements and purposes, and stigmatising it not only as illegal, but as a combination to take away the rights of citizens. It was, in his opinion, the child of the alien and sedition laws, and anti-republican in its tendencies.

Mr. Banks replied, contending men have a right to conceal their political views, and the government which undertakes to trammel him in that right, strikes at the basis of republican institutions. He explained why men should combine to acquire rights denied to them by corrupt political influence and monied aristocracy, and took occasion to condemn, in strong terms, the claim of the Roman Catholic Church to interfere with and control secular affairs. Both gentlemen were listened to with marked attention.

The Military Academy bill and Indian appropriation bill were passed. Adjourned.

December 19.—Senate—A message was received from the President, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, in regard to a correspondence with our Minister in Constantinople.

Mr. Fish presented a petition from merchants of New York, for aid to the expedition to the Northern Seas in search of Kane. The resolution was passed.

Mr. Brodhead reported a bill in favor of General Wool, and recommended its passage. It was passed.

Mr. Cass gave notice that, on a future day, he should move that the Senate adopt Underwood's resolution, and call the attention of the President thereto, eulogising Napolean for his sentiments in reference to religious liberty.

House—Mr. Phelps, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making appropriations for the naval service, for the year ending June 30, 1855.

Mr. Houston, from the same committee, reported a bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defence, and the repair of barracks and quarters for the same period.

Both bills were referred to Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. House went into Committee of the Whole to transact business pertaining to the District of Columbia.

Various bills relating the District of Columbia were considered, but none finally acted on.

HOUSE—On motion of Mr. Stanton of Tennessee, the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to inquire whether further legislation is necessary for the better protection of officers of the United States, and other persons engaged in the execution of the laws thereof, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. Macy introduced bills for the completion of certain public works, heretofore commenced, in Wisconsin. Referred to Committee on Commerce.

Mr. Zollickoffer introduced a bill regulating the rights of suffrage in the Territories of the United States. Referred to Committee on Territories.

Kossuth's opinion on the seige of Sebastopol.

When the seige of Sebastopol was first proposed, Kossuth expressed the following decided opinion on the subject, which seems quite likely to be realized.

"To take an intrenched camp, linked by terrible fortresses, and an army for a garrison in it, and new armies pouring in on your flank and rear, and you on the plains of the Crimea, with also no cavalry to resist them, is an undertaking, to succeed in, which more forces are required, than France and England can ever unite in that quarter for such an aim. Ask about it whichever staff officer has learned something about tactics and strategy. In that position is Sebastopol. Thanks to your Austrian alliance, which having interposed herself between you and your enemy in Wallachia, made the Czar free to send such numbers to Sebastopol as he likes."

"You will be beaten, remember my word! Your braves will fall in vain under Russian bullets and the Crimea air, as the Russians fell under Turkish bullets and Danubian fever. Not one out of five of your braves immolated in vain shall see Albion or Gallia again. But I will tell you in what manner Sebastopol is to be taken. It is at Warsaw that you can take Sebastopol."

BATTLE OF INKERMAN.

The New York papers are freighted with the details of the bloody battle of November 5th, between the Russians and the allies, near Sebastopol. It was a murderous encounter, but "glorious" (as the phrase is) for the British. The Russians came at them some sixty thousand strong; the British mustering only eight thousand. After a terrible conflict, six thousand French having rushed to the support of their ally, the Russians retreated. Sixteen hundred French, near three thousand British, and fifteen thousand Russians, were put hors du combat. Acts of cruelty—such as, by the military code, are accounted murder—are charged on the Russians. It is said they bayoneted the wounded and the dead; and that such barbarities are pleasing to the Russian General-in-Chief, the priests and the Czar. At any rate, two Russian majors were ignominiously hung after being captured by the allies, on the ground that they had been guilty of such attrocities. Acts like these mock our boasted civilization; and, if imitated, would generate habits consistent only with an age of barbarism. One account says, "the Russians fought like devils." In truth, the scene at Inkerman on that day must have presented as vivid an image of hell, as was ever seen on earth.

Large Fire—St. Louis Rolling Mill Destroyed.

It is with deep regret that we record the total destruction of the St. Louis Rolling Mill, with all the work-shops, offices and out buildings. About noon on the 18th inst., a stove pipe in the office fell while the clerks were at dinner, setting fire to the house, and, before the flames could be subdued all the buildings on the premises were laid in ashes! The Rolling Mill was between four and five miles from the city, and the fire companies could not reach the spot in time to render any efficient service—the buildings being of wood, and the flames spreading with great rapidity.

The warehouse was 100 ft. square, and contained some 500 tons of bar, sheet and rod iron, in a finished state. In the machine shops and furnace building were over 1000 tons of iron in process of finishing, besides a large quantity of blooms and pig metal.

The loss is estimated at over $150,000. The insurance on houses and stock, chiefly in city offices, amounts to $110,000.

TRUTH is always consistant with itself, and needs nothing to help it. It is always near at hand; it sits upon our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware. Whereas a lie is troublesome, and sets a man's invention upon a trick; and one trick needs a great many more to make it good.—Tillotson.

A MONUMENT TO FRANKLIN.—A large granite monument to the memory of Benjamin Franklin, has lately been erected at Mount Auburn, by Mr. Thomas Dowse, of Cambridge, at his expense.

AN ESSAY FOR YOUNG LADIES.

BY COL. JOHNSON.

I have written many articles intended for the benefit and improvement of men, in the various relations of life, but rarely have I devoted my pen to the use of the ladies. Should I do it this once, I hope the scorn and frown of the fair creatures, for whom I concern myself, will not be cast upon me for attempting to give them good advice. Of course, I do not intend to lecture "old" ladies, or those who have husbands to counsel them; for, in the first place, old ladies are general "lecturers" themselves, requiring no one to instruct them; they know quite too much already. Then, as to teaching married ladies, it might be considered as obtruding into the domestic relations—usurping tho prerogatives of the lord and master himself, to attempt to counsel his wife. This brings me back to the young ladies—the sweet flowers and gems of the creation, which I had in my eye when I took up my pen.

With all the rapturous eoniums lavished on the youthful fair, by painter, novelist, and poet—with all the admitted grace and refinement inherent in the softer sex, or flowing out spontaneously from the delicacy and kindness in their nature, it must be admitted that the condition of women, and especially those who have not yet come to their good fortune—the arms of a faithful, protecting husband—is much less enviable than that of young men.

Flirtation and the vain pursuit of empty pleasure, notwithstanding it remains an abiding fact, that woman's chief glory is in the domestic circle. It is there, and there only, she receives the best impression of her refined morality, her kindness, her suavity, her gentleness, her patient endurance, her benevolence and piety, and all those charms which adorn the cultivated female character, and constitute her pre-eminently the household goddess. Man may tarnish his fame by youthful follies, and brighten it again; woman never. Man may go forth into the rugged paths of life, struggle with his asperities, and conquer by a strong arm and indomitable courage; woman is unfitted by her very nature to grapple with these hardships; and her heart pines for a peaceful fireside—

"Man may for wealth and glory roam;
But woman must be blest at home."

Thus circumstanced, it is natural, and to be supposed, that the young lady looks forward to the matrimonial connection, as the great turning-point of her earthly being; and though she may look with hope, and sometimes with impatience at delay, she cannot, as a rational being, be otherwise than deeply concerned in the choice she may make. It may be stated, then, that woman's future prospects, her weal or woe, her happiness or misery, her continued life as a boon or withering curse, all depend upon the choice of a companion. If young ladies were beings of reflection, rather than of impulse—if they reasoned as profoundly as they love ardently, I am persuaded that many of them would pause, and start back from the vortex into which they were about to plunge themselves, by making this choice too precipitately, and especially by making it on a totally false estimate of character in the hardier sex. But I will treat of this by and by. Having assumed the mentor of the youthful fair, I must be a little logical in throwing out my instructions; so that they shall be remembered and acted upon, item by item, in order to retain their happy results.

And, first, let the young lady who thinks of matrimony—and what sensible young lady does not?—"qualify herself, or become qualified by others, for that important relation. How many of my fair readers have considered this?—considered that they were entering upon a most important employment for life, and how necessary was initiatory qualification for that employment, and comfort and enjoyment in it! My fair reader, you will not employ a dressmaker to make you a dress, a milliner to do up your cap, unless they have served an apprenticeship at their respective callings. How much less will a sensible young man, and especially if he depend upon business for support, employ you for life, at the most important vocation ever engaging the attention of females, viz: to preside as mistress in his household, and instruct those little immortals who are to bear up his name, his fame, and his house in the future, unless you have learned the business of your position?

But, you ask, how is your trade to be learned? You say that you have passed through the boarding school, can read "Telemachus" in French, play on the piano, thrum the guitar a little, paint the butterfly's wing, and dance the polka—are not these enough? Innocent one! I will not rebuke thee for acquiring these elegant accomplishments, for thy aspiring mother thought them genteel and fashionable; and no doubt she had the best intentions in putting thee on this course; but I will put to thee a few questions, as tests of the sufficiency of such accomplishments, to fit thee for the duties of a housewife, of a mother, a guide, and a Christian matron to thy offspring. Will a few scraps of French serve thy husband and his invited guest with a dinner? Will the notes on the piano put all things to rights about the house, and make it as clean and tidy, both in drawing-room and kitchen, as a newly scoured churn? Will the butterfly's wing in picture hush the baby, and prove a pictorial lesson to the housemaid, putting her in the line of her duty? And will a swing in the polka teach thy little boys geography and arithmetic, and bring them up to the house of prayer, and place them on their knees before God? Know thou, young beginner in life's mysteries—thou youthful matron, whose thoughts are now on matrimony—that it is from maternal lips the wise men of the earth receive their choicest lessons of sentiment, morality and piety. Her gentle words falling upon the tender ears of childhood, make a deep, indelible, abiding impression, which fixes the character, the fortune, and destiny of the future man. Oh! how important that the mind of the mother be so imbued with wisdom and understanding, that those "gentle words" be like "apples of gold in pictures of silver;" so that their instruction shall be as valuable as a recollection of them is lasting.

The second point to which I call attention is, the importance of a rigid choice of a husband. I am aware that, in this matter, females are not placed in a parity of condition with men; the former being debarred by social usage from making proposals, and retaining nothing but the prerogative of negation. But their power over the little word NO carries omnipotence with it, for the purposes of my proposition. The chief reason why so many improvident and hapless matches are contracted by young ladies, is, that they employ whim and fancy instead of judgment and reason in directing their choice. Take a familiar example. A laced coat and a brilliant shoulder knot, on a young subaltern in the army, have more charms for many female fancies than sterling sense, pure principles, industrious habits, and constancy of affection, in a citizen with plain clothes. Sometimes a successful young tragedian, or even a comic actor, if he be dressed in princely robes and sparkle with brilliants, captivates the whole assemblage of young women; and they would leave their home and follow him to the world's end, but for parental restraint. These giddy creatures unread in the lessons of worldly wisdom, and forgetting that "all is not gold that glitters," transfer the morality and genius of the author to the player, and forget that the latter may be steeped to the eyes in moral depravity, and have nothing left to bestow upon any one, but the gross passion of a corrupt and hollow heart. But of all mysteries, the most mysterious in the wayward fancies of the sex, is that displayed in the choice of a rake by professien, over an honest farmer or tradesman. I have often heard females justify this absurdity, by alleging, that "a reformed rake made the very best husband." Poor, deluded, trusting ones—do they know that their argument supposes a "rari avis," if not an anomaly in nature? Confiding and credulous fair one! if thou canst catch such a mythological animal as a "reformed rake," out of the precincts of the novel-books, I conjure thee to bring him to me, that I may see one before I die, and I'll pay thee his weight in Californian gold, and exhibit him over Christendom as a living curiosity. Thou wouldst marry a rake, eh? for the pleasure and triumph of reforming him? Stop, lovely maid! I stand up here and forbid the banns! He is already a married man, and it would be pollution in thee to fall into his embrace. He is married to his glass, to the dice, to the cards—married to idleness, profligacy, and wantonness—married to baseness, crime and villiany—to the drunkard's grave, and the memorial of infamy! Thou, the lineal daughter of her, who in Eden's bowers was beguiled by the syren seduction of the wily tempter, I warn thee to fly the second temptation, if possible more fearful than the first, as breathing from the false and polluted lips of the confirmed rake. His persuasions, if listened to, will lead thee to the hovel of poverty, to pining solitude, without garments to warm, bread to sustain, or light to cheer thee in thy living tomb. They will strip thee of thy bloom of youth and health, unbind thy shining hair, hang it all dishevelled about thy haggard brow, dim thy eyes with tears, wring sighs and groans from thy agitated bosom, lay thee a blighted and an early victim in the narrow house of death, and fix an indelible stain of infamy on thy beloved offspring! Thou turnest pale, young and inexperienced one, and tremblest with fearful apprehension, as well thou mayest, at the truthful picture I have just drawn; and thou comest to me, an old one, to inquire what thou must do in the matter of thy choice. Thou hast done well to fly from the rake and come to me. Trust in Almighty goodness, and heed my counsel, and thou shalt outride the storms of early passion and folly, and glide safely into the matrimonial haven of security and happiness. 1st, Never spend five minutes with any man in private conversation, unless you know him to possess temperance, industry, upright moral principle, common sense, and religious tendencies. 2d, Never entertain a proposal of marriage from any one, until you have better evidence that he loves you than his verbal declarations. No; you must collect that evidence from a timerous, bashful carriage, a hesitancy of manner, a taciturnity, a deep, thoughtful silence, and a profound respect shown towards you, rather than from any words whatever. If the proposal be made in a bantering way—made with boldness and sang froid, or made with great plausibility of speech, fine elocution, or ratified by oaths and awful vows—leave the company of such an one instantly. He loves you not, and his proposal is a delusion and a lie. 3d, Never obtrude yourself upon the attentions of any living man. It is the worst way possible to serve your end. Even if the attentions of a particular young gentlemen would be agreeable to you, rather retire from him; be a little coy, and make yourself scarce and rare to him. If he have the least fancy to you, never fear, he will follow you up, even to your hiding-place, and when he finds you, he will estimate the interview just in proportion to the difficulties he has encountered in obtaining an interview.

But you complain that no one of precisely your rank in life, and one that you could love and respect, seeks particular acquaintance with you. I am aware that, in this country, where emigration, the army and navy, etc., have drawn off the men, leaving females more numerous than the other sex, that every female cannot obtain a connection worthy of her deserts. Besides this, society has become so depraved that many men seek for wives just as they do for shares in the bank—to make money out of them; thus perverting a sacred institution, and changing it into the grossness of bargain and sale. Bating this gross perversion of nature's laws among match-seekers by profession, I still have too much faith in the virtue of the middle classes, to suppose the corruption general. It is to be hoped that most people marry from a higher and better principle.

Well now, fair maiden, how shall I meet thy difficulty? Thou hast one of three difficulties to take; first, either accept the proffers of a good, moral, industrious man, a little below thy rank; or, second, make up thy mind to a state of single blessedness for aye; or, thirdly, emigrate with some friends to a new country, where thy charms and thy virtue will command their price.

The second alternative I hope thou wilt not adopt, till thou hast tried the virtue of one or both of the others. The happiest marriages I have ever known in England, have been those where a sensible, amiable, lady-bred, has come down a shade from her supposed rank, to throw her education, blandishments, grace and charms around the fireside of an intelligent, virtuous, prosperous man of business, who was proud of his wife, and his wife made very happy by his constancy and untiring attentions.

Maiden of Britain, listen to what I say! If you can combine in your husband sobriety, industry, good sense, moral honesty, and a sincere affection toward you, you are doing infinitely better than catering for rank, a gilded coach, and a stately mansion, where, perhaps, coldness, neglect, and blasted hopes, may be your portion.

Finally, ladies, farewell! God bless you—remember what I have told you, and act accordingly. —[Lloyd's Sunday Times.

Governor Young on a Tour to Manti.

Many rumors having reached here lately concerning the unwise conduct of some foolish Indians in Utah, Juab, and Sanpete counties, Governor Young, Ex-officio Superintendent of Indian afairs, accompanied by Presidents Kimball and Grant; Elder Hyde, Smith, and L. Snow, of the Twelve; and a few others, left this city on the 10th inst., to counsel the citizens in those counties, and have a talk with the few Indians who are raising slight disturbances. From Mr. Hambleton, the mail carrier to Manti, we learn that he met the party all well at Summit Creek; that they expected to leave Manti, on their return, on the 17th inst., and would probably arrive here on the 20th or 21st.

THE INDIANS WEST OF TOOELE.—The report that the Indians had molested the emigrants on the new route to Carson Valley, arose from four of a company taking fright at some appearances which looked suspicious to their ignorance of the Indian language and customs. Several companies have lately passed on by that route, and authentic accounts, of more recent dates than all the rumors, state that the Indians have acted as guides with invariable skill and good faith, and have without exception been extremely friendly.

CASUALTIES.—On the 13th inst., Bro. Charles Kaighin was thrown from a load of wood, which he was hauling out of North Mill Creek Kanyon, about half a mile above the mill, and died in about fifteen minutes. Bro. Kaighin was from the Isle of Man.

We are informed that, on the same day, one of the soldiers of the government party, now on their way to Fillmore City, pitched over his horse's head into one of the deep springs just this side of Jordan Kanyon, and was drowned.

WEATHER.—Frost first nipped vines and other tender vegetation on the 15th inst. Nights cool, days clear, still, and very pleasant; making breathing a real luxury, and affording an excellent time to close up field work, get up wood, etc.

Tour to Manti.

Governor Young and suit returned on the 18th inst., having been absent eight days on a trip to Manti and the intervening settlements. Talks were held with the Indians on the route, who, with a few exceptions, manifested friendly feelings, and a strong desire for the continuance of peaceful relations.—Much counsel and instruction on the policy to pursue with our red neighbors, and on other matters, was given to the inhabitants of each settlement.

The notorious Washeur, or Squash-head, told Gov. Young, "that he had been mad, and had acted foolishly, but had got over it now, and would do better; and, as he was very poor, if he would give him a blanket, he would go out hunting and get his living honestly." The Governor overlooked Squash-head's past folly, and gave him a blanket; being well aware that, as we have been twenty-four years in severe drill to learn what we know, we should be very lenient to the natives, who have to start from a position so far below the vantage ground we had at the beginning.

The company were favored with lovely weather, enjoyed the trip much, and all parties were gratified and benefitted by the visit.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—While tending Gov. Young's large circular saw, the man who carried off the slabs and boards, accidentally let a loose board touch the teeth of the saw, when it was hurled from his hands like lightning, and the end of it struck Brother Bingham Bement on his left side, and in front, passing across his bowels. Notwithstanding all the help that medical and other skill could afford, Bro. Bement failed rapidly, and died on the morning of the 23d inst. He was about 35 years old. In him, our community has suffered the loss of an industrious, intelligent and faithful saint.

CALIFORNIA.—By letters from Elder P. P. Pratt to Governor Young and Elder G. A. Smith, dated at San Francisco, August 23d, we learn the following:

Elder Pratt and all the Elders who went from here with him were in good health. Elders George Q. Cannon, Hawkins, Henry Bigler, and Farrar, had arrived from the Islands on their way to Utah. Elder Badlam is studying the Chinese language, and an intelligent Chinaman is reading the Book of Mormon, and other publications, with interest. Business was very dull; the markets were glutted; no money afloat; and many chances to buy goods cheaper than in New York.

PROFITABLE FARMING.—Bro. Israel Calkins, of Payson, raised on a little less than one acre of land belonging to Bishop Cross, the following produce, this season, viz: 150 bushels of beets, 150 bushels of potatoes, 30 bushels of onions, 150 good cabbage heads, besides 300 which were destroyed by the grasshoppers; cucumbers enough for three barrels of pickles, and quite a quantity of melons, squashes, peppers, &c., &c.

The above is another evidence that a small piece of ground, well tilled, gives more profit and satisfaction, with less labor, than the usual mode of skimming over large surfaces, and taking half care of the produce.

SUGAR BEETS.—Brother Geo. Crainer, of Tooele, brought in four sugar beets which weighed seventy-two and half pounds; one of them weighing twenty pounds.

These were about average in a crop on half an acre.

IMMIGRATION—GOODS.—On the 24th inst., Elders William Empy, William Taylor, and Dorr P. Curtis arrived with a company of the saints, with forty-three wagons; and Elders Aaron F. Farr and Elijah Ward came in with J. M. Horner & Co.'s second train of goods, in twenty-seven wagons. Elder Robert Campbell and company will probably arrive during this week, and J. M. Horner's third and last train of goods is not far behind them, and their arrival will close our immigration and imports this season. Fortunately for the late trains, the weather coutinues to be extremely mild and pleasant, like the Indian Summer in the States.

ARREST OF A BURGLAR.—On the night of the 1st inst., a man named Lewis Sickerman broke into the house of Mr. J. Handley, of Stanton Macoupin county, and carried off a gun, a pair of boots and a quantity of money. Mr. Handley immediately started in pursuit, and overtook the rascal at St. Louis and had him arrested. He was brought back on Tuesday evening on the Reindeer, and turned over to the Sheriff of Macoupin county, till the next Circuit Court.—[Alton Telegraph.

THE INDIAN'S FAREWELL.

BY MRS. SARAH E. DAWES.

Methinks I now hear the forests sad moan,
As the last of my race, I am standing alone;
No loved one is left, as I gaze on the plain,
Where I've hunted the deer, or danced o'er the slain.
I bid thee farewell, my own native land,
Where I've reigned a proud warrior, the chief of my band.

Farewell to thee, now, with thy wavelets of blue,
Thou swift rolling stream, where I've sailed my canoe;
No more shall I bathe in thy waters so clear,
Thy murmurs so sweet, no more shall I hear.
I go far away where the ocean waves swell—
My own native stream, I bid thee farewell.

Farewell, thou lone mount, with thy mantle of snow;
The Great Spirit formed thee his altar below;
No more on thy side shall I chase the wild deer,
Thy echoes no more shall sound on my ear.
I leave thee in sorrow for scenes that are new;
Once more, thou lone mountain, I bid thee adieu.

I leave thee, loved spot, for a far distant shore,
To make my last home where the sea billows roar;
Thou grave of my fathers, thou dear native home,
A stranger from thee, henceforth I must roam.
O, why does my heart with such wild sorrow swell,
As I bid thee, forever, a mournful farewell!

Discourse by President Heber C. Kimball, Tabernacle, March 19, 1854.

What does it matter where I am? I am as ready to go and preach the Gospel as to dwell here, if it is the will of the Lord and my brethren. I have told the men who are about to be sent forth this year, that they will go with more power and strength than any former laborers in the vineyard have enjoyed. This applies to those who do right, and diligently keep the commandments of God, and love justice and righteousness, and do as they are told, refraining from evil. I say they will have more power than former servants of God according to their light and knowledge, and the circumstances to which they will be placed. I prophecy this. A man is a fool that will not prophecy good concerning Israel and concerning his own father's house.

I told my brethren when they went from here, and from this time instead of going to dances, and to the theatre, and to parties, to go and fast and pray, and prophecy upon the success of their mission.

If your heart is right, you cannot speak without speaking what is right. The Spirit of prophecy foresees future events. God does not bring to pass a thing because you say it shall be so, but because He designed it should be so, and it is the future prospects of the Almighty that the prophet foresees. That is the way I prophecy; but I have predicted things I did not foresee, and did not believe anybody else did before I have said it, and it came to pass, even more abundantly than I predicted; and that was with regard to the future situation of the people who first came into this valley. Nearly every man was dressed in skins, and we were all poor, destitute and distressed, yet we all felt well. I said, "it will be but a little while, brethren, before you shall have food and raiment in abundance, and shall buy it cheaper than can be bought in the cities of the United States." I did not know there were any Gentiles coming here—I never thought of such a thing; but after I spoke it I thought I must be mistaken this time. Br. Rich remarked at the time, "I do not believe a word of it." And neither did I; but to the astonishment and joy of the Saints it came to pass just as I had spoken it, only more abundantly. The Lord led me right, but I did not know it.

I have heard Joseph say many times that he was much tormented about the revelations the Lord gave through him—it seemed to be so impossible for them to be fulfilled. I do not profess to be a prophet; but I know what every man and woman can be if they live for it. To enjoy this blessing they must walk in the channel of the Priesthood, being subject to the order and government of heaven; then they are all revelation, and they cannot predict anything that will not come to pass. All that hinders you from enjoying this blessing is because you are not obedient.

You might say, "do we not do all things that Br. Brigham counsels us to do?" No; if you did, every wife would be subject to her own husband, and every elder to their presiding elder, and every member to their presiding bishop. If you do not do this you are not walking in the channel of the Priesthood, in the channel of revelation and salvation; and you will stumble and fall if you do not wake to righteousness, and gird up the loins of your minds.

Have not the majority of this congregation made the most solemn covenants, and vows, that they will listen to obey, and be subject to the Priesthood? Have not the sisters made the same solemn covenants and vows before God and angels, that they would be subject to their husbands? Are you faithful to your vows? If you are, you will have dreams and visions, and revelations from the world of light, and you will be comforted by night and by day. But if you do not fulfill your covenants you cannot enjoy these blessings.

The matter is plain to your understanding, and not mysterious. I have no mysteries to impart, and I never expect to have; for if this people will do right there is nothing that will be a mystery to them; but those things which appeared the most mysterious will prove the most simple things in the world.

Learn to govern yourselves in a family capacity, for there is where reformation ought to commence, after it has commenced in the assembly of the elders of Israel. There must be order, peace, love, kindness, gentleness, and every noble sentiment to accomplish a reformation that is pleasing to God.

We have got to be gathered, and continue gathered, though there will be all kinds of fish in the net; and the Lord will bring us into all kinds of circumstances, until the wheat is separated from the smut and chaff. There is a time of separation, and I know if I am faithful I shall be among the chosen band who will triumph over hell, death and the grave, and dwell in the society of men who are perfectly of one heart and mind, where the wicked cease to trouble, unless we go where they are. This day will come as sure as the sun shines.

As for my going into the immediate presence of God when I die, I do not expect to; but I expect to go into the world of spirits, and associate with my brethren, and preach the Gospel in the spiritual world, and prepare myself in every necessary way to receive my body again, and then enter through the vale into the celestial world. I never shall come into the presence of my Father and God, until I have received my resurrected body, neither will any other person; and I doubt whether all those who profess to be Saints will ever be gathered with the spirits of the just in the spiritual world; but they will be left where they attain to. The righteous are gathered to the spirit world to prepare for the resurrection of their bodies.

I do not know that I can talk any plainer. I am speaking as plain as I can to have you understand. I do not expect to be with you forever; neither will Br. Brigham—in these bodies; they are nearly worn out; they have stood a long and violent seige, and will soon go the way of all the earth. Still we may live many years yet to assist in making permanent the foundation of Zion. There are thousands of good men in the earth who can act in the same capacity we do, after we have passed through the vail of death. God can qualify whom he pleases, and put in them the spirit of Joseph, and Brigham and Heber.

Brethren do keep the commandments of God, and live your profession; and remember if you were as godly, and as holy as the angels, the world would speak against you and seek your destruction. What has the world to do with it? Nothing, only as you associate with it, and partake of its spirit. Upon the same principle has a man any power over a woman, any further than she will give him power to pollute herself and him too? Can the Gentiles turn me to unrighteousness any further than I permit them? I am an instrument in the hands of God, and it is not for me to dictate the power that works through me, but it is for him to control me according to his good pleasure.

Does Br. James' violin rise up and dictate him? No, it is perfectly passive, permitting him to play any tune he pleases upon it. Upon the same principle we should be like clay in the hands of the potter. It is not for the clay to dictate the potter, but the potter dictates the clay, and moulds and fashions it according to his own pleasure. Just so God controls Br. Brigham and every other good man who is dictated by His Spirit.

Do you ever hear me get up here and say, "I am no preacher, and you must not expect anything from me?" I am in the hands of God, and it is for Him to speak through me, or in other words, play a tune on me to this people according to His own fancy. I am in the hands of the Potter, and if I continue faithful He will make me a vessel unto honor.

I wish you elders to apply this illustration to yourselves—if you have anything to say, say it; and if you have not, be as quiet as the musical instrument without the performer.

When I went to England first I had not much to say. We opened the door to that nation in great simplicity. Had I preached Almighty discourses, with more words than good sound doctrine, instead of opening the doors I should have added another lock. The Lord appointed me to that work because I was willing to be the simplest.

After I had spoken they always thought there was something else behind the curtains. We preached three times in Voxhall Road Chapel, Preston. After the third meeting the priest feared the increasing greatness of our testimony, and closed the doors of this house against us. This was no sooner done than fifty doors were opened to us, and the people were all around us entreating us to preach in their houses.

If you will visit a stone quarry, you will find they use the simplest instruments to crack and remove the largest rocks; so the Lord uses the simplest of His servants to accomplish some of His greatest purposes. When the blacksmith is making a horse-shoe, does it dictate its maker who is making it and fashioning it to a useful purpose? Does the plowshare, the scythe, the ax, or the chisel rise up and dictate the mechanic, saying—Why do you not form me thus? Some of those tools have to pass through various shades of temper, sometimes too low, and sometimes too high, before it is just right; and it requires an expert mechanic to hit the proper temper, for they are made to come in contact with all kinds of timber. So we are tools made to come in contact with all kinds of dispositions, and very few tools will stand, and keep a good edge, coming in contact with every kind of timber, and stone, and the devil.

If you do not learn to temper yourselves properly, you will not be of much use at last.

I speak of these things whether they are edifying or not; as to that I am not concerned; but they are true, and they will save and exalt you, and bring you into the celestial world, to mingle in the society of the Father, and Jesus Christ his Son, with the Prophets and Apostles from the beginning to the present day. I am bound for no other place, God helping me. Salvation is what I am after in this world; and food, clothing and washing are all I need while I stay here, and that is more than I can take away with me.

I have no pride in anything but the principles of salvation, and to see you do right, humble yourselves, retain the Holy Spirit, live in your religion, then I am proud of you indeed. My God, His purposes, my religion, and this people, are all I am fond of in this world.

Our religion is different from everything else that was ever instituted, but when you become acquainted with it, and partake of its spirit, it is lively and angelic; it is a screen that throws out everything but that which is pure wheat. When we make flour from smutty wheat, we must have a smut machine to clear it of all filth before it goes into the bolt. The smut machine is a powerful place; it will blow to pieces everything that is not the real grain. Thank God he has got such a machine, and men to enjoy His holy spirit.

My prayer is before God and angels, by day and by night, that He would purge this people, and purify them from wicked men and women; and I hope the purging operation will continue until there is an entire separation of the wheat and the chaff. There will be a separation, and I tell you what I know and what I believe only. I know the truth when I speak it, and so do you when you hear it. It makes no matter what instrument it comes through, it is truth still, and you cannot make anything else of it.

God bless you forever, that peace, goodness, union, love, and the spirit of patience and submission before God, and in the hands of His servants may abide with you forever. Amen.

MR. BROWN'S CHRISTMAS.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

(Concluded.)

"A fact I have never yet heard disputed," was the half playful answer.

Mrs. Brown sighed, and let her eyes drop to the floor.

"They seemed to me to feel very right," added Mr. Brown. "You don't mean to say that they wish to keep their money instead of giving it to Mrs. Elkhart?"

"Oh, no, dear, not that; but they are only children."

"So you intimated just now, said Mr. Brown, with provoking coolness. "I should be sorry to have them men and women so soon. Yes;" he added more seriously, "they are children—good, self-denying children, whose generous sympathies were born in heaven. It makes my heart warm whenever I think of what they have done. To-morrow will be to them the happiest Christmas they have ever experienced; for the love that goes out to bless others, returns again, laden with double blessings for the heart from which it went forth.

Mrs. Brown only sighed a response. She felt that an attempt to make her husband realize what she did, in regard to the children's true mental states, would be all in vain, and so she answered nothing.

In a very comfortable self-satisfied state of mind was Mr. Brown on retiring for the night, and as soon as his head touched the pillow, he was far off in the land of dreams. Not so Mrs. Brown; thoughts of the morrow and of her children, undelighted by by a single present from father or mother, so haunted her that she could not sleep until long after the hour of midnight. She understood their childish wants far too well to chat herself into the fancy, that they would be as happy as if a gift had expressed to them their parent's love.

"Why, Mary! Asleep yet? A merry Christmas." Mr. Brown bent over his wife and kissed Christmas morning! When before did day dawn find children sleeping? When before did the bright Christmas sun look in through the curtained windows, and smile upon the closed lips of the mother? What a strange stillness reigned through the house, in which a year before the air rung with childhood's shouts of joyous laughter. There was in it something unnatural.

her as she awoke. "I've been up for nearly an hour. Ah, Maggy, dear! good morning to you. A merry Christmas, darling!" And Mr. Brown pressed his lips to the white forehead of his awakened little one.

"Not a child stirring yet?" continued Mr. Brown. "Why, two hours before this on last Christmas morning, the whole house was in an uproar. I must see to it. John! Fanny!" he called up the stairs, "don't you know it's Christmas morning? Come, awake up!"

Thus aroused, the children and their mother were soon out of bed and ready to join their father in the breakfast room, where the morning meal, already served, awaited them. Mr. Brown was very talkative, and in fine spirits; but the children were dull. Once or twice he aroused them into something like animation, by picturing the happiness of Mrs. Elkhart and her poor little ones, when they presented her, as they were to do immediately after breakfast, with their valuable present. "You will make hearts glad to-day, my children, said Mr. Brown, with an earnestness that quickened their generous impulses.

Just as he said this the tingling of a bell was heard in the parlor.

"What is that?" exclaimed Mrs. Brown, startled by so strange a sound coming suddenly from that quarter.

Ting-a-ling, a-ling! The sound was repeated. Instantly John sprang from the table and went bounding down stairs, taking but three long steps from the top to the bottom. Fanny glided after with less noise, but equal fleetness. There was heard a low exclamation from the children, on reaching the parlor, and the voice of Fanny with a rushing delight came ringing up with these words—

"Oh! mother! mother! come! quick! quick!"

Catching up Maggy as she descended the stairs, for the little pet was already half way down, the mother entered the parlor only a few minutes later than the older children. How unexpected was the sight that met her eye. In the centre of the room, on the marble table, stood a Christmas tree, glittering with paper chains and loaded with fruits and flowers, and beside it, on the table, was a present for every member of the family—not a costly present, but appropriate, and selected with a discrimination that perceived the character and wants of each.

"Oh, Father!" exclaimed Mrs. Brown, as soon as she comprehended what was before her, leaning her head upon her husband and restraining not her glad tears—"This is your work! How little did I dream of what was in your mind."

Christmas at Mr. Brown's on that day, was a Christmas to be remembered. What a new life flowed through the veins of the children! To the joy of being remembered in tokens of love, was added the purer, deeper, heaven-born joy of blessing others. Did they forget, even briefly, in this new excitement, the poor family across the street? Not so. Their generous hearts felt quicker impulses. Happy themselves, they were eager to be the ministers of happiness, and went forth quickly on their mission of benevolence.

Ah, not to their dying day can the children of Mr. Brown forget that Christmas. Nor can Mr. Brown forget it either. It solved a problem for him, though not just in the way anticipated.

May there be many Christmases like that at Mr. Brown's.

The Power of the Pence; A True Manchester Story.

The Rev. J. B. Owen, M. A., of Billston, in the course of a lecture delivered in the Liverpool Concert Hall, in connection with the Church of England institution upon "popular insurance," relates an anecdote strikingly illustrative of the power which lies in the hands of the working men, to promote their own social comfort and independence, if they would only exert it.

A manchester calico printer was, on his wedding day, persauded by his wife to allow her two half-pints of ale a day as her share. He rather winced under the bargain, fer, though a drinker himself, he would have preferred a perfectly sober wife. They both worked hard, and her poor man was seldom out of the public house as soon as the factory closed. The wife and husband saw little of each other, except at breakfast; but as she kept things neat and tidy about her, and made her stinted and even selfish allowance for housekeeping meet the demands upon her, he never complained. She had her daily pint, and he, perhaps, had his two or three quarts, and neither interfered with the other, except when at odd times she succeeded, by dint of one gentle little artifice or other, to win him home an hour or two earlier at night, and now and then to spend an entire evening in his own house. But these were rare occasions. They had been married a year, and on the morning of the wedding anniversary, the husband looked askance at her neat and comely person with some shade of remorse, as he observed:

"Mary, we'n no had holiday sin' we were wed, and only that I haven't a penny, we'd take a jaunt to the village to see thy mother."

"Would'st like to go, John?" asked she softly, between a smile and a tear, to hear him speak kindly as in olden times. "If thee'd like to go, John, I'll stand treat."

"Thou stand treat!" said he, with a half sneer. "Hast got a fortune, wench?"

"Nay," said she, "But I'n gotten the pint o' ale."

"Gotten what?" said he.

"The pint o' ale!" was the reply.

John did not understand her, till the faithful creature reached down a stocking from under a loose brick up the chimney, and counting out her daily pint of ale, in the shape of three hundred and sixty-five three pences, (i. e., £4 11s. 2d.,) put it into his hand, exclaiming:

"Thee shall have the holiday, John."

John was ashamed, astonished, conscience-smitten, charmed. He wouldn't touch it.

"Hasn't thee had thy share? Then I'll ha' no more," said he.

They kept their wedding day with the old home, and the wife's little capital was the nucleus of a series of investments that ultimately swelled into shop, factory, warehouse, country-seat, a carriage, and, for aught Mr. Owen knew, John was mayor of his native borough at last.

Industry.—To be really and practically industrious, one must improve the minute particles of time known as "spare minutes." Of all portions of our life, these spare minutes are the most fruitful for good or evil, and are literally the gaps through which temptation find access to the soul. "Spare minutes are the gold dust of time," said Young; and as dust makes the mountain, moments makes the year! Idleness wastes a man as insensibly as industry improves him; evil deeds and evil thoughts never creep upon him who is assiduously employed upon good ones. The mind and body both require activity to keep them in pure and healthy action. Like water if it runs free it is pure and wholesome; but what is more annoying and pestilential than a stagnant pool? Dilligence alone is a fair fortune, and industry a good estate.

All Boston is in a fret about its water. The Atlas says that Cotchituate is now nothing but a weak decoction of sardines; whilst, on the contrary, an analysis of the water shows the presence of a smaller proportion of the foreign matter than in 1845, and no trace of fishey or oiley substance. The water drawn from the surface of the lake is found to be purer than that from thirty feet below the surface. The papers are filled with communications scolding about the piscatory flavor of the water, and crying aloud for a remedy. They say that there is danger of a general epidemic, unless the water is improved. The Springfield Republican suggests that it is all an invention of the enemy, to render the Maine law unpopular.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLean—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

DR. WHITE,
DISCOVERER OF THE
SYMPTOMA TRUTINORIC SYSTEM,
For Diagonising all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs,
May be Consulted daily at his Office, No. 121 PINE St., between 4th & 5th, from 2 to 5 P. M.

According to well authenticated statistical reports, one out of every six of all the deaths that occur in Europe or America, are from diseases of the lungs alone.
Judging from the above data, there are at the present time within the city of St. Louis, at least,
FIFTEEN THOUSAND
individuals who have disease seated upon their lungs. It is equally true that the Medical Profession, without exception, are unable to detect a disease upon those organs in season to effect a radical cure; and this is the reason why that class of diseases have proved so universally fatal. And hence this new discovery offers the only means extant for detecting pulmonary diseases in their incipient stages, or in time to effect a cure in every case. In all probability, 14,000 out of the above number may escape a premature grave, by at once availing themselves of the benefits of this important discovery.
Parents and Guardians should submit every member of their families to an immediate examination by this New System if they would avoid a responsibility destrable to none but infidels. They should not suffer any pecuniary consideration to deter them from reaping its benefits if they would protect those committed to their charge from one of the most fatal diseases that exists upon this continent. If they rely upon their family physician to apprise them of the existence of this dreadful disease, depend upon it, not one case out of a hundred will ever recover. Heads of families, are you prepared to offer those committed to your responsible charge a sacrifice to prejudice, when these incontrovertable facts are before you? If so, the responsibility rests entirely with you.

With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,

Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,

Remarks by President Brigham Young, after Elder Orson Hyde had Lectured on the Marriage Relations, Oct. 6, 1854.

I do not wish to eradicate any items from the lecture Elder Hyde had given us this evening, but simply to give you my views, in a few words, on the portion touching bishops and deacons.

In Paul's first epistle to Timothy, third chapter, he writes as follows:

"This is a true saying, if a man desireth the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work. A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach; not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre, but patient, not a brawler, not covetous; one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity, (for if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the Church of God?) Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride, he fall into condemnation of the devil. Moreover, he must have a good report of them which are without, lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil. Likewise the deacons must be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre, holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of deacon, being found blameless. Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things. Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their houses well."

I have read this that your minds may be refreshed, and that you may know how it does read.

Instead of my believing for a moment that Paul wished to signify to Timothy that he must select a man to fill the office of a bishop that would have but one wife, I believe directly the reverse; but his advice to Timothy amounts to simply this: It would not be wise for you to ordain a man to the office of bishop, unless he has a wife; you must not ordain a single or unmarried man to that calling.

If you will read this chapter carefully, you will learn the qualifications necessary for deacons and bishops, and also for their wives.

I will simply give my views with regard to this matter, and then leave it.

I have no testimony from the Bible, neither have I from any history that I have any knowledge of, that a man was ever prohibited in the church, in the days of Paul, from taking more than one wife. If any historian has any knowledge to the contrary, let him make it known at a suitable time; but if such was the case, it has not come to my knowledge.

I will now give you my reasons why it is necessary that a bishop should have a wife, not but that he may have more than one wife. In the first place, he is (or should be) like a father to his ward, or to the people over whom he presides, and a good portion of his time is occupied among them. Still he does not wish to be bound up, or flooded with the cares of the world, so but that he can officiate in his office and magnify it to acceptance.

The office of a bishop in his ward, and when he finds a man who is doing a good business as a farmer or tradesman, and who has plenty around him, and is faithfully paying his tithing, he has no business here only to receive the tithing that man has to pay for the benefit of the kingdom of God; his business is more particularly in the houses of widows and orphans, and he is called to administer to them in righteousness, like a father.

Paul, knowing by observation and his own experience, the temptations that were continually thrown before the elders, gave instructions paramount to this: before you ordain a bishop, to take charge of the branch in any one district or place, see that he has a wife to begin with; he did not say but one wife; it does not say so; but he must have one to begin with, in order that he may not be continually drawn into temptation while he is in the line of his duty, visiting the houses of widows and orphans, the poor, the sick, and the afflicted in his ward. He is to converse with families, sometimes upon family matters, and care for them, but if he has no wife he is not so capable of taking care of a family as he otherwise would be, and perhaps he is not capable of taking care of himself. Now, select a young man who has preserved himself in purity and holiness, one who has carried himself circumspectly before the people, and before God: it would not do to ordain him to the office of a bishop, for he may be drawn into temptation, and he lacks experience in family matters; but take a man who has one wife, at least; a man of experience, like thousands of our elders, men of strength of mind, who have determination in them to preserve themselves pure under all circumstances, at all times, and in all places in their wards. Now, Timothy select such a man to be a bishop.

A bishop, in his calling and duty, is with the church all the time; he is not called to travel abroad to preach, but is at home; he is not abroad in the world, but is with the saints.

When you have got your bishop, he needs assistants, and he ordains counsellors, priests, teachers, and deacons, and calls them to help him; and he wishes men of his own heart and hand to do this. Says he, "I dare not even call a man to be a deacon, to assist me in my calling, unless he has a family. It is not the business of an ignorant young man, of no experience in family matters, to inquire into the circumstances of families, and know the wants of every person. Some may want medicine and nourishment, and to be looked after, and it is not the business of boys to do this; but select a man who has a family to be a deacon, whose wife can go with him, and assist in administering to the needy in the ward.

These are simply my views in a few words on this subject, and always have been since I have reflected upon the doctrine that the fathers teach us in the Holy Scriptures. I will venture to say the view I take of the matter is not to be disputed or disproved by Scripture or reason.

I have no reasonable grounds upon which to say it was not the custom in ancient times for a man to have more than one wife, but have every reason to believe that it was the custom among the Jews, from the days of Abraham to the days of the Apostles, for they were lineal descendants of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, all of whom taught and practised the plurality of wives, and were revered by the whole Jewish nation, and it is but natural they should have respected and followed their teachings and example.

So much I wished to say to my brethren and sisters. We have had a splendid address from Brother Hyde, for which I am grateful. I feel in my heart to bless the people all the time, and can say amen to Brother Hyde's last remarks. I know just as much about those matters as I want to know, and if I do not know more, it is because there is no more of it in the city. It is a hard matter for a man to hide himself from me in this Territory; the birds of the air, they say, carry news, and if they do not, I have plenty of sources of information.

I say to the congregation, treasure up in your hearts what you have heard to-night, and at other times. You will hear more with regard to the doctrine—that is, our 'marriage relations.' Elder Hyde says that he has only just dipt into it, but if it will not be displeasing to him, I will say he has not dipped into it yet; he has only run round the edge of the field. He has done so beautifully, and it will have its desired effect. But the whole subject of the marriage relation is not in my reach, nor in any other man's reach on this earth. It is without beginning of days or end of year; it is a hard matter to reach. We can tell some things with regard to it; it lays the foundation for worlds, for angels, and for the Gods; for intelligent beings to be crowned with glory, immortality, and eternal lives. In fact, it is the thread which runs from the beginning to the end of the holy gospel of salvation—of the gospel of the Son of God; it is from eternity to eternity. When the vision of the mind is opened, you can see a great portion of it, but you see it compuratively as a speaker sees the faces of his congregation. To look at, and talk to each individual separately, and thinking to become fully acquainted with them, only to spend five minutes with each would consume too much time, it could not easily be done. So it is with the visions of eternity; we can see and understand, but it is difficult to tell. May God bless you: Amen.

Remarks by George A. Smith, Tabernacle, Oct. 6, 1854, P. M.

I can say, in connection with brethren who have addressed you in the former part of the day, that it is with the greatest pleasure I arise at the present conference to cast in my mite and offer a few reflections upon the things of the kingdom, as they are rolling before us.

Our beloved president, at the close of the forenoon service, gave us a text he wished to have considered.

It has been my lot to be somewhat conversant with the saints who dwell in the valleys of the mountains, or especially those who reside south of this city, my acquaintance with them has been very great for the last five years. There is no doubt but that a feeling of carelessness and indifference has been manifested by many in these valleys, in relation to bequeathing their debts to the Perpetual Emigrating Fund, for the assistance they have received. It is not only an indifference which has been felt towards the Perpetual Emigrating Fund, but also to individuals who have expended their means to help their friends, neighbors, or brethren to this valley; they have frequently been treated with indifference and neglect, and I may almost say with cruelty, by some persons who have thus been helped; they are unwilling until they can be very comfortable themselves, to assist those who have helped them.

I have had my feelings hurt by instances of this kind which have been laid before me.

Now then, if I understand the text, it amounts to about this, (viz) our Savior's golden rule, "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." Or, to use this expression of the Savior's, in connection with that of our president, which would be, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, under like circumstances: for this is the law of the prophets."

There is no object on the face of the earth more to be desired, than to bring the poor and honest saints from the condition in which they are placed in the old world, and set them down here in the midst of these mountains, where, by their own industry, economy, and prudence, they can provide for their wants, and for the wants of their children. The difficulties which surround the saints in the old world are increasing. The great wars are involving the principle nations of the earth at this time in very serious expenses, which are taking from the laboring masses millions and millions of dollars, to supply the fighting hosts with weapons of death, and engines for the destruction of their enemies, and the presecution of their ambitious designs. While the allied powers are thus engaged, they are consuming the very source upon which the millions of the poor and needy are depending for their bread—for their existence.

If, during the time of peace that has prevailed in Europe for the last ten years, it was necessary to help the poor and needy away, it becomes tenfold more so under the present circumstances, when the nations are involving themselves in very bloody and disastrous wars.

It may be supposed that I am a little partial to some particular parties that are connected in this war; I am referring more particularly to the allied powers, but really I feel very little interest in the matter, any further than wherever Britain carries her sway, the gospel can follow in her liberal wake. To be sure, when a boy, my playmates used to say, two upon one is too many, and consequently if there would be any sympathy it would be in favor of Russia, as they are the weaker party, and is likely to have the worst of it. Then, as far as the contest is concerned, there may be a very great feeling of indifference in the minds of many, whether Turkey is devoured by the Bussian Bear, or carved up by the Lion of the west of Europe; the event is precisely the same, let it turn which way it may, as far as it effects us in our emigration movements; it serves to stop the channel of trade, and consequently effects the interests of the laboring classes of Great Britain, and a great proportion of the members of our church are of this class.

I would say to those who are in arrears to the Perpetual Emigration Fund, who know themselves to be such, if you have got houses, lands, cows, sheep, farms or property of any description, come forward like honest men and settle up to the uttermost farthing, and begin again to amass property; and if you have been owing to this institution for one year, or from the first of its operations, give a liberal interest for the capital you have held, and which could not be used or increased by the operations of the Fund. That would be my advice upon this subject; and then if you are able to subscribe enough in addition to bring one or two families, do that also. My advice to those who have just arrived is, that they fall not in the rear, as it has this day been complained of, but let them make it their first business to square off with the Fund that brought them here; to furnish this means as soon as it is in their power, to bring somebody else out from distant countries; and then you can take a fresh start in this mountain world. Even if you are a little behind when you have done this, scramble until you catch up again; for the facilities are a thousand to one in these valleys to what they were seven years ago.

When the Pioneers came here it looked a hard chance. There was not a single house to rent, and as to their being any prospect of having any, it looked very slim. But there has been slight changes since, and a very great change in relation to bread stuff. We have bread in abundance now; but then the only prospect of supply we had, was millions of black crickets. The change has been effected, and persons who land here with nothing but their hands, their bone and sinew, if they are indebted to the Fund or to persons for bringing them, they can soon pay these debts, and not only that, but they can soon establish themselves comfortably, and be prepared to help others.

I have noticed in the course of my travels an occasional individual, which I presume had lost by some of those who have not been willing to pay up; be that as it may, I have come across individuals who would lurk among the saints, "Why," say they, "what can be the matter? something is dreadful wrong; this is not ancient Mormonism—this is not the old religion we used to have in the days of Joseph; something is entirely wrong; I do not see things as I used to, I do not understand them;" and finally begin to complain and find fault, and murmur, and so it goes on from one time to another, until they wonder if they could not get a better location in California. I have heard men murmur when they were surrounded with plenty, with peace, and the blessings of heaven. What is the cause of this? The cause is in themselves. Do you, who have crossed the plains this season, expect to find the inhabitants of these valleys perfect? I think from all accounts you would have been illy prepared to associate with them, if you had found them perfect; there would have been room at least for a doubt whether you could have been admitted at all. The great fault lies in individuals not doing right themselves, but undertaking to make others do right, or to find fault with others for not doing right.

It is some time since I have read the New Testament, but I believe, if I recollect rightly, there is a passage somewhere in the Gospel according to St. Mark, which says: "So is the kingdom of God, if a man should cast seed into the ground, and should sleep and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knows not how. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. But when the fruit is brought forth immediately, he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come." Well, I met a man that in the days of Joseph Smith used to be a very great man, in his own eyes at least—very spirited in the church, tremendously so, and he tells me that things are going wrong; "Why," says he, things are not as they used to be." We will admit it; things are entirely different to what they were twenty years ago. Did any of you ever raise Indian corn in your lives? If so, you remember when it is six inches high it is very beautiful to the eye, it looks green and lovely, and it will grow very rapidly if you will only keep the weeds out of it; it will grow so rapidly that you can almost see it growing from day to day, and it is pleasure to cultivate it. Suppose a man should go into a corn field when the corn is six, eight, or ten inches high, who had not been raised in a country where it had been cultivated, but in some corner of the earth where it did not grow, and he had never seen such a plant before, and let him employ himself a few days in hoeing it and admiring its beauty. Suppose by some means he becomes perfectly blind for two or three months, and then goes into the field after he has received his sight—he now beholds corn seven, eight, and ten feet high, with large ears upon it; he would exclaim, "What is this? Who has destroyed the beautiful plants that were here two months ago? What has become of them?" He is told it is the same corn. "O, it cannot be, for the corn is little stuff, and only grows eight or ten inches high, and very unlike this awkward stuff."

This compares well with some of our Mormons who are a little effected with the grunts; they do not know that the work of the Lord has been spreading rapidly, and growing stronger, and becoming more formidable than it was twenty years ago.—There has been considerable advance since we used to gather around Joseph and Hyrum in Kirtland, to keep the mob from killing them.

I remember on a certain occasion the brethren were called together to prepare to defend Joseph against the mob, who were coming to destroy him, if possible. Bro. Cahoon was appointed captain of one of the largest companies, and it had ten men in it; it was the biggest company we could raise but one, and that contained fourteen men. Bro. Cahoon gave us some advice; he advised us if the mob came, and we were obliged to fire, to shoot at their legs; but should they advance upon us now, we would shoot higher than that; so if any body will look at it candidly, they will see that we have grown and improved considerably in our ideas. To shoot at the legs of a mob is now altogether behind the times in Mormonism. After Brother Cahoon had advised us, Brother Brigham rose and said, if the mob tackled him, he would shoot at their hearts, and some of the company more, pronounced. We must remember that we are in the advance; for the Lord has said, in these days he has commenced to do a great work, and called upon his servants to lay the foundation of it; the foundation being laid, then the work has to be done. In order to be participators in this, we must be honest with ourselves—with our brethren, and with the poor among the Lord's people; if we are, the blessings of God will flow upon us, and our knowledge will increase, and all the light and intelligence that we desire from God will be poured out upon us, and our means will increase, and our substance will be blessed unto us. But if we adopt the other principle, although men do it from covetousness, it is the identical way to become poor. The prophet said the liberal deviseth liberal things, and by his liberality he shall stand. This is the truth: it has been so among all generations, and with this people from the beginning.

It was customary before we entered this church to hear a great deal of text preaching. The learned ministers would select a text or passage of scripture, measure it by a theological rule, divide it into heads, and then preach from it—preaching about everything in the world but the thing in the text. After they had gone through this kind of manœuvering long enough, they would then appeal to the congregation to know if they had not preached to them the doctrine laid down in the text. Well, if I have not preached from the text, excuse me.

I will close my remarks with the old fashioned appeal, and if I have not preached the doctrines contained in the text, let me advise my friends to give heed to those doctrines anyhow.

Incidents in the History of Joseph Smith.

G. S. L. CITY, UTAH, Oct. 9, 1854.

MR. EDITOR:—In reading the history of Joseph Smith, as published in the News last winter, and especially that part of it which relates to his imprisonment in Liberty jail, Mo., I see there are many interesting facts which are omitted; and as I had the honor of being a fellow prisoner with him, I thought I would write some of those incidents for the satisfaction of any of your readers who may feel interested in them.

During our imprisonment we had many visitors, both friends and enemies. Among the latter, many were angry with brother Joseph, and accused him of killing a son, a brother, or some relative of theirs, at what was called the Crooked River battle. This looked rather strange to me, that so many should claim a son or a brother killed, when they reported only one man killed.

Among our friends who visited us, were President Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball, of the first Presidency—the latter several times—George A. Smith, of the Quorum of Twelve;—Don. C. Smith, brother of Joseph, came several times, and brought some of our families to see us. Benjamin Covey, Bishop of the Twelfth Ward of this city, brought each of us a new pair of boots, and made us a present of them. James Sloan, his wife and daughter, came several times. Alanson Ripley also visited us, and many others, who to name, would be too tedious. O. P. Rockwell brought us refreshments many times; and Jane Blevin and her daughters brought cakes, pies, etc., and handed them in at the windows. These things helped us much, as our food was very coarse, and so filthy that we could not eat it until we were driven to it by hunger.

After we had been there some time, and had tried every means we could to obtain our liberty by the law, without effect, (except Sidney Rigdon, who was bailed out,) and also having heard from a reliable source that it had been stated in the public street, by the most influential men in that part of the country, that "the Mormon prisoners would have to be condemned, or the character of the State would have to go down," we came to the conclusion that we would try other means to effect it.

Accordingly, on the 7th day of February, 1839, after counseling together on the subject, we concluded to try to go that evening when the jailer came with our supper; but brother Hyrum, before deciding fully, and to make it more sure, asked brother Joseph to inquire of the Lord as to the propriety of the move. He did so, and received answer to this effect,—that if we were all agreed, we could go clear that evening; and if we would ask we should have a testimony for ourselves. I immediately asked, and had not more than asked until I received as clear a testimeny as ever I did of anything in my life, that it was true. Brother Hyrum Smith and Caleb Baldwin bore testimony to the same; but Lyman Wight said we might go if we choose, but he would not. After talking with him for some time, he said, "if we would wait until the next day he would go with us." Without thinking we had no promise of success on any other day than the one above stated, we agreed to wait.

When the night came the jailor came alone with our supper, threw the door wide open, put our supper on the table, and went to the back part of the room, where a pile of books lay, and went to reading, leaving us between him and the door, thereby giving us every chance to go if we had been ready. As the next day was agreed upon, we made no attempt to go that evening.

When the next evening came the case was very different; the jailor brought a double guard with him, and with them six of our brethren to wit:—Erastus Snow, William D. Huntington, Cyrus Daniels, David Holeman, Alanson Ripley and Watson Barlow. I was afterwards informed that they were sent by the church. The jailor seemed to be badly scared; he had the door locked, and everything made secure. It looked like a bad chance to get away, but we were determined to try it; so when the jailor started out we started too. Brother Hyrum took hold of the door and the rest followed; but before we were able to render him the assistance he needed, the jailor and guard succeeded in closing the door, shutting the brethren in with us, except Cyrus Daniels, who was on the outside.

As soon as the attempt was made inside, he took two of the guard, one under each arm, and ran down the stairs that led to the door, it being on the second story. When he reached the ground they got away from him; and seeing we had failed to get out, he started to run, but put his foot in a hole and fell. Just as he fell a bullet from one of the guard passed very close to his head, and he thinks the fall saved his life.

The scene that followed this defies description. I should judge from the number that all the town and many from the country gathered around the jail, and every mode of torture and death that their imagination could fancy, was proposed for us, such as blowing up the jail, taking us out and whipping us to death, shooting us, burning us to death, tearing us to pieces with horses, &c. But they were so divided among themselves that they could not carry out any of their plans, and we escaped unhurt.

During this time some of the brethren spoke of our being in great danger; and I confess I felt that we were. But brother Joseph told them "not to fear, that not a hair of their heads should be hurt, and that they should not lose any of their things, even to a bridle, saddle, or blanket; that everything should be restored to them; they had offered their lives for us and the gospel; that it was necessary the church should offer a sacrifice, and the Lord accepted the offering."

The brethren had next to undergo a trial, but the excitement was so great they dare not take them out until it abated a little. While they were waiting for their trial some of the brethren employed lawyers to defend them. Brother Snow asked brother Joseph whether he had better employ a lawyer or not. Br. Joseph told him to plead his own cause. But, said brother Snow, I do not understand the law. Brother Joseph asked him if he did not understand justice; he said he thought he did. Well, said brother Joseph, go and plead for justice as hard as you can, and quote Blackstone and other authors now and then, and they would take it all for law.

He did as he was told, and the result was as Joseph had said it would be; for when he got through the lawyers flocked around him and asked him where he had studied law, and said they had never heard a better plea. When the trial was over brother Snow was discharged, and all the rest held to bail, and allowed to bail each other, by brother Snow going bail with them; and they said they got everything that was taken from them, and nothing was lost, although no two articles were in one place. More anon.

Yours, respectfully,

ALEXANDER McRAE.

WHO ARE THE ROBBERS ON THE PLAINS?

Three weeks ago, when we published the first announcement of the Salt Lake mail, we suggested whether white men might not have been concerned with the Indians in the affair. This query arose in our minds from the statement that the mail bags were rifled and letters torn open, a thing unusual for Indians. Subsequently, however, this statement was found incorrect. When the bags were ripped open and found to contain letters and papers only, these were left undisturbed by the robbers, and were gathered up and forwarded to the States in good order. The Independence Agrarian, however, assigns other reasons for suspecting that at least four white men were engaged in the attack, and suggests that it might have been men from Salt Lake, who, knowing that the party had a large amount of money, had enlisted the disaffected Sioux to join them for puposes of plunder.

As the Agrarian's article has been noticed by some of the city papers this week in a manner calculated to reflect somewhat on the people of Salt Lake, we have also thought proper to refer to it, chiefly to show how ready the public are to judge wrongfully, and saddle upon the Mormons, without a reason, the crimes of other people. We speak knowingly when we say that the people of Salt Lake have had no trade or intercourse whatever with Indians this side of the Rocky Mountains, but on the contrary the old mountaineers—French and American traders—have during the last two or three years dotted the entire line of travel from the South Pass to 70 miles this side of Laramie with their trading posts. Nearly all these men have squaws for wives and other Indians around them, and carry on a trade with the Indians, and fleece the emigrants. They made their remittances chiefly in October and November, and they would, moreover, readily recognize Mr. Kinkead. Why, then, in the face of these well known facts, does suspicion leap over all these questionable characters to attach itself to the people of Salt Lake? Is it because the latter believe in Mormonism?

Whether there may be characters lurking about Salt Lake capable of every species of crime, we shall not now stop to discuss; but will only add that if so, the sooner such characters are pickled down in the Salt Lake the better 'twill be for them and us too.

Willing, however, to exonerate even the worst of men from ill-founded suspicions, we feel disposed seriously to question the soundness of the Agrarian's reasons. Among the principal reasons for believing that whites were engaged in the attack, are the fatal precision of the rifle shots, and the fact that the slain were not scalped. Now these are precisely the same reasons urged one year ago, by the St. Louis Intelligencer and other papers, for trying to fasten upon the Mormons the massacre of Capt. Gunnison and party, and not until the official returns of his fellow officers were published, did these specious reasons find a grave.

It is customary, we admit, with Indians, in their warfare with each other, to bear off the scalp, but in all the whites they have killed in Utah since its settlement, we have never heard of but one or two being scalped.

There are also bands of Utahs, Snakes and Sioux who have as good rifles and are as good shots as are often found among the whites.

DEATH FROM FRIGHT.—Mrs. Mack, a widow woman living near the corner of Pine and 16th sts., died suddenly a few nights ago, it is supposed from fright caused by the entrance of a burglar into her dwelling. Hearing him passing about through the house she beeame so much frightened that she screamed and fainted. The burglar then fled, and several neighbors arriving to the assistance, found her helpless, and immediately summoned a physician. She expired, however, in a few moments, from the excessive fright caused by the presence of the burglar.

MARRIED—In this city on the 24th inst., by Elder Milo Andrus, Mr. WILLIAM BROWN, son of Henry and Sarah Brown, late of England, to Miss MARIAN BLANCHARD, daughter of James and Maria Blanchard, late of Ogbourn, St. George Wiltshire, England.

In connection with the above we beg leave to state that we were present and shared the festivities of the occasion, and feel much pleasure in assuring the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Brown that everything was done up brown on that occasion; and we sincerely hope that the products of this union may be as numerous and happy as were the guests.

WOLFISH.—The Iowa Capital Reporter has the following savage paragraph:

A great number of these animals are infesting the county of Muscatine, cultivating acquaintances with hogs, sheep, children, calves, &c., in an exceedingly sociable degree of loosness.

Correspondence of the Luminary.

For the Luminary.

DEAR BRO. SNOW:—The first, second, and third numbers of the "Luminary" have come to hand, and your subscribers here are all well pleased with its appearance, and the subject matter which it contains. It cannot fail to be a powerful auxiliary in speaking the truth, and I trust it will meet with that effectual support it so richly deserves.

This new movement—the establishment of Stakes of Zion in the different States—will be an important epoch in the history of Mormonism. The publication of the "Luminary," and other kindred vehicles of light and truth, will be the means of introducing the great work of the last days to the notice of many, who would not go out to hear public preaching.

During my present visit to the States, I have discovered less honesty among professing Christians, than at any former time. Religion seems to be no longer a matter of conscience, but of convenience. Infidelity is fast obtaining, among all classes.—Men with sanctimonious faces, and elongated hypocritical countenances, who still keep up their family altar and say grace over their meals, unhesitatingly and unblushingly confess their unbelief in the Scriptures; and downright skepticism is manifested in all their sayings and arguments. Mammon is the popular god of the day, and the masses zealously worship at his glittering shrine. Religion, conscience, reputation, and all that is lovely or desirable, are sacrificed on his crowded altars, by the blind devotees of the golden god. Disunion, and consequent confusion, have crept into the various churches, and the demon Distrust has reared his frightful head in all their organizations. Confidence and brotherly love have been banished from society; and deprived of these substantial props, the superstructure begins to totter and fall. The church-going professor seeks to defraud his Christian neighbor. The devout miser rises from his interminable prayer to count again his rusty dollars, wrung with a cruel hand from his half-fed, half-clad, praying brother. Within the shadow of splendid churches, with towering steeples and glittering spires, "where aristocratic fingers proudly point to the rich man's heaven," the widows dying moan, and the orphans cry for bread, are heard unheeded, or drowned by the hypocritical voice of the noisy suppliant as he prays, "Give us this day our daily bread."

"But when he prays, 'Thy kingdom come,'
The kingdom don't appear."

This is indeed a gloomy picture; yet it is a truthful one. The shading is not too deep, or the drapery too dark.

Although the people are slow to believe in the fullness of the gospel—although they fail to see the hand of the Almighty in the latter-day work—yet it requires but little argument to convince the close observing, sober thinking man, that great and important changes are about to transpire. We have no need to hunt up testimony or conjure up evidence, to prove that a momentous crisis in affairs, political and religious, is approaching. We can discover at a glance, that a grand change, fearfully grand and awfully sublime, has already began. Whichever way we turn, we are met with the portentious scowl of the threatening storm. The gathering winds seem to have conspired,

"Refusing to blow a wholesome breeze."

We hear the deep, ominous rumbling, that presage the rushing tornado, or the imminent earthquake. We see the "giant thunder columns" towering on high, and feel the oscillating motion—the low subdued quiver under our feet. Our moral atmosphere is charged with disease and death—the human mind seems to have reached the highest pitch of development—a fearful looking after those things that are coming on the earth is everywhere manifested. Crime is increasing in an accelerated ratio. Disastrous accidents on sea and land, frightfully destructive to human life, are alarmingly frequent; the cholera and other kindred plagues are going forth, scourging the nations, and laying waste hundreds of thousands each succeeding year. All mankind seem quaking and trembling beneath a terrible threatening blow—some fearful impending doom. The kingdoms of Europe present a heterogeneous mass of revolutionary elements; the blood of Protestant, Catholic, and Moslem commingle in sanguinary tide on the plains of the Crimea. China is being convulsed by internal conflicting forces. Africa is in an uneasy, restless sleep. South America is still disturbed by the rise and fall of ephemeral republics. Mexico is suffering from contending factions and reckless adventurers, who are anxiously waiting for the downfall of their bleeding country, that they, vulture like, may feast upon its remains; and the United States, our own beloved country, the boasted land of security, trembles to its very foundation.

Unhappy thought! The land of Washington, the blood-bought heritage of our fathers, is doomed to be overwhelmed in the general destruction. A local disease—a moral pestilence, is preying upon the vitals of our cherished moral republic. The plague spot has been communicated by the corruption of our rulers, legislators, and judges. Had we maintained inviolate those heaven-born blessings, bequeathed to us by our forefathers, our country might have escaped uninfected. It is now too late to apply an effectual remedy. Already do we see the war-clouds, heavy and murky, looming up above our political horizon. The arm of retribution is extended, and cannot be stayed.

That we are on the eve of a general revolution and universal transition, is as plainly felt, as the sultry, oppressive atmosphere that precedes the raging tempest. But what are the times and seasons? What is to be the result of the coming strife? Will it be fraught with good or evil? To a world lying in darkness, all is uncertainty and doubt. But to the saints of God, whose minds are enlightened by the spirit of truth, all is as clear as the noon-day sun. They understand that the predictions of the prophets, relating to this generation, are being fulfilled. The nations of the earth are ripe in iniquity—the fullness of the Gentiles has come in—an angel has descended from the courts of glory, restoring the long lost Holy Priesthood, and revealing the Book of Mormon. The inspired writers of this sacred volume, gazing into the mirror of eternal truth, have predicted the very events that are now transpiring—the ushering in of the dispensation of the fullness of times—the restoration of the gospel, preparatory to the second coming of the Messiah—its rejection by the Gentiles—the general wickedness of the nations—the sword of retribution, wielded by the avenging hand of the Almighty—famine, pestilence, wars and rumors of wars—the general wreck of nations, kingdoms, and man-made governments, and and the establishment of an universal theocracy thereon.

The ushering in of this new era has not been without opposition. The birth of the "man-child" has not been a pangless one. This cherished hope of the saints—the darling of ages, has been baptized in the blood of Joseph the seer, and consecrated by the tears and groans, pain and suffering, of the persecuted saints.

Since the introduction of the gospel, the cause of truth has steadily progressed. A quarter of a century has not yet elapsed since the Church of Christ was organized with only six members, and now three hundred thousand souls rejoice in the liberty of the gospel. The servants of God have went boldly forth, warning the nations, and calling all people to repent, from the king on his throne to the beggar in the street. Our missionaries have carried the warning voice to the shivering tenant of the frozen zones—to the benighted sons of Africa—the red-skinned denizens of our western wilds—the South Sea cannibol and the idol worshiping Hindoo; not forgetting the mercenary priest and bigoted sectarian of our more enlightened countries.

The saints of God, after having encountered a series of bloody persecutions, waged against them by wicked and ungodly mobs, instigated by the ignorant prejudices of Christian editors, and led on to their murderous work by sanctimonious divines, are now enjoying at least a temporary repose, in the peaceful vallies of the Great Basin. An ensign to the natives is raised in the tops of the mountains. The oracles of God are planted there, forming a nucleus around which will gather the pure in heart, from all the nations of the earth.

Your bro. in the new covenant,
CHARLES H. BASSETT.

For the Luminary.

BR. SNOW:—For near three weeks I have been confined at home by sickness, and am, in consequence, behind the times in the way of news. The first and second numbers of your paper have been received, and are considered excellent specimens of typographical skill and editorial talent. It is just the kind of paper that is needed, and bids fair to be an able exponent of Mormon rights and liberties, of liberal principles and republican institutions. You say truly that our cause has too long suffered the maledictions of its opponents without a medium of defense being established in the States. Misrepresentation, slander and abuse have been heaped upon those intrepid pioneers who forced their way through the dangers of a new region, where hosts of savages pant for the lives of the pale face, and who have [illegible] in a portion of God's fair earth where no other community would have ventured. It is time the truth was told with regard to that loyal, patriotic and persecuted people. They have carried the stars and stripes to the highest altitude upon this continent, and there their cannon thunders the voice of American freedom. In their stead the smoky wigwam and the yell of savages would have been all that this day could have been discovered by the adventurous mountaineer but for the unconquerable spirit and energy of that noble band of Mormon adherents. Have they suffered all this hardship, and done so much to extend the area of freedom to be paid by ingratitude, and ilently suffer their loftiest aims, their purest motives, and best desires for the good of our race, to be misrepresented and impugned? No; let the press be the "fulcrum and lever" that shall move our cause and beat back the tide of lying slander which evil designers seek to roll upon the founders and people of the colony of Utah. They will soon be numerous enough to enter the galaxy of States and swell the number of stars upon the national banner. Let them come along with Oregon, New Mexico, Washington, Minnesota and Nebraska. Open wide the gate for all the sons of freedom, even if we should have to annex Canada, Cuba, and the Sandwich Islands. That is the talk for liberal minds.

Respectfully, L. O. LITTLEFIELD.

ARRIVAL OF THE AMERICA.

SEBASTOPOL NOT TAKEN.

HIGHLANDS, Dec. 22—2 P. M.

The mail steamer America, from Liverpool on the 9th, has arrived here, en route for Boston.

Her advices are ten days later than those brought by the Pacific, and though devoid of anything exciting from the seat of war, are of the utmost importance, inasmuch as it states that most important negotiations were in progress, and that Austria had signed a treaty with England and France.

Nothing of consequence has been done before Sebastopol.

Flour declined one-eighth. Market quiet, and demand moderate at previous rates. Western Canal, 41s. 6d.; straight Baltimore, 43s.a43s. 6d.; good Ohio, 44s.a45s.; wheat declined 1d. Consols 93 1-2.

The Sarah Sands sailed from Liverpool on the 5th, and the Washington from Southampton on the 6th.

The latter had 100 passengers and a cargo valued at £600,000.

There is no news of importance from the seat of war. Frequent sorties are recorded, and the Russians were generally repulsed without much loss on either side. The Allies were continually receiving reinforcements, and mainly engaged in strengthening their positions.

The chief interest is centered in the negotiations, which had become complicated and of vast importance.

A treaty of alliance between Austria, France and England was signed at Vienna, binding, it is supposed, Austria to declare war against Russia within one month, and guaranteeing her to support her against invasion and insurrection. Austria calls on the Germanic States to support her with federal troops, but Russian influences are at work in opposition to her.

Commercial letters assert that Austria entered into the treaty unwillingly, but consented to it in preference to breaking entirely with the Western Powers.

Nesselrode has published a letter defining the four terms on which Russia will accept peace, viz: A joint protectorate of the five powers over the Christians in Turkey; a like protectorate over the principalities subject to existing Russian treaties; the revision of the treaty of 1841, to which Russia will assent if the Sultan will; the free navigation of the Danube.

Prussia and all the Germanic States were hastily putting all their armies on a war footing.

Omer Pacha is about to embark for the Crimea.

Admiral Hamelin had resigned the command of the French squadron in the Black Sea, and retired to France.

The remainder of the French troops in Greece had been ordered to the Crimea.

A proposition is to be submitted to Parliament augmenting the British army to the extent of 300,000 men.

The Spanish Chamber has decided to support the present dynasty. The Ministers resigned upon some trifling financial defeat, but consented to resume office. The latest intelligence, however, is to the effect that the crisis had commenced, and that Espartero had advised the Queen to send for Madagas to form a Cabinet.

Mr. Soule had arrived at Madrid.

The Danish Ministry had resigned.

FURTHER BY THE AMERICA.

Affairs before Sebastopol are unchanged. There has been some fighting, but none of importance. The garrison continues to make sorties. During the night of November 14th, in a hurricane of wind and rain, the Russians made a sortie from the city on the French camp, but were repulsed.

On the 15th, several men and horses died in the camp from cold and exhaustion. The Russians are quiet.

Nov. 16.—Fire very slack. A few redoubts were completed by the British, overlooking the Inkerman road. Some reinforcements reached the French.

Nov. 17.—Men and officers are constructing shelter for the winter. An order has been issued by Lord Raglan that no officer shall leave the camp unless sick or wounded. It rains in torrents.

Nov. 18.—Weather more temperate. Russians in the valley is observed to have received reinforcements—supposed 20,000—under Gen. Liprandi.

Nov. 19.—The French made a reconnoisance in force, and found the Russians repairing their artillery, damaged in the previous battle.

Nov. 20.—The 97th British regiment landed from the Oronco steamer. The Queen of the South arrived with various drafts of British troops. The French landed considerable reinforcements at Kameisch Bay. Firing very brisk from the town, and warmly replied to from the French and British lines.

Nov. 21 to 24.—Bombardment continued; weak on the part of the allies. Their fire did little damage, and that little was constantly repaired. The allies mainly occupied in strengthening their position against attack, and in establishing new batteries, the fire of which has not yet been opened. Menschikoff reports that the English had attempted to establish themselves near the head of the dockyard, but were repulsed with loss. Further reinforcements reached the allies.

Nov. 25.—The Russians made a sortie, but were repulsed by the English, who, in pursuing, took and retained nine guns which the Russians forgot to spike. Another account says two seven-gun redoubts.

On the 26th, part of the garrison attacked the French lines, but retired with the loss of 230. The French lost 75. The defensive works of the English, between the right of their line of attack and Baiaklava, were nearly completed.

Nov. 28.—The following despatch of this date is from Gen. Canrobert: "The rain has ceased, and the weather is improving. Our works will now exhibit fresh activity. Our reinforcements continue to arrive. The enemy still shows no signs of activity, but continues to protect the town by repeated entrenchments. It is stated that several hundred Russian wagons, laden with provisions and ammunition, were overtaken by a snow storm and lost, and that at present there are only provisions in Sebastopol for fourteen weeks."

LATE FROM CALIFORNIA.

NEW YORK, December 26.—The steamship Geo. Law has arrived with California dates to the 12th. News unimportant. Miners were greatly in want of water.

A writ of habeas corpus had been issued for the Russian prisoners on board the ship Sitka, at San Francisco. Markets dull.

The news is generally unimportant. Seven hundred dollars of the treasure lost on the Yankee Blade have been recovered by divers. An application was made to the Judge of the 12th district for a writ of habeas corpus to discharge the Russian prisoners on board the the Sitka. The point insisted on by the counsel in making application seemed to be, that the prisoners could not be retained on board the Sitka, as she was a merchant vessel, and had come here from an eastern port. The Sitka was a Russian vessel, captured and brought to San Francisco by her captors from the action of Petropaulorski, having remained a few days at Vancouver's Island. The first application created considerable excitement.—The writ was served by a deputy sheriff on an officer second in command of the Sitka. Eight prisoners were to have been brought out on Monday, but on Sunday, the 26th, she hoisted anchor, got under way, and left the harbor, probably for Vancouver.

The mines continue to yield abundantly, and it is believed the yield will exceed that of any previous year. An immense piece of gold was taken out by a company of five men in Calaveros county, weighing 160 1-2 pounds, and valued at $38,916. Platinum is found in considerable quantities on the north fork of the Trinity river, and is attracting much attention.

It is stated that a new route has been discovered to Salt Lake well supplied with water and grass, and 300 miles shorter than the Humboldt route. Advices from Portland, Oregon, state that a line of telegraph is about to be built from that place to Salem and Valparaiso.

INDEPENDENCE, December 28.—Santa Fe mail received here on Sunday, bringing little news of interest. Business is quite dull throughout the Territory. The Indians are pretty quiet, but it is expected that the troops will be called out against the Apaches, unless they cease their depredations. Many of them have left the Raton Mountains and gone to Red River canyon. The Navajos brought in the Indian who lately killed a soldier, to Fort Defiance, and delivered him up; he was hung at the Fort for his offence.

The Governor and General were expected back from their trip to Mesilla Valley. Reliable news had reached Santa Fe of an attack having been made on the Southern mail, but no injury sustained from it. One or two Indians were killed.

Bishop Lamy had arrived safely, having lost one of his deacons at Fort Union from sickness contracted on the plains. His party were escorted into the city by a large company of civilians and military, and great parade by firing cannon and all that.

Our place is unusually lively to-day, with delightful weather.

Miscellaneous.

THE LATTER-DAY SAINTS TEA PARTY.
Held in the Fourth Street Church, St. Louis, December 25th, 1854.

Pursuant to announcement the Latter-day Saints met as above to enjoy a merry Christmas day; and from the unanimous good feeling that prevailed—the legitimate result of the spirit of God in our midst—we can verily say, we had a happy Christmas day.

At half past two o'clock P. M., the meeting was opened by the choir singing—"We are the true sons of Zion." Prayer was then offered up by Elder Gardner.

Anthem from the choir—"And it shall come to pass in the last days." After which President Andrus arose and spoke as follows:

I wish to make a few introductory remarks to the proceedings of this day. I commence by wishing my brethren and sisters and my associate friends a happy and merry Christmas; and I prophecy on the the back of that—for I am prophet enough to do that—if you will observe the rules of order your joy and happiness shall be complete, and you shall have one of the choicest Christmas gifts that can be bestowed upon mortals—a gift above that which man can give: it is the gift of the Holy Spirit. A greater portion of this spirit is held in reserve for this people when they know more what they are about, and learn better the results of their doings.

To us there is no difference, as far as names are concerned, whether we call this gathering a social, religious, or political meeting; for every desire and every pure action, and indeed everything that produces pure happiness, is embraced in our religion; and the Almighty is willing we should enjoy it in its fullness. For this purpose we have met together, and our enjoyment will be according to our understanding of righteous enjoyment. Our religion embraces every truth and every good principle in heaven and on earth. If there are any heavenly songs on earth they belong to us. If there is anything that gladdens the eye, is agreeable to the taste, pleasant to the smell, or in any way gratifying righteously, it belongs to us; for the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and we are His sons and daughters if we keep His commandments; and the preventative against us receiving more of our Father's blessing than we do receive, is the lack of wisdom. May this day, with its variety, serve to teach us wisdom; and may we draw, like the honey bee, that which is choice, and sweet, and ennobling, from every available source, while in mortality. I wish you to enjoy yourselves to-day and at all times, and the more we mingle together and introduce amusements and joys of our own making, the better; they will bring us nearer that lasting joy and consolation we shall have when the earth is reorganized—when the poor, the meek, and contrite shall inherit the earth; when those who have borne everything for Jesus' sake—who for this inheritance have forsaken the tombs of their fathers, shall partake of a full reward.

The kingdom of God in its onward course will embrace every good; and the only danger of us not partaking of its blessing—of not being a guest at the feast of the bridegroom—is our non-observance of the instructions we receive, and a willful walking in darkness. But every lover of truth who cleaves unto the Lord has hope, and the glorious privilege of receiving truth and light that will lead him to the fountain of light, and to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

I congratulate you as members of the royal family of heaven—as heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ; but before you receive your inheritance you have to undergo much chiseling and polishing, and you will have need for the oil of consolation and the gift of the holy spirit, to enable you to pass through the ordeal; that you may not crumble nor break, but that you may endure as polished stones, and shine in the superstructure, the greatness and glory of which shall attract the attention and command the admiration of kings and emperors. So great shall be the magnificence of Zion, that they will be constrained to bring their gold, silver and precious stones to beautify her temples, courts and palaces.

I wish you to feel happy and cheerful to-day which is the very opposite spirit to that which reigns in the religious and fashionable world, which is a spirit of restraint, bondage, and misery. To meet in their several societies would be to me a perfect hell.

I want everything to be done here in a spirit of freedom and good feeling: the music and singing, and all that is done, tend to rejoice the heart, animate the spirit, and happify ever person in this assembly. If there is anything contrary or opposed to this, I hope it will be overruled, restrained and banished, that the spirit of peace may reign uninterruptedly among us. Amen.

The songs, recitations, &c., were delivered in the following order. Permit us to say that all went off most admirably, each person engaged acquitting himself with credit, and the smiling faces and the enthusiastic cheering told how fully the auditors appreciated the efforts of the performers.

Quartette by Mrs. Hutchins and Howard, and Messrs. Clegg and Hart.

Cain's Soliloquy, by J. Barker.

Song—"A mighty man is Brigham Young;" by J. H. Hart.

Recitation, by Mrs. Brown.

Song—"Here's in Memory of Joseph;" by Geo. Knowlden.

Anthem—"The Earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof;" by the choir.

Recitation—Cassius instigating Brutus against Cæsar; by S. J. Lees.

Song—"In Deseret we're free." By George Gardner.

A marriage had been announced to come off at this stage of the entertainment. Elder Andrus therefore arose and delivered a short address upon the institution of marriage, and solemnized the marriage of two couple, which were pathetically blessed by the President, and enthusiastically cheered by the assembly.

Elder Snow then blessed the congregation, when the meeting was adjourned for fifteen minutes, during which time the active waiters were making preparations to serve up the tea.

At half-past five o'clock the house was again called to order, and a blessing was asked by Elder Snow. During the tea a general chit-chat was indulged, occasionally broken by the melodious strains of music from the melodion, by Mr. J. Seal.

There was not fewer than six hundred persons present. Notwithstanding this large number, there was nothing to disturb and annoy during the day; but every countenance bespoke joy and satisfaction.

The meeting being called to order, a deputation from the choir took advantage of the moment by advancing to the presidencial seat, and presented Elder Erastus Snow a gold pen and pencil case, in behalf of the brethren of the choir, as a Christmas present, intended as a slight expression of good feeling, affection, and confidence. A document was read by the deputation expressive of the same, to which Elder Snow replied as follows:

DEAR BRETHREN: In justice to my own feelings, I beg to express to you, and through you to the choir which you represent, my grateful acknowledgments of this token of your confidence and esteem, which I shall ever prize, not for its own intrinsic value, but as a token of the spontaneous feelings of your hearts which accompany this presentation. And I most heartily join in your prayer that I may ever be enabled to wield it in defense of truth and virtue, the universal rights of man, and of the kingdom of God on the earth.

Permit me further to say, that if my brethren of the choir, or the saints in general, have been blessed and benefitted by my labors in their midst—if I have taught them correct principles of government, by which they have been strengthened in the Lord and encouraged to go forward in his service—I have but fulfilled my duty, and to God alone belongs the honor and praise; for it is through His spirit I have been enabled to do all I have done.

My heart is full of blessings upon my brethren and sisters of the choir; and I pray that they may increase in proficiency in their holy art, and with their holy strains of heavenly music make glad the hearts of the Saints, angels, and the Gods. Amen.

Three sisters, acting as a deputation for the female portion of the choir, presented Elder Milo Andrus with a silver guard and gold seal. The fair deputation, among other things, expressed their hope that the recipient might be guarded in the path of duty by the Lord, and aided by the power of the Most High to guard the interests of his people, and to bring to pass a great amount of good among the children of men.

Elder Andrus answered as follows: I receive this token of friendship from my sisters of the choir with a heart full of gratitude towards them and my heavenly Father; and I sincerely and most heartily subscribe to that portion of their address that expresses a hope that I may ever be a guardian of the interest and welfare of the sisters as well as of the brethren.

I repeat that which has been already said, if I have accomplished any good among you it is attributable to the Almighty, for of myself I am nothing, and can do nothing; unto God, therefore, be all honor and glory.

Your token of respect I will wear as long as I live; and I hope that as it brightens by wearing, my mind may brighten by intelligence for ever and ever. Amen.

Toasts were then read by S. J. Lees, from which we select the following:

President Snow. When the winter is past, may the Lord continue "Snow" in our midst. Allen T. Riley.

Milo Andrus, President of the Stake. A champion of truth and defender of the faith. May his word be the word of the Lord, and his counsel an end of controversy. G. Gardner.

Mormonism. May it, like the air, run through and encircle the universe. S. J. Lees.

The President of this Stake. May he drive it so deep, and pack the saints around it so close, that the combined forces of earth and hell may never pull it up. A. L. Siler.

President E. Snow. Mild when the sunshine of truth is on the countenances of the saints, but will come down with a storm of hail and "Snow" on the transgressors of Israel. M. Andrews.

To the King, the anniversary of whose birth-day we commemorate. May He soon return to the earth and enjoy with the merry Mormons, and all true-hearted saints, a merry Christmas and a happy New Year. J. H. Hart.

When the St. Louis asses bray, may a Snow-storm swiftly overtake and smother them. J. H. Hart.

Comic Song—"The Comical way to Heaven;" by G. Knowlden.

Comic, by E. J. Clegg, Sen.

Song—"The Merry Mormons;" by E. Snow.

Recitation—"The days of tyranny and wrong are not forever;" by G. Knowlden.

Anthem, by the choir.

President Snow then arose and said:

Dear Brethren—Judging from my own feelings, I consider it would be best soon to bring our meeting to a close. We have had a good time, and I am well satisfied with all the performances of the day. The members of the choir have acquitted themselves admirably to-day, and have added considerably to our entertainment; the thanks of the congregation are due them.

Perhaps we have here some over-fastidious persons, who are still coated over with the superstitions of their fathers, who may think we have gone to extremes in some of our entertainments, in a house dedicated to the Lord, and on Christmas day. In justice to my feelings and the performers, I ask such persons to point out anything in word or act that has been sinful before God or pure-minded people on earth or in heaven, that has been committed here to-day. If any have sinned in their thoughts, it is between them and their God. I feel we have had an opportunity of being edified, instructed, cheered, comforted, and our souls made to rejoice together in all innocency and purity before God and each other. I feel to say that we have rejoiced together this day in all purity of heart as his faithful children.

I have another subject I wish my brethren and sisters to consider, that is, whether our recreations and amusements should not be considered a part of our religion, and opened at all times by prayer as our other religious services, that when we make merry in our hearts it may be unto the Lord. Is not this festival a part of our religion, and should it not be dedicated unto our God, and be guided and directed by His priesthood?

You will perceive that this day's enjoyment has been so arranged. It has been under the counsel of those over you in the Lord. Brethren and sisters you have our blessings. And I feel to call down the blessings of the Almighty upon this congregation, and to say, go your way in peace, let your souls magnify the Lord, lift up your heads and rejoice. My heart is full of blessings towards you, because you have listened to the commands of your brethren, and you have rationally and innocently enjoyed yourselves.

In the valleys of the mountains we are trying all the time to attain to a higher state of morality and purity, that the Lord may be sanctified in our hearts, in our merry makings, and on all other occasions, being under the guidance and direction of those set over us in the Lord.

Permit me to say to all, both old and young, from this time forward in all your amusements, seek counsel of those set over you, and either they will preside over you themselves or appoint some one for that purpose who will take the oversight and charge, and he will see that nothing transpire that would offend God or create an ill-feeling in the midst of the Saints. This is how we do in the valley. Do you feel, dear brethren and sisters, that this is right? and are you willing to follow in the same course? You have the experience of this day: are you satisfied? I feel that you are. I will make a motion: I propose that we, the Saints in this city, will in all our re-unions for amusement, first seek the advice, counsel and approbation of those over us, and receive them as Presidents on such occasions, or those whom they may send. The motion was seconded and carried unanimously.

E. Snow continued: I feel by this course you will retain the spirit of the Lord, and His blessing will abide upon you.

There are a great many habits and customs that we have been accustomed to from our childhood, which our fathers have indulged in, which are after the manner of the Gentiles; we wish to attain to something nobler. We do not despise anything the Gentiles possess that is good, but we wish to separate ourselves from everything impure, and aspire to something that will dignify and exalt us in the kingdom of our God.

If in the future any of you get up a party, and invite me there, I shall expect you have the approbation of those over you in the Lord, and that there is a man of God to preside there, who will know what is to come off before I go there. I do not want to be invited to a party without knowing who is to preside, and what are to be the proceedings.

May we grow stronger in faith, and may we live in union as children of God, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Elder Andrus expressed his satisfaction with the proceedings of the day, and proposed a vote of thanks to the choir, also to Elder Harris, the marshal of the day.

Elder Snow blessed the congregation, after which the Saints retired quietly to their homes, about half past 9 o'clock, having spent the day joyous to themselves, and in all things agreeable to the Lord and his servants. S. J. LEES, Reporter.

AN EARTHQUAKE.—The Exeter (N. H.) News Letter states that at about one o'clock on Monday morning, a smart shock of an earthquake was experienced in that town. It says that "the motion of the earth was quite perceptible, and its action upon furniture and loose windows and doors, was anything but agreeable to weak nerves The noise attending, was like that of the swift approach of a heavy carriage on frozen ground, but when the shock appeared to be immediately beneath, it was much heavier.—The Portsmouth Chronical states that the shock of the earthquake was also felt in that city, in Greenland, and other of the surrounding towns."

At this time I taught the brethren at considerable length, on the following subjects:

FAITH comes by hearing the word of God thro' the testimony of the servants of God; that testimony is always attended by the Spirit of Prophecy and Revelation.

REPENTANCE is a thing that cannot be trifled with every day. Daily transgression and stailly repentance is not that which is pleasing in the sight of God.

BAPTISM is a holy ordinance preparatory to the reception of the Holy Ghost; it is the channel and key by which the Holy Ghost will be administered.

The gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, cannot be received through the medium of any other principle than the principle of righteousness; for if the proposals are not complied with, it is of no use, but withdraws.

TONGUES were given for the purpose of preaching among those whose language is not understood, as on the day of Pentecost, etc.; and it is not necessary for tongues to be taught in the church particularly: for any man that has the Holy Ghost, can speak of the things of God in his own tongue as well as to speak in another; for faith comes not by signs, but by hearing the word of God.

The doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment, are necessary to preach among the first principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The doctrine of election—St. Paul exhorts us to make our calling and election sure. This is that sealing power spoken of by Paul in other places—(see Ephesians, 1st chapter, 13–14 verses) "In whom ye also trusted that, after ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation, in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory, that we may be sealed up to the day of redemption." This principle ought (in its proper place) to be taught; for God hath not revealed anything to Joseph, but what he will make known unto the Twelve, and even the least saint may know all things as fast as he is able to bear them; for the day must come when no man need say to his neighbor, know ye the Lord, for all shall know him (who remain) from the least to the greatest. How is this to be done? It is to be done by this sealing power, and the other comforter spoken of, which will be manifest by revelation. There are two comforters spoken of. One is the Holy Ghost, the same as given on the day of Pentecost, and that all saints receive after faith, repentance, and baptism. The first comforter, or Holy Ghost, has no other effect than pure intelligence. It is more powerful in expanding the mind, enlightening the understanding, and storing the intellect with present knowledge, of a man who is the literal seed of Abraham, than one that is a Gentile, though it may not have half as much visible effect upon the body; for as the Holy Ghost falls upon one of the literal seed of Abraham, it is calm and serene, and his whole soul and body are only exercised by the pure spirit of intelligence: while the effect of the Holy Ghost upon a Gentile, is to purge out the old blood, and make him actually of the seed of Abraham. That man that has none of the seed of Abraham, (naturally) must have a new creation by the Holy Ghost. In such a case, there may be more of a powerful effect upon the body, and visible to the eye, than upon an Israelite, while the Israelite at first might be far before the Gentile in pure intelligence.

The other comforter spoken of, is a subject of great interest, and perhaps understood by few of this generation. After a person hath faith in Christ, repents of his sins, and is baptized for the remission of his sins, and receives the Holy Ghost, (by the laying on of hands) which is the first comforter, then let him continue to humble himself before God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and living by every word of God, and the Lord will soon say unto him, Son, thou shalt be exalted, etc. When the Lord has thoroughly proved him, and finds that the man is determined to serve him at all hazards, the man will find his calling and election made sure; then it will be his privilege to receive the other comforter which the Lord hath promised the saints, as is recorded in the testimony of St. John, in the XIV chapter, from the 12th to the 27th verses.

Note the 16, 17, 18, 21, 23, verses—(16th v.) "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever, (17) even the Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you; (18) I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you. (21) He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. (23) If a man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him."

Now, what is this other comforter? It is no more or less than the Lord Jesus Christ himself; and this is the sum and substance of the whole matter—that when any man obtains this last comforter, he will have the personage of Jesus Christ to attend him, or appear unto him from time to time, and even he will manifest the Father unto him, and they will take up their abode with him, and the visions of heaven will be opened unto him, and the Lord will teach him face to face, and he may have a perfect knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom of God; and this is the state and place the ancient saints arrived at, when they had such glorious visions—Isaiah, Ezekiel, John upon the Isle of Patmos, St. Paul in the three heavens, and all the saints who congregated with the general assembly and Church of the First Born, &c.

The Spirit of Revelation is in connexion with these blessings. A person may profit by noticing the first intimations of the Spirit of Revelation; for instance, when you feel pure intelligence unto you, it may give you sudden strokes of ideas, that by noticing it, you may find it fulfilled the same day, or soon; (i. e.) those things that were presented unto your minds by the Spirit of God, will come to pass; and thus by learning the Spirit of God and understanding it, you may grow into the principle of Revelation, until you become perfect in Christ Jesus.

An Evangelist is a Patriarch, even the oldest man of the blood of Joseph or of the seed of Abraham. Wherever the Church of Christ is established in the earth, there should be a Patriarch for the benefit of the saints, as it was with Jacob in giving his patriarchal blessing unto his sons, &c.

Instructions for the Twelve and Others, July, 2d, 1849.

Afternoon—went with the Twelve and some of the Seventies, who are about to proceed on their mission to Europe, and the nations of the earth, and the islands of the sea.

The meeting was opened by singing and prayer; after which the Presidency proceeded to bless two of the Twelve who had lately been ordained into that Quorum; namely, Wilford Woodruff and George A. Smith, and one of the Seventies, namely, Theodore Turley, after which blessings were also pronounced by them on the heads of the wives of some of those about to go abroad.

The meeting was then addressed by President Hyrum Smith, by way of advice to the Twelve, &c., chiefly concerning the nature of their mission; their practicing prudence and humility in their plans or subjects for preaching; the necessity of their not trifling with their office, and of holding on strictly to the importance of their mission, and the authority of the Priesthood. I then addressed them and gave much instruction calculated to guard them against self-sufficiency, self-righteousness, and self-importance; touching upon many subjects valuable to all who wish to walk humbly before the Lord, but especially teaching them to observe charity, wisdom, and fellow feeling, with love one towards another in all things, and under all circumstances, in substance as follows:

Ever keep in exercise the principle of mercy, and be ready to forgive our brother on the first intimations of repentance, and asking our forgiveness; and should we even forgive our brother, or even our enemy, before they repent or ask for forgiveness, our Heavenly Father would be equally as merciful unto us.

Again: Let the Twelve and all saints be willing to confess all their sins, and not keep back a part; and let the Twelve be humble and not be exalted, and beware of pride, and not seek to excel one above another, but act for each other's good, and pray for one and another, and honor our brother, or make honorable mention of his name, and not backbite and devour our brother. Why will not man learn wisdom by precept, at this late age of the world, when we have such a cloud of witnesses and examples before us, and not be obliged by sad experience everything we know? Must the new ones that are chosen to fill the places of those that are fallen, of the Qourum of the Twelve, begin to exalt themselves, until they exalt themselves so high that they will soon tumble over and have a great fall, and go wallowing through the mud and mire and darkness, Judas like, to the buffetings of Satan, as several of the Quorum have done, or will they learn wisdom and be wise? (O, God! give them wisdom, and keep them humble, I pray.)

When the Twelve, or any other witnesses, stand before the congregations of the earth, and they preach in the power and demonstration of the Spirit of God, and the people are astonished and confounded at the doctrine, and say that a man has preached a powerful discourse, a great sermon, then let that man, or those men, take care that they do not ascribe the glory unto themselves, but be careful that they are humble, and ascribe the praise and glory to God and the Lamb; for it is by the power of the Holy Priesthood and Holy Ghost they have power thus to speak. What art thou, O man, but dust?—And from whom dost thou receive all power and all blessings, but from God?

Then, O ye Twelve! notice this key, and be wise, for Christ's sake, and your own souls' sake. Ye are not sent out to be taught, but to teach. Let every word be seasoned with grace. Be vigilant; be sober. It is a day of warning, and not of many works. Act honest before God and man. Beware of Gentile sophistry; such as bowing and scraping unto men in whom ye have no confidence. Be honest, open, and frank in all your intercourse with mankind.

O, ye Twelve! and all saints! profit by this important key—that in all your trials, troubles, temptations, afflictions, bonds, imprisonments and death; see to it, that you do not betray Heaven; that you do not betray your brethren; that you do not betray the Revelations of God: whether in the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants, or any other that ever was or ever will be given and revealed unto man in this world or that which is to come.—Yea, in all your kicking and floundering, see to it that you do not this thing, lest innocent blood be found in your skirts, and you go down to hell. All other sins are not to be compared to sinning against the Holy Ghost, and proving a traitor to thy brethren.

I will give one of the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom. It is an eternal principle, that has existed with God from all eternity:—That man who rises up to condemn others, finding fault with the Church, saying that they are out of the way while he himself is righteous, then know assuredly that that man is in the high road to apostacy; and if he does not repent, will apostatize as God lives. The principle is as correct as the one that Jesus put forth in saying that he who seeketh a sign is an adulterous person; and the priciple is eternal, undeviating, and firm as the pillars of heaven; for whenever you see a man seeking after a sign, you may set it down that he is an adulterous man.

NEW COPPER COIN.—The new one cent pieces will be issued from the Mint in the course of a few days. They are considerably smaller than the old one cent pieces, and form a really beautiful copper coin. On one side is the head of Liberty, and the thirteen stars being omitted, the surface is plain and polished. The reverse is the same design as the old cent, but brighter and much more finished. There is a certain amount of alloy mixed with the copper, and the perfection of the die gives to the coin a finish and elegance that has never heretofore been attained in our copper coinage. The new coin will be universally welcomed as a needed and creditable improvement.—[Phila. Pennsylvanian, 13th.

POSTMASTER GENERAL'S REPORT.

We give this morning the annual report of the Postmaster General. It is a long, ably and carefully prepared document, and cannot fail to excite a feeling of admiration, if not surprise, at its clear exhibit of its successful workings of a postal system without a parallel in the world for simplicity and extent. For the convenience of the reader, we make up the following abstract:

There are 23,548 postoffices in the United States; the annual compensation of 257 of which amount to $1,000 and upwards. During the last year 1,842 offices were established, and 614 discontinued. Number of postmasters appointed during the same time, 8,618. Removals, 1,977. Number of mail routes, 6,697. Number of mail contractors, 5,167. Total annual transportation of mails, 63,387,005 miles, at a cost of $3,630,676; thus, 21,267,604 miles by modes not specified, at 5 cents per mile; 20,890,430 miles by coach, at 6 cents per mile; 15,433,389 miles by railroad, at 12 cents 4 mills per mile; 5,795,493 miles by steamboat, at 8 cents 4 mills per mile. Increase in the transportation during the past year, 2 1-2 per cent.

The expenditures of the department during the past year were $8,577,424.12, and the revenue $6,955,586.22. To the former must be added $133,493.33, balances due foreign offices, which would leave the total deficiency for the year 1854 at $1,755,321.23. The deficiency for the year 1853 was $2,117,078.20—leaving a difference in favor of 1853 of $361,756. The increase in the revenue of 1853, compared with the revenue of 1854, is $970,399.49—or about 19 per cent.

Owing to causes not within the control of the department, the expenses of the current year will greatly exceed those of the past year. They are estimated at $9,841,921.33. This increase will be owing to the additional compensation of postmasters and the enhanced prices demanded by contractors at the last lettings.

A uniform plan of registration is warmly recommended as an additional protection for the safe delivery of letters of value. The want of such a safeguard has long been felt; and as the cost of its maintainance will fall directly upon those who will cheerfully bear the expense, we see no good reason why it should not be incorporated into our postal system as one of its principal features.

During the three years commencing July 1, 1851, $5,707,022.03 postage stamps and stamped envelopes have been issued by the department, of which $5,092,301 were sold.

For the last year the cost of the service on the various United States mail steamship lines and across the isthmus, was as follows: Collins line, twenty-six round trips, $58,000; New York and Bremen, eleven round trips, $183,333.26; New York and Havre, eleven round trips, $137,500; Astoria and Panama, via San Francisco, twenty-four round trips, $348,250; New York and New Orleans to Aspinwall, $298,000; Charleston and Havana, $50,000; New Orleans to Vera Cruz, twenty-four round trips, $37,000; Aspinwall to Panama, $119,727. Total $2,023,010.29.

The service performed by the several lines of ocean mail steamships is treated at large. The Postmaster General is of opinion that the compensation now received is too large, and that the present system is calculated to drive off private competition. He also states that the Nicaragua company have offered to carry a weekly mail between New York and California for the sum of $600,000 per annum, which he thinks is the highest rate of pay which ought to be demanded. The cost this year for a semi-monthly mail, by the isthmus route, is $757,977.60.

Arrangements have been made with the Australia line of monthly packets to convey mails regularly between New York and Australia. The rates on all outgoing matter have been fixed at five cents a letter, two cents each for newspapers, and one cent an ounce for pamphlets and magazines. The rates embrace both the United States inland and sea postage.

The appendix which accompanies the report contains a vast amount of useful information, which will repay the trouble of a careful perusal.—[Washington Union.

A Sad Case.--A Racine Maniac from Spiritualism.

A commission de lunatico inquirendo was instituted at the Nelson House, in this village, on Tuesday last, which resulted in finding Nathan Nathanson, a German pedlar of jewelry, insane.

It appears that, about three weeks ago, he became acquainted with some persons in Fairfield who are believers in the spirit-rapping delusion, and practiced as media. Nathanson witnessed the phenomena of table moving and communications from the dead—affecting to deride it all; in the evening he was observed to be considerbly agitated. He spent the night in the house. Before the morning he aroused the family by cries for help, and exhibited a very strong nervous excitement

From that time he was possessed with the idea that he was a medium—that his arms and hands were moved by supernatural influence—and in three weeks he became a raving maniac, his business prospects, which were flattering, destroyed; his tearnings, which amount to a considerable sum, about to be expended for his support and recovery, and himself doomed, possibly, to the sad life of a confirmed lunatic.—[Mohawk Courier, Dec. 14.

MISSOURI LEGISLATURE.—The Senate was organized on Monday last—the Lieut. Governor presiding; W. D. McCracken Secretary, Mr. Vanover, Assistant; H. H. Baber Engrossing Clerk; Paris Pipkin Enrolling Clerk.

The House met and proceeded to ballot for Speaker; three candidates being put in nomination—Newland, Whig, Barrett, Benton Democrat, Acock, Anti.

On the sixth ballot Newland was elected, receiving 64 votes—20 Benton men voting for him. F. Blair was the first to secede.

Previous to the nomination of officers, the Whigs held a caucus, and adopted a resolution that they would not vote for any opponent of the Nerbraska Bill.

It is said that the Know Knothings are increasing rapidly at Jefferson City, and it is thought that a majority of the members belong to the order. It is believed that when fully organized, they will act in a body, independent of all other parties—the distinctions of whigs and democrats being repudiated.

FRIENDSHIP.

BY JOSEPH SIMPSON.

We're all alike where'er we meet,
Although each face be quite unknown;
As friends we can each other greet—
We claim each other as our own.
The hands firm shake, the kindly smile,
The mellow, genial words that flow,
That pleasing something in our style,
What is it? Ah, the Mormons know.

Some blest are termed for having wealth,
And some are envied for their lore;
Give me kind friends and ample health,
Then blame me if I ask for more.
When sickness, poverty, and death,
At us their angry arrows send,
What cheers our souls with hope and faith?
The voice and kindness of a friend.

Then while we live let pure good will Play in the bosom of each one,
And in our acts be watchful still,
Each evil thought and deed to shun.
And may our friendship greater grow—
Such friendship as shall have no end;
And soon 'twill be where'er we go
We'll meet a brother and a friend.

St. Louis Nov. 10th, 1854.

THE TRUE GENTLEMAN.

BY GOUVERNEUR MORRIS.

'Tis he who every thought and deed
By rule of virtue moves;
Whose generous tongue disdains to speak
The thing his heart disproves.

Who never did a slander forge,
His neighbor's fame to wound;
Nor hearken to a false report
By malice whispered round.

Who vice in all its pomp and power
Can treat with just neglect;
And piety, though clothed in rags,
Religiously respect.

Who to his plighted word and trust
Has very firmly stood;
And though he promise to his loss,
He makes his promise good.

Whose soul in usury disdains
His treasure to employ;
Whom no rewards can ever bribe
The guiltless to destroy.

A MORMONITE'S PLEA FOR POLYGAMY.

We have much pleasure in submitting to our readers the following pithy letter, from the pen of Elder Jacques, to the editor of the Atlas, and published in that paper of Nov. 4, under the above caption:

"To the Editor of the Atlas:

"Sir—I trust you will be sufficiently liberal to allow me to offer a few remarks upon your leader relating to the 'Mormonites,' and published in the Atlas of Oct. 28. Lest I tresspass too much on your space, I will only speak of one portion of your article—that relating to the Latter-day Saints' system of plurality of wives.

"You designate this system 'disgusting,' 'abominable,' 'horrible to think of,' 'irredeemably degrading,' and atrocious.' The Latter-day Saints are 'wretched dupes,' and their system panders to the licentious passions of wicked men.' This may be your opinion, and your denunciations may be very popular, yet I must be allowed to deny, point blank, the justice and truth of your statements. But I do not wish to be misunderstood here. Polygamy, observed according to the law of God, is productive of the greatest amount of social benefit and happiness, individually and nationally. It opens the way for all men and women to fulfill the purpose of their creation, whilst monogamy tends to restrict them. But polygamy, when perverted, is truly a fearful instrument of licentiousness, and individual and national degradation and ruin. Astonishingly accurate results, and works of surpassing artistic beauty, are often accomplished by machinery of extreme delicacy, great complexity, and peculiar susceptibility of injury. So with polygamy. It is a most delicate and complex innstrument, peculiarly susceptible of abuse, but accomplishing the most satisfactory, beneficial and ennobling results when righteously used. The keener the instrument, the deeper it cuts for good or evil, according to its handling. Polygamy is a keen, a mighty instrument for good or evil, as the righteousness or wickedness has the handling of it. But are we all to become Nazarites because a well-set razor may be put to a fatal use? Or are we to travel, in the latter half of the nineteenth century, by pack-horses and rumbling stage-wagons, because of railway accidents? I trow not. We cannot become such 'old fogies.' Neither are the contracted Romish principles of monogamy to hinder the sons of progress in the great work of social reformation and regeneration.

"Defenders of monogamy endeavor to draw a favorite argument against polygamy from the history of the Turks and other Eastern people who marry more than one wife. But this argument only proves what I contend for—that the plurality system, if abused, degrades and ruins the nation. We may with as good grace say that the Christian religion was defective, because Christendom is split up into five hundred jarring sects; or that the republican constitution of the the United States is inimical to liberty, because its principles were trod under foot when the Latter-day Saints were trampled under from Missouri. [illegible] Saints were exterminated [illegible] or banished from Nauvoo, or when Joseph Smith was shot at Carthage under this sentence—'The law won't reach him, but powder and ball shall.' The Turks no more live in the true spirit of righteous polygamy than do the snarling sects of Christendom in the true spirit of Christ, or than did the Missouri and Illinois mobs in the true spirit of the constitution of the United States.

"For the benefit of yourself and readers, I will name a few points wherein polygamy may be abused by the Turks: No man should marry two or more wives without the express sanction of the Almighty, through the Prophet and President of His Church on earth (Brigham Young, at the present time). No man should marry a woman unless her affections be set upon him, and it be her desire to be joined to him in marriage. No man should marry for himself a woman who is legally married or engaged to another man. Every man should love his wives as his own flesh, but not more than he loves to do the righteous will of God. Wicked men should not be allowed more than one wife, if that, for one is more than they deserve.

"In connection with these principles, the seducer and adulterer should receive the penalty of death, and the female decoyed, drugged, or forced for impure or illegal intercourse should be pitied and treated as innocent. These principles are engraved in the hearts of the Latter-day Saints. Did such principles prevail in Turkey, it would be foremost in the rank of nations.

"What is termed 'the great sin of great cities,' but which nevertheless extends its torturous windings and labyrinthal ramifications into every nook and corner of civilization, has long been a most perplexing social problem, and permit me to say, that preachers may anathematize, statesmen may proscribe, editors may stigmatise, orators may denunciate, and the rabble may madly join in the chorus, but the principles held by the Latter-day Saints must reign triumphant in the hearts of the people, or at least in the hearts of those who make and those who execute the law, before the loathsome plague-spot of whoredom, adultery and illegitimacy is banished from the land, or a pure moral air is breathed.

"Setting aside the hourly perpetrated enormities of 'illegal intercourse' in this and other Christian lands, when the undue frequency of even 'legal intercourse' among monogamists is considered, surely nothing can be urged from their platform against the system of Latter-day Saints. Is it not a fact that thousands of civilized and Christian monogamists, lawfully married, live in a far more impure state than a polygamist possibly can? Yea, do not many conscientious monogamists descend where a conscientious polygamist is unable—to a condition below that of the beasts of the field?

"As far as the female (especially) is concerned, then, how in the name of common sense can polygamy be more 'disgusting,' 'abominable,' 'horrible to think of,' 'irredeemably degrading' and 'atrocious' than monogamy is, taking the Latter-day Saints and civilization as the respective exponents of the two systems?

"I have scarcely entered on the threshhold of the subject, but lest I trespass on your space, I forbear further extending my remarks.

"I am yours, &c., JOHN JAQUES."

Comparison between Christian Monogamists and Turkish Polygamists.

At a meeting of the New York Bible Society, on the 27th instant, the Hon. G. P. Marsh, late United States Minister at Constantinople, made the following remarks:

The chairman next called on George P. Marsh, late American Minister at Constantinople, whose address was listened to with the closest interest. He said that he would attempt no oratorial effort—that his remarks would tend to illustrate the social and moral position of Turkey. The countries styled the Levant were inhabited chiefly by Mussulmans, some Jews, and by Christians of the Greek and American sects. All of them stand equally in need of the Bible. There are no legal, but there are practical obstacles to the circulation of the Bible among the latter classes. It was curious to compare the moral status of the Mohammedan with that of the professedly Christian population.

The Mussulman is better than his false religion, the Asiatic Christian is worse than his corrupted creed. The former is in practice respectable, the latter vicious. There is a difference in the character of the races—the one has preserved entire the purity of his faith, the other has corrupted it. As to the Mussulman, the more we examine the subject the more we shall be struck with the close resemblance between the faith of Mohammed and that of the Jews, the points of analogy being very striking. The orthodox Turk recognizes the history and morals of the Old Testament as of divine authenticity and promulgation. Mr. Marsh recited at great length the "call to prayer," a sort of sermon uttered by the muezzins from the minarets of the Mohammedan mosque, as furnishing an excellent epitome of Mohammedan theology, and an equally good illustration of orthodox Judiasm. With the exception "and Mohammed is his prophet," it might pass. He argued that though the ceremonial observances are different yet there is an absolute coincidence in all essential theological positions. There is one particular in which the Mohammedan goes beyond even some classes of Christians, namely, in the entire and absolute acquiescence of mind in God's supposed decrees. The word Moslem signifies resignation, and in like manner Islam imports submission.

IMPORTANT FACTS IN HUMAN LIFE.

The number of languages spoken in the world amounts to 3,064. The inhabitants of the globe profess more than 1,000 different religions. The number of men is about equal to the number of women. The average of human life is about 33 years. One-quarter die previous to the age of 7 years; one-half before reaching 17; and those who pass that, enjoy a felicity refused to one-half the human species. To every 1,000 persons, only one reaches 100 years of life; to every 100, only six each the age of 65; and not more than one in 50 lives to see 70 years. There are on the earth 1,000,000,000 inhabitants, and of these 33,333,333 die every year; 91,324 every day; 3,780 every hour; and 60 every minute, or one every second. These losses are about balanced by an equal number of births. The married are longer lived than the single, and above all, those who observe a sober and industrious conduct. Tall men live longer than short ones. Women have more chances of life in their favor, previous to being fifty years of age than men, but fewer afterwards. The number of marriages is in proportion of seventy-five to every hundred individuals. Marriages are most frequent after the equinoxes—that is, during the month of June and December. Those born in the spring are generaly more robust than others. Births and deaths are more frequent by night than by day. The number of men capable of bearing arms it calculated at one-fourth of the population.

Upwards of forty million gallons of whisky, six and a half million gallons of rum, and one and three quarters million barrels of ale are annualy manufactured in this country, requiring the use of fourteen million dillars' worth of grain, hops and apples.

LAKE CITY.

Utah County, Oct. 12, '54.

Mr. Editor:—A few words by the way of keeping you posted up respecting our settlements, may not be uninteresting. Concerning our place, better known as American Fork, we are getting along very well, having no trouble from the Indians, notwithstanding our close proximity to the spot where the tremendous battle between the Snakes and Utahs, recorded in a late number of the News, took place, which, by the by, as I am on the subject of war, reminds me very much of the Russian war, especially the tremendous efforts made by England and France—quite a hullabaloo, but nobody hurt.

Our city wall is progressing. We had excellent crops of wheat, but oats and corn were severely injured by grasshoppers. Potatoes will be passable. We have secured in this fort about 300 tons of hay. I know of no one crazy concerning merchandise—all believing there will be plenty in market.

We are building a tithing store house, 18 by 22, with a good cellar, and intend having it finished this season. We hold our meetings regularly three times a week. The Seventies are organized under President D. D. Hunt, and hold their meetings regularly once in two weeks. We have had an excellent school for the past two quarters, under the superintendence of sister Cole; we also have a Sabbath school.

Twenty-nine of us take the News, and as many more ought to; for the important intelligence contained therein makes glad the heart of the lover of truth. I am not aware that the gold fever has any footing among us; if there is any, it is almost neutralized by the chills; at the best it is but an ague and fever concern. Yours truly,

L. E. HARRINGTON.

LAME AND LAZY.

A FABLE.

Two beggars, Lame and Lazy, were in want of bread. One leaned on his crutch, the other reclined on his couch.

Lame called on Charity, and humbly asked for a cracker. Instead of a cracker he received a loaf.

Lazy, seeing the gift of Charity, exclaimed, "What, ask a cracker and receive a loaf? Well, I will ask for a loaf."

Lazy now applied to Charity and called for a loaf of bread.

"Your demanding a loaf," said Charity, "proves you are a loafer. You are of that class and character who ask and receive not; you ask amiss."

Lazy, who always found fault, and had rather whine than work, complained of ill treatment, and even accused Charity of a breach of an exceeding great and precious promise. "Ask and you shall receive."

Charity pointed him to a painting in her room, which presented to his vision three personages, Faith, Hope and Charity. Charity appeared larger and fairer than her sisters. He noticed that her right hand held a pot of honey, which fed a bee disabled, having lost its wings. Her left hand was armed with a whip to keep off the drones.

"Don't understand it," said Lazy.

Charity replied, "It means that Charity feeds the lame and flogs the lazy."

Lazy turned to go.

"Stop," said Charity, "instead of coin I will give you council. Do not go and live on your poor mother, for I will send you to a rich ANT."

"Rich aunt," echoed Lazy. "Where shall I find her?"

"You will find her in Proverbs, sixth chapter and sixth verse."

Moral.—Instead of waiting and wishing for an uncle to die, go and see how a rich ANT LIVES.—[Ex.

Arsenic-Eaters.—The Styrian peasants eat arsenic as the Chinese eat opium. They eat it for two specific purposes—to acquire plumpness and freshness of complexion, and to improve their 'wind,' so as to enable them to climb long, steep mountains without difficulty of breathing. And, strange to hear, these specific purposes are attained. The young poison eaters are remarkable for blooming complexions, and full, round, healthy appearances. The peasant, after dissolving a slight particle of arsenic in his mouth, ascends heights with a facility he could not otherwise do without the greatest difficulty of breathing.

Mr. S. A. Gillett, banker, Portsmouth, Ohio, was recently robbed at Cresline, of $5,480, which he had in a carpet bag. He had on his person $20,000, including that contained in the carpet bag.—Mr. G. stood alone near the cars, with the carpet bag between his feet, when he was attacked by two villains. One of them struck at him, and in attempting to ward off the blow, he received a slight cut in the arm from a bowie-knife, in the hands of the robber. The other scoundrel seized the carpet bag, and both disappeared in the dark.

Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt intends, it is said, to have six or eight large steamships built, to ply between New York and Liverpool and Havre. Two are to be ready for the sea in the coming spring.

Mrs. Partington is said to have anxiously asked if Uncle Tom is a better man than Enoch, of Biblical memory. She grounds her inquiry on the fact that she has heard that Uncle Tom has been translated seven times, while Enoch was translated but once.

Political Bitterness.—Parson Eaton, Harpswell, Maine, whose three cornered hat, big white wig and shoe buckles, indelibly impressed our childish memory, was of those stern old revolutionary Feds, who preached politics, as was the fashion of the day; and he prayed politics too, for in one of his public performances, during the strife between Adams and Jefferson, he said:

"O, Lord, thou hast commanded us to pray for our enemies—and let us begin with Thomas Jefferson."

The wife of William F. Thayer, of Gainesville, N. Y., recently committed suicide by hanging herself in the woodshed attached to her husband's house. No reason is assigned for the melancholy act.

MUSIC AT HOME.

Music serves to make home pleasant, by engaging many of its inmates in a delightful recreation, and thus dispelling the sourness and gloom which frequently arrises from petty disputes, from mortified vanity, from discontent and envy. It prevents for the time at least, evil thoughts and evil speaking, and tends to relieve the minds of both performers and hearers from the depressing effects of care and melancholy. Young people need and will have amusements. If innocent and improving amusements be not provided at home, they seek it elsewhere. If they find places more agreeable to them than home, that home will be deserted; and thus the gentle and holy influences which ought to encircle the family fireside, will be in a great measure lost.

"For surely, melody from heaven was sent,
To cheer the heart when tired of human strife;
To soothe the wayward heart, by sorrow rent,
And soften down the rugged road of life."

Americans in the Holy Land.—About two years ago, eight American Christians conceived and carried out the novel idea of planting an American colony in the Holy Land. They first located near Jerusalem, but subsequently removed to a place near Joppa, in the plains of sharon. Here they devoted themselves to the arts of agriculture, and to the cultivation of friendly relations with the Arabs; procured agricultural implements, and now in their letters home they give the most glowing and attractive descriptions of the fertility of the soil. They are able to raise three crops in the year—two in summer, by means of irrigation, and one in winter, when they have the aid of the winter rains. The crops grow luxuriantly, and more abundantly than in the United States, and nearly every kind of vegetable and grain raised in this country, can be procured at Palestine.

Danger of Idleness.—It is no overstatement to say, that other things being equal, the man who has the greatest amount of intellectual resources is in the least danger from inferior temptations; if for no other reason, because he has fewer idle moments. The ruin of most men dates from some vacant hour. Occupation is the armor of the soul, and the train of idleness is borne up by all the vices. I remember a satirical poem, in which the Devil is represented as fishing for men, and adapting his baits to the taste and temperament of his prey; but the idler, he said, pleased him most, because he bit the naked hook. —[Geo. S. Hillard's Mercantile Library Address.

ANECDOTE OF MR. CHOATE.

At the trial of the salvage case of the bark Missouri, at Boston, last week, the ease in which part of the cargo was embezzled by the masters of the two vessels on the coast of Sumatra, one of the masters was examined as a witness, and disclosed the plan of embezzlement, and stated the inducements that were offered to him by the other master. He said that he objected at first, and told his comrade they would be found out and convicted, but was overborne by the assurance given him. Mr. Choate cross-examined him strictly and particularly as to what the inducements and assurances were. The witness had the appearance of holding back a little, but at last he said: "Well, sir, he told me that if we were found out, he could get Mr. Choate to defend us, and he would get us off if we were caught with the money in our boots." It was not five minutes nor ten minutes that it required to bring the audience back to sober countenance.

A Fire and its Moral.—Recently a fire broke out on 3d street, near Washington avenue, but was extinguished by the St. Louis boys before any very material damage was sustained.

After the flames were subdued, a fine gold ring was picked up by one of the firemen, who, approaching a woman of the house, asked her if the article of jewelry belonged to her, to which she replied, taking the ring, "the Lord have mercy, Firemen is honest!"

A little girl named Comery, of Lowell, Mass., a sister of one of the carriers of the News, a day or two since, found a check on the Atlas Bank of Boston for $7,500, which she returned to the owner. He made her a present of a "thank'ee!"—and that was all.

When we record our angry feelings, let it be on the snow, that the first beam of sunshine may obliterate them forever.

McLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLean—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for ten years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

DR. WHITE,
DISCOVERER OF THE
SYMPTOMA TRUTINORIC SYSTEM,
For Diagonising all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs,
May be Consulted daily at his Office, No. 191 PINE St., between 4th & 5th, from 2 to 5 P. M.
According to well authenticated statistical reports, one out of every six of all the deaths that occur in Europe or America, are from diseases of the lungs alone.
Judging from the above data, there are at the present time within the city of St. Louis, at least,
FIFTEEN THOUSAND
individuals who have disease seated upon their lungs. It is equally true that the Medical Profession, without exception, are unable to detect a disease upon those organs in season to effect a radical cure; and this is the reason why that class of diseases have proved so universally fatal. And hence this new discovery offers the only means extant for detecting pulmonary diseases in their incipient stages, or in time to effect a cure in everycase. In all probability, 14,000 out of the above number may escape a premature grave, by at once availing themselves of the benefits of this important discovery.
Parents and Guardians should submit every member of their families to an immediate examination by this New System if they would avoid a responsibility desirable to none but infidels. They should not suffer any pecuniary consideration to deter them from reaping its benefits if they would protect those committed to their charge from one of the most fatal diseases that exists upon this continent. If they rely upon their family physician to apprise them of the existence of this dreadful disease, depend upon it, not one case out of a hundred will ever recover. Heads of families, are you prepared to offer those committed to your responsible charge a sacrifice to prejudice, when these incontrovertible facts are before you? If so, the responsibility rests entirely with you.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.
Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

DISCOURSE BY ELDER ORSON PRATT.

TABERNACLE, Oct. 7, 1854.

We will bring up the subject upon which others have spoken, and that which more immediately concerns us, viz: the Perpetual Emigration Fund.—What is it? For what was it established? What are your duties in regard to this fund, and in relation to your fellow-beings, your brethren and sisters, and their families that are scattered abroad in the midst of those wretched, wicked, and abominable governments.

We have already been informed, and taught from this stand, by those who are filled with the Holy Ghost, by those who are filled with the inspiration of the Almighty, setting forth the the necessity and importance of being awake in regard to the condition of the Saints that are scattered abroad. We are apt to forget the things we ought to do, though they are told to us in plainness. We think in our hearts, "Well, we will go and do as we have been told; it looks beautiful and very consistent; it seems to be the very law by which we should be governed, and when we go from this conference we will make all the necessary arrangements to fulfill and comply with this law, and hearken to the counsels and instructions that have been given;" but straightway as you go out of the tabernacle, and out of the sound of the voice of the servants of God, the devil comes along, and begins to whisper in your ears, and tells you to be a little selfish, saying, "Look out more for yourselves, for your wives, and for your children: they may go hungry—they may want for food, and houses, and ten thousand other things, and unless you put forth your hands, and exert your energies to provide for them, they may be brought into great suffering; and again, perhaps there may be some great trials ahead of the Saints, there may be pinching times; it would be well for you to look out a little, and be prepared against these times of trial," etc. And thus the good word that is sown in your hearts by the Holy Spirit begins to be caught away, one principle after another, until finally selfishness has full control over your movements, and it is the last thing you think of, to do unto others as you would have others do unto you under the same circumstances.

The Lord is going to gather His Saints, and we are already gathered, a great host of us into this Territory; but let me tell you this is hardly a beginning; many nations are yet to be gathered unto the name of the Lord of Hosts, unto Mount Zion, where they can be taught in the ways of the Lord, and be instructed to walk in His paths, and understand the principles of true government, and their duties toward one another, and toward the God whom they profess to worship and serve. Nations, not a few, are to be gathered, and to go up for that purpose.

This is just laying the foundation; it is a little nucleus, and a few thousands are gathering to it year after year; but the work now commenced will increase, and continue to increase, like the stone that was hewn out of the mountain. In the first place, the stone taken out of the mountain is much smaller than the mountain, but finally it increases to that magnitude that it begins to be a great mountain, not merely to fill one small territory, but as Daniel said, "it became a great mountain and filled the whole earth."

Very well, then, the Saints are to be gathered, and they are to come not only by thousands, but tens of thousands, scores of thousands, and hundreds of thousands are to be assembled from among the nations. How is this to be brought about? Through the servants of the living God. This is what the Lord told us before one Saint was gathered. In a revelation given in the presence of six elders, in Sept., 1830, the Lord says: "Ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, for mine elect hear my voice, and harden not their hearts; and the decree hath gone forth from the Father, that they shall be gathered in unto one place upon the face of this land."

That is the decree that has gone forth; it is ordained in the heavens, and it will come to pass. As the Saints have already been gathered here unto this territory, even so will it continue to be fulfilled until the last of the elect of God are assembled from the four corners of the earth.

The servants of God are the ones that are called to bring to pass this work, says the revelation. In obedience to this declaration, and in fulfillment of this prophecy, the Holy Ghost wrought upon the heart of our President to establish a fund—a Perpetual Emigrating Fund—to bring about this great work; he laid the foundation of it; he proposed it to the people, and explained the nature of it; how it was to be used; how it was to be controlled; and how it should be made lasting and perpetual in its nature, to accomplish the design of the Almighty in gathering his elect from the four winds of heaven. Shall we then, as Saints of the Most High, come here and sit down in our fine habitations, and upon our farms and inheritances, and let this great work of the last days come to naught through our carelessness and indifference? No, brethren, let it not be recorded in the archives of the eternal world that we will thus do, when our brethren have stretched out their hands to help us to this place. Let not the news fly to eternal worlds that we are not willing to do to our brethren scattered abroad as they were willing to do by us, when we were in a scattered condition.

I do not know what more can be said than what other speakers have already said upon this subject. Our President said he would be glad to have some six discourses, each six hours long, preached to the people upon the subject of doing their duty unto others in regard to this fund. And I have no doubt he included every other duty between man and man, so far as it could be done in that short period of time; for thirty-six hours would not begin to be time enough for a man to tell the people all their duties. Many people think that all the duties of man are recorded in the Bible; that idea is held by many of the sectarian world; they think this book contains all the duties in regard to the relationships between man and man, and that it is a sufficient rule of faith and practice; and enough to govern them in all their dealings with each other, and in their duties toward their God.

Let me tell you, if any one man's duties (if he lived to be an old man) were clearly written, and foretold before he was born, it would take a larger volume than the Bible to contain them all; and when we consider the thousands and millions of human beings that are on the earth now, and the millions that have dropped into their graves in ages past, it is absurd to suppose that one such volume could point out all their duties, even if they all could have been foretold by the spirit of prophecy.

For instance, the duties of to-day, if written, would require something like one page; and as every day's duties would be different the one from the other, it would require three hundred and sixty-five pages in one year, which in seventy years would amount to upwards of twenty-five thousand pages, which would have to be recorded to point out the duties of one individual towards his fellow man. Think not then, that six discourses each, only six hours long could make known to you the whole of your duties towards each other through life.

This is the reason why the Lord has appointed a living priesthood on the earth; why he has sent down the Holy Ghost from heaven, why it enters the heart of man, and inspires him with knowledge and information concerning his own duties, and the duties of others also, that he may impart to them, week after week, and from one meeting to another, in public and in private, before large assemblies and in the family circle, every principle and duty that is necessary to be known; that his family, his wives, and his children, and the church of God at large, may be taught by the Holy Ghost—the Comforter that guides into all truth; it is that power that instructs men in regard to all their duties.

Then let not the immigrants—the Saints that have come into this Territory in former years, as well as those who have come here the present year, be asleep upon the subject, but awake from a deep sleep. You know what the parable says on the subject of the kingdom of God in the last days, comparing it to ten virgins, that took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom. They did not stay abroad among the nations. Then, says Jesus, "The kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins." Not the kingdom he built up in his own day, and the days of his apostles who were with Him in the flesh; but "then," having reference to what was previously spoken in the foregoing verses, concerning his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power and great glory. "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps and went forth from among the nations; some took oil in their lamps and some did not, but let their lamps go out, only having barely lighted up their wicks a little, which contained no oil to feed the flame; and they all slumbered and slept; but by and by, about midnight, when they were all in a sound slumber, a cry is heard, 'behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him,' that awakened them all up."

Now it would be much better for us to wake before the midnight cry is sounded in our ears. We gathered here and brought lamps with us—have we got oil in them? Are we doing the things God requires at our hands? Are we doing unto others that we would have others do unto us under the same circumstances? If you want to know just precisely your duties towards your fellow-man, always ask yourselves this question, "If I were placed in that man's or in that woman's condition, how should I desire that they should do unto me?" "And whatsoever you would have men do to you, do you even the same to them." We can always tell what we should do by changing circumstances and places; by placing ourselves in other's circumstances, we can see what we would wish them to do to us under those circumstances, and thus find out what we should do for those in that condition.

What does the Lord intend to do? He is introducing a new dispensation; yet it is the gospel dispensation, the same as all other dispensations; the gospel is included in this new dispensation. The Lord intends to do a great many things in this dispensation He never did in former ones; and a great many things that were in former ones will eventually be done away in this new one. What is to be done away? A great many things Jesus taught on the Mount will actually have to be done away in this new dispensation. A great many things were given to meet the circumstances of the people, that when they all become righteous many of those laws and regulations that were given to them in an imperfect state will vanish away; they will be of no use; they are like the platform erected around an edifice, which serves a good purpose for the time being, but when the edifice is completed the platform is taken away.

We are told a great deal about the poor in former dispensations; how to deal with them, and the laws that were given to regulate mankind in dealing their alms to them. Will this always be the case? No, but the time will come when there will be no poor. The object of this last dispensation is to make the people one as the Father and Son are one, or as the Book of Doctrine and Covenant says, to make them "equal in earthly things that they may be made equal in heavenly things."

To bring about this object, and do away with poverty and make all the people rich, the Lord has introduced laws, and rulers, and governors, to teach us our duty while poverty reigns in the world. If you think it hard to pay back a just and honest debt to the Perpetual Emigration Fund, what will you think when the pure laws of God are introduced, and you are required by His law to pay over every farthing you have in the world; not only to pay your just and honest dues to the Perpetual Emigration Fund, but to pay everything in your possession. If you cannot deal justly in relation to these small accounts, how is it to be expected you will perform the pure law of God—the law of consecration? I tell you, we have got to begin and attend faithfully to these small things. But when we are first born into the kingdom we cannot rule alone; we are not able to prance and trot and caper about; he has therefore ordained certain helps, and governments, and laws, to govern us while we are in a creeping state, and trying to advance into a more perfect order of things. This Perpetual Emigrating Fund is one of those helps ordained to assist us in our imperfect and weak state; by and by when the full law of God comes in force these helps can be dispensed with. When that will be I do not know, but I have an idea that it will not be until we get back to Jackson county, for the Lord has told us in one revelation in substance as follows, "Let these laws I have given concerning my people in Jackson county be fulfilled after the redemption of Zion."

The Lord is beginning to redeem Zion. You must not suppose because you are away here in Utah, that you are out of the reach of the Lord's working for the redemption of Zion; for he has been working ever since we were scattered from that land to bring it about, and we are becoming more and more of one heart and mind; more and more willing to hearken to counsel. You see among this people a very different spirit manifested from what was manifested some ten, fifteen, and twenty years ago. How ready and willing they generally are to receive the instructions and counsel of those God has ordained to teach them.

We can see how the Lord has prospered us as a people since we came to this Territory, and how everything has worked for our good through obeying the counsel of those God has appointed for our consolation, happiness, and benefit, both temporally and spiritually. All this has a tendency to the redemption of Zion; it is all making to that great point. Whenever the properties of this church shall be consecrated to it, and the Saints receive their stewardship, it will all be tending to bring about that which is so often spoken of in ancient and modern revelations.

The Perpetual Emigration Fund is one of the helps that is introduced to lead us previous to our getting into that more perfect state; and when we get into that it will be Perpetual Fund, or any other kind of funds we please to name, for the property will all be consecrated unto the Lord, with a deed and covenant that cannot be broken; then the servants of God can take the whole of the property and use it according to the mind and will of God, and it will be all perpetual fund, and all tithing funds, and all public building funds; for it will be just the kind of funds the Lord shall direct to accomplish whatever is designed in His wise purposes through His servants.

Let us step forward and build up this fund, and take hold of simple things if we ever expect to receive the greater ones. We had excellent preaching this forenoon as to practical duties; this has been my manner of preaching when abroad upon the earth, except on my last mission; on that, I was sent to preach the doctrine of plurality of wives. In all my preaching on other missions, I have endeavored to be just as practical as possible among the people, showing them their every-day duties. I have published many pamphlets and works, and in the most of them, I have published the simple, plain, easy principles of the gospel. It is true, in answering some queries that have been put forth by the world, I have been obliged to deviate in some of my publications from the plain and simple course I have generally pursued in my works.

For instance, the world read in the revelations we have received that there are more Gods than one. This is something that does not immediately concern us; but yet opposers get up and contend against us, and prejudice the minds of congregations against the people of God, because they profess to believe not only in a plurality of wives, but also in a plurality of Gods; it is necessary to show them the reasons for our belief—the whys and the wherefores; and this I endeavored to do in some of my last publications; not because I had more light on this subject than many others, but I endeavored to do it for the benefit of the people—to show them wherein we believe in the plurality of Gods, and yet acknowledge only one God. I believe both of these principles with all my heart. I believe there is only one wise God, and I believe there is an immense number of Gods. The people know we believe these doctrines, and they publish against us on this ground; and if we should not take up any arguments to explain the matter, it would only serve to rivet down their prejudices on their hearts. Notwithstanding this, it was always more delightful to me in all my preaching abroad, and in any publications I have sent forth, to dwell upon faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, and upon the plain, simple, every-day duties of the Saints, showing them what to do in order to obtain eternal life in the kingdom of God.

So far as I have ever preached abroad in the world, and published, one thing is certain, I have not published anything but what I verily believed to be true, however much I may have been mistaken, and I have generally endeavored to show the people from the written word of God, as well as reason, wherein it was true. This has been my general course. I may have erred in some principles; I do not profess to be wise or to have more understanding than many others. I am not called with the same calling as those who preside over all the church. I may not have as great a degree of the spirit of revelation; but I have always tried in my teachings, and in my proclamations and in my publications, where I could not get light by the Spirit of the Lord, (or did not get light; I will not say could not, for I believe it is the privilege of all elders, authorities, and members of the church of God, to get light by the Spirit of the Lord,) but where I did not get light by the Spirit of the Lord, I have generally been careful to back up all the doctrines and principles I set forth by reason, or by, "Thus saith the Lord," in some revelation either ancient or modern. Previous to declaring a doctrine, I have always inquired in my own mind, "Can this doctrine be proved by revelation given, or by reason, or can it not?" If I found it could be proved, I set forth the doctrine; but if I found there was no evidence to substantiate it, I laid it aside; in all this, however, I may have erred, for to err is human.

I feel thankful to God this day that I stand in the midst of a great and good people, that are willing to practice the principles of eternal truth and righteousness, and those mysteries about the plurality of Gods, and the plurality of worlds, also are good in their places. God has revealed them, and they are intended for our good and instruction, or He never would have revealed them.

But to go back to the words of our text; that is the thing that most concerns us at present. It should be laid before the minds of the people, and instilled into their hearts week after week; they should be taught and instructed in such a way and manner that these mysteries, when we get the true light upon them, may do us good. When the Lord sees fit to pour out wisdom and knowledge, and mysteries, and understanding from the heavens, may we, by practical works, faith, and diligence in doing our duties one towards another, and towards our God, be able to receive them, and have them do us good. The time will come when the Lord will reveal all these things; everything in the heavens, on the earth, and under the earth; and everything pertaining to the soul of man will be proclaimed by the sounding of trumpets in the ears of all living.

I will adopt the old saying, "I feel first rate." It does me good to back into get Utah Territory, after having been gone two years, to behold the faces of the Saints again, and rejoice in their midst, and to bear my weak and humble testimony of the truth of this great and glorious work. It is now over twenty-four years since I was baptised into this church; it was twenty-four years on the nineteenth of last month since I was baptised and became a member of this church. I have seen it rise to its present greatness from a very few individuals that composed the whole church in 1830. There were then, perhaps, not fifty Latter-day Saints in the whole world; and every year brings to pass the fulfillment of the sayings, and predictions, and revelations of Joseph, the prophet.

The work is rolling on as rapidly as the wheels of time will permit. I well recollect a revelation given upwards of twenty-three years ago. What did the Lord say when we were only a little handful? Said he, "It is necessary that my elders should go forth into all the regions round about, and preach the gospel, and many shall be converted; and ye shall have power to organize yourselves according to the laws of man." This was spoken before we began to gather. What was the use of organizing ourselves according to the laws of man? "That you may break every band wherewith the enemy seeketh to destroy, and that you may keep my laws." Has this not been fulfilled? Look at the time that prophecy was given, away back nearly twenty-four years ago. Has it come to pass? Are we not organized according to the laws of man? Are not many converted just as the revelation predicted? And are we not in a position, by being organized here in Utah Territory according to the laws of man, to break the bands of the enemy, that they may not destroy us as a people. If mobs undertake to afflict us here, they will find it very difficult, because we are organized according to the laws of man. If they use any exertion or any influence to bring about the destruction of this people, we are organized according to the laws of man, and can fight with their own weapons.

Not only was this for the purpose of being secure from the hands of our enemies, but "that ye may be able to keep my laws." That was another reason the Lord gave in the same revelation. Are there not some laws of God that we could keep, if we were scattered over the other States and Territories, unorganized according to the laws of man? Yes, there are laws of the greatest moment bearing upon the present and future destiny of this people; that have a bearing upon their eternal glory, exaltation, and everlasting happiness. These laws never could have been kept, had we not been organized according to the laws of man. The Lord has fulfilled this revelation thus far; how much more complete this organization may become hereafter, I know not, neither do I care.

It was not the invention of man, nor the power and wisdom of man, that organized this kingdom, but the God we worship and serve, who made the heavens and earth. He made this kingdom and organized it and established it; it is all His, and He holds it in His own hands; and the same Great Being rules and governs the wicked; He controls and He will fulfil every word that has been given through the mouths of his servants, as He tells us in the preface of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants:—"These commandments and prophecies shall be fulfilled; though the heavens and the earth shall pass away, not one jot or tittle of the commandments of that book shall pass away."

Everything will roll round, roll round, roll round in its times and seasons, until this kingdom shall spread forth, and the dominion and the greatness of it will cover the whole face of the earth, and there will not be a dog to move his tongue from the Rocky Mountains to the uttermost parts of the earth, but all be in subjection to the kingdom of Christ; all must become subject to her laws; and the great nations of the earth—mighty nations, not a few, ere long will come up to Zion, to seek wisdom and knowledge from the counsellors in Zion. They will read her laws and say, "Our laws are as nothing, our wisdom as foolishness, our words like the tow that is exposed to the devouring flame; we are broken asunder, torn into fragments, and ready to crush under our own weight; but your laws, government, and officers, are all good, righteous, just, and true; surely the God of Israel is in our midst. Come, let us go up to Zion, let us hear from the wise legislators of Zion, and let us hear the laws proclaimed therein; let us learn of the wisdom that dwells in the servants of the Most High." And they will come up with their armies, and their mighty men, and their judges and their rulers, and kings will come to the brightness of her rising, and the Gentiles will come with a flowing stream, and the gates of Zion will be open day and night, and never be shut, to admit the forces that will come rushing in from all nations, to learn the wisdom, knowledge, and instructions that are poured out from the heavens upon the servants of the Most High.

If we are looking forward to such a glorious time, to such a happy period, let us endeavor to prepare ourselves, and awake from our slumber, and do the duties required at our hands. Pay up your debts—pay them to the Perpetual Emigration Fund; and send it back immediately, that those who are starving to death, and are ground down with tyranny, may enjoy the same privileges as you. Remember them and God will remember you. But if you turn your back upon these principles, and will not seek to do unto others as you would have them do unto you; if you will not listen to the instructions of our prophet, and to the instructions of others who have spoken on this stand, you will wither away like a dried reed, and you will bear no authority, and that you have will be taken from you, and you will be left poor and miserable, and become the off-scouring of the earth, under the curse of the Almighty for your disobedience.

Love for a Married Man.

I now take the opportunity of making a confession which I have often had upon my lips, but I have hesitated to make it from the fear of drawing upon myself the hatred of every married woman. But now I will run the risk—so now for it—sometime or other people must unburden their hearts. I confess, then, that I never find a man more captivating than when he is a married man. A man is never so handsome, never so perfect in my eyes, as when he is a husband and a father of a family, supporting in his manly arms wife and children; and the whole domestic circle, on his entrance into this state, close around him, and constitute a part of his home and world. He is not merely ennobled by his position, but he is actually beautified by it—then he appears to me as the crown of creation—and it is only such a man as this that is dangerous to me, and with whom I am inclined to fall in love. But then, propriety forbids it. And Moses, and all the European legislators, declare it to be sinful, and married women consides it a sacred duty to stone me. Nevertheless, I cannot prevent the thing. It is so, and cannot be otherwise; and my only hope of appeasing those who are excited against me is in my future confession that no love affects me so pleasantly, the contemplation of no happiness, so happy as that between married people. It is amazing to myself, because it seems to me that I, living unmarried or matchless, have but little to do. But it is so, and always was so.—[Fredricka Bremer.

TO OUR PATRONS.

We have now entered upon the duties of a new year. The old year, with its cares, perplexities, and responsibilities, is now added to the history of the past, and will soon be measurably forgotten, as we engage in the changing scenes of the new year.

We take this opportunity of wishing our readers a happy new year. And we feel to say that it is in your power to make it the most happy and prosperous, or the most miserable and misfortunate of your lives. It will be to you precisely what you make it. When we speak of prosperity, we do not allude to dollars and dimes, but to your acquisition of the blessings of salvation and the righteousness of God's elect. And if you seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness all other things shall be added unto you.

Let us seriously reflect upon some of the scenes and events of the past year; and let us see if we cannot by "Stars" and "Luminaries" brighten the scenes of the future, and peradventure control or create circumstances that will be conducive to our happiness and prosperity, and to the blessing and salvation of many who surround us.

Some scenes through which many of you have passed have been dark and gloomy; but the scene is changed—the prospect has brightened—the clouds that darkened your mental vision are measurably dissipated, for the light of Zion has been brought among you. It has lighted up your path: you have partaken of its genial and life-giving influences, and you begin to feel yourselves true born sons of Zion.

Many of you were called to part with kind and loving friends during the last emigration season. Our records show a great mortality among our brethren through cholera and other diseases. Shall we permit the destroyer to enter and commit such fearful ravages the ensuing season, or shall we live our holy religion and triumph over our common enemy?

Ancient Israel was told on one occasion that if they would sprinkle blood on their door posts, etc., the destroying angel should pass by and not destroy them. They believed the promise, did as they were counselled, and were saved from the general scourge. Modern Israel is told that if they well remember to keep the sayings of the Lord, walking in obedience to the commandments, "they shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them." But notwithstanding this plain and glorious promise, we find many of our brethren negligent of the counsel, and careless concerning the promise, and reckless of all things but how they may satisfie their appetites; and as a consequence, many find an untimely grave, which puts an end to their mortal progress, and terminates their earthly career before they have filled the object and measure of their creation, which must materially effect their exaltation in the kingdom of our God.

Be wise, therefore, all ye Saints, and hearken to the counsels of the spirit; keep faithfully the commandments of God, and obey the word of wisdom; and if you will do these things, though the pestilence and scourge come over this city and land more virulent and destructive in its character than that experienced during the last year, yet your life and the lives of your family will be respected, and the angel of death shall pass by and not destroy you, and you shall live to behold the salvation of our God.

The circulation of the Luminary is steadily increasing, and we hope that as it increases in its circumation it may increase in interest and usefulness to the Saints in particular and to our readers in general. The work of the Lord is progressing in this city and section of country. Each week brings some addition to our numbers.

Our emigration will soon be arriving from Europe, and many of our readers will soon be preparing to cross the plains en route for the valleys of the west. We have many things to say to you before your departure; but above all things, we say, keep your hearts pure and free, your garments unspotted, and your bodies undefiled, then shall you mingle on equal footing with the righteous in Zion, and if faithful to the end, obtain with them the blessings of eternal life.

CALL FOR AN ELDER.

Mrs. C. M. Reynolds, wife of Amasa Reynolds, writes to the Luminary from Bolton, Warren county, New York, and says that an elder might do good in that place, as numbers are believing; and she hopes that the Lord may direct an elder that way. Will one of the elders in the east attend to this call.

SALT LAKE MAIL.

The Salt Lake mail which was telegraphed from Independence, as will be seen in our column of telegraphic news, had not arrived up to the time of our going to press.

THE NEW GOVERNOR OF UTAH.

We have often been questioned by gentlemen of candor, who feel an interest in whatever relates to the prosperity of Utah, as to the probable results of a stranger being sent there as Governor. We have invariably replied that the people of Utah knew enough to mind their own business, and should the government of the United States appoint a Governor over them who possessed a sufficient degree of intelligence to understand his duties, and discretion enough to confine himself to them, nothing would occur to interrupt the harmony and good understanding that has heretofore existed between the several branches of the government. The Mormon people are a law-abiding people, and the duty of the Governor is to see that the laws are faithfully executed. 'Tis not the laws of Missouri or of any other State that are to be enforced in Utah, but the laws enacted by the General Assembly of Utah, and such laws of Congress as are applicable to Utah in common with other Territories.

If Col. Steptoe, the newly appointed Governor accept his appointment, and enters upon its duties in sincerity, and with due respect to the laws and the rights of a free people, he will be respected and honored in his office by all the people.

Those journals in the eastern States that appear to be acquainted with Col. Steptoe, speak of him as a gentleman of integrity and sound discretion—courteous and high-minded, and well calculated to secure the confidence of the people of Utah.

We sincerely hope that he may prove to be all that his friends represent him to be. He has been in the Territory since the month of September, and from all accounts he has been well received as a gentleman and officer. We also learn from a reliable source that he has formed a favorable opinion of Gov. Young and the people of Utah, and has spoken generously of them in his letters.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK.

The January number of this deservedly popular Magazine came to hand too late for a notice last week.

Its engravings are exquisite; its fashions with diagrams, its drawing lessons, its embroidery, are elegantly got up, and its articles are selected with excellent taste. It cannot fail to give universal satisfaction.

This is the first number of the fiftieth volume, and it promises its patrons an intellectual feast for the current year. Now is the time to subscribe.

The January number contains one hundred pages, sixty-eight engravings, sixty contributions, and ten full page plates.

TERMS—One copy, one year, $3; two copies, one year, $5; five copies, one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, $10; eight copies, one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, $15; eleven copies, one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, $20.

Steamboat Disasters on the Western Rivers.

The Daily Missouri Democrat, dated the 3d of January, contains two entire columns of abridged statistics of steamboat disasters on the western rivers, during the year 1854. We should have been glad to have presented our readers with a detailed account as contained in the Democrat, but space in our paper will not permit. We, therefore, present our readers with an abridged view of the statistics of disasters, so clearly and fully given by the above journal, being satisfied, in the words of the Democrat, that it is as correct as it is ever found practicable to make such things:

Boats destroyed or badly damaged,	167
Of these there were sunk,	84
" " " burnt,	24
" " " exploded	17
Damaged by snags, fires, tornadoo &c.,	42
Lives lost by fire and drowning,	333

The estimated loss is given of sixty-seven, which amounts to two millions two hundred and seventy-three thousand three hundred dollars.

Estimated loss of nine that were damaged but not destroyed, fifty-four thousand dollars.

Of the ninety-one remaining, no estimate is given.

This list does not include the entire list of disasters on these rivers. The Democrat informs us that the slighter casualties would number hundreds if not thousands.

It will be remembered by many of our readers that our martyred prophet Joseph received a revelation upon these things, in the year of our Lord 1831. We will refresh your memories by a quotation upon this subject from the Book of Doctrine and Covenant, published in Kirtland, Ohio, in the year 1835.

Sec. 80th, part 1st: "Behold there are many dangers upon the waters, and more especially hereafter, for I, the Lord, have decreed in mine anger many destructions upon the waters; yea, and especially upon these waters; nevertheless, all flesh is in mine hand, and he that is faithful among you shall not perish by the waters."

Part 3d: "Behold I, the Lord, in the beginning blessed the waters; but in the last days, by the mouth of my servant John, I cursed the waters. Wherefore, the days will come that no flesh shall be safe upon the waters; and it shall be said in days to come, that no one is able to go up to the land of Zion upon the waters, but he that is upright in heart. * * * And now I give unto you a commandment, and what I say unto one I say unto all, that you shall forwarn your brethren concerning these waters, that they come not in journeying upon them, lest their faith fail and they are caught in her waves. I, the Lord, have decreed, and the destroyer rideth upon the face of the waters, and I revoke not the decree."

The above needs no comment to render it more plain and applicable to the destroying circumstances above mentioned.

The righteous will see, and understand, and acknowledge the hand of the Lord in these things, and will bless and praise the name of the Most High, even though their dearest friends have fallen with the ungodly.

The ungodly will fear and tremble, gnash their teeth, curse God and die, whilst priests and editors will give these things their natural and physical causes, not discerning the hand of the Lord, that controleth all things both in heaven and on earth.

This is but one out of hundreds of prophecies concerning the calamities that shall come upon this generation, this land, and this nation. And as sure as the blood of Joseph and Hyrum fell in Carthage goal, so sure will their blood be required of this generation.

Correspondence of the Luminary.

TO THE SAINTS.

Brethren and sisters—With a view for the better convenience of those who cannot attend at the appointed time to pay their tithing, we have appointed Br. J. H. Hart, who may be found at the church office at all times, and will be ready to wait on the Saints for that purpose.

I shall still continue to be at the church office on Wednesday of each week, to give any instruction the Saints may need on the subject.

A MORMON INCIDENT.

Julia was a fair-haired, blue-eyed, lively girl, with a pretty face, and a faultless form. She loved a Mormon Elder. Her love was returned warmly and devotedly. They married; and soon after, the elders were called home from their mission. Now came a struggle in Julia's heart: parental affection and a husband's love striving for mastery. She must leave her dearly beloved parents, or abandon her fond husband. She was her father's particular "pet"—the child of his old age; it would nearly break his heart to leave him. She begged of her husband to tarry a few months—until her father was in his grave. She then could plant flowers over his tomb, and leave him to rest in peace. But this could not be; the call of the Presidency was peremptory, and Elder P—— never failed to respond to the requirements of duty. Poor Julia, the tide of her affections ebbed and flowed, resting alternately with her father and her husband. It was a violent struggle, and threatened to tear her poor heart assunder. Victory decided in favor of duty, and they make preparations for immediate departure for the distant west. She embraced her aged father in silence, kissed her weeping mother, bade her brothers and sisters a kind adieu, and left the home of her youth forever.

After a tedious journey they arrived at their new homes among the Saints of God. Here the consolations of religion, a husband's tenderness, and frequent kind letters from home, have succeeded in a good degree in soothing the pangs of absence, and Julia recovers her former good spirits—her usual lively disposition. Each succeeding mail brought tidings from home, and she was happy to learn that her father had become more reconciled to her absence.

Several weeks had now elapsed since Julia had heard from home. What intolerable suspense! She fears that all is not well; perhaps her dear father was sick—was dying, and his "pet" daughter far away. In looking over the obituary notices in a Buffalo paper, I discover the name of Julia's father. He was dead. I mentioned it to her husband, who wisely concluded not to acquaint her with the fact. Her friends would write, and then would be another outburst of grief.

Another week passes. While at the postoffice receiving my mail matter I saw a letter directed to Julia. I took it from the office and carried it to her house. She eagerly seized it, and seeing no emblem of mourning on the envelope, she cried—"Thank God my father is alive." She recognizes in the superscription the hand-writing of her brother Leonard. She dances for joy—she presses the letter to her lips, and kisses it o'er and o'er. She hurriedly breaks the seal and leans forward to the light. A moment's gaze of intense earnestness, and her face assumes a death-like paleness. She throws the letter from her as if it were a poisonous serpent; she utters a scream of anguish—sinks back into a chair, and buries her face in her hands. Such a sudden transition cannot be described—that piercing shriek cannot be conceived. It penetrated my inmost soul; and even now, after a lapse of several years, I sometimes imagine that I hear it sounding in my ears.

This was no time for sympathy. I threw the following lines into her lap, and retired sorrowing. I had prepared them on seeing the death of her father in the paper:

TO JULIA.

Sad muse inspire my feeble tongue,
And soothing powers to my verse impart,
While I attempt in plaintive song
To ease the pains of a bleeding heart.

The woes I sing are not my own—
Another's grief I would suppress;
And sadly bow at pity's throne,
To soothe the pangs of her aching breast.

A cruel blow from monster Death
Has laid fair Julia's father low;
His chilling kiss has frozen his breath,
And crushed the daughter's heart with wo.

With ruthless hand Death hurls his darts,
Nor heeds his victim's mournful cries;
But loves to feast on broken hearts—
On widow's groans and orphan's sighs.

Weep not, fair one, 'tis the "common lot,"
The fairest flowers but bloom to die;
Or youth, or age escape it not,
All in the grave are doomed to lie.

The church yard yawns—she claims her prey,
And fain receives her coffined dead;
Her marble tops and beds of clay
Inspire our souls with constant dread.

She feels not yet the envenomed smart,
But the cup of mirth unconscious sips,
Nor heeds how soon a poisoned dart
May dash it from her waiting lips.

Now Julia yield to fate's behest,
And proudly wipe your tearful eyes,
While many a sympathetic breast
Will share with thee an orphan's sighs.

WALES.

UDGORN SEION OFFICE, SWANSEA, October 26, 1854.

PRESIDENT RICHARDS:—Dear Brother—In accordance with your request through the Star, to be advised of the state of the work of God among the various nations over which you have the honor to preside, I embrace this opportunity to inform you of the general features of the church in Wales.

During the summer season the priesthood have been diligent in out-of-door preaching, and have had more numerous and attentive audiences than heretofore; camp meetings have been the order of the season, especially where much opposition has been presented; and the combined influence of the Saints so assembled has never failed so far to move the prejudice, storm the strongest ramparts, and win conquest to the kingdom of God.

The weaker conferences have been much strengthened by the aid of elders and priests from the stronger, who, together with many volunteers laboring in new grounds, sustained principally by tracts, have done much towards the spread of the gospel; and I am pleased to see by the renewed vigor of the officers generally, that they realise their responsibilities, and the importance of faithfully warning their fellow beings of impending dangers.

You can anticipate our future prospects of success when I say, what I have not been able to say so unexceptionably heretofore, that officers and Saints are united so far as I know; and I have had the pleasure of visiting the majority of the conferences of late; everywhere the Saints evince an increasing desire to excel in living their professions, which to me is a certain forerunner of a paramount success.

Now, the weather being unfavorable to out-door preaching, the brethren manifest no less zeal to water the seed so profusely sown, by distributing tracts from house to house and selling them to the world, each having his sphere appointed him weekly; and truly it does the Saints as well as the world much good, because, as they say, the Lord blesses them with His spirit abundantly in so doing. So that Mormonism, so far from being in a dying or dead state, as many have flattered themselves, is humming about the ears of the priests and people, who feel quite alarmed already, and admit that this "imposture" threatens to be more dangerous than ever. You would be pleased to see the diligence of the Saints in following the tracks of the clergy, priests, and Scripture readers and all sorts of peddlers, with "Replies" to the falsehoods which they spread abroad, sometimes meeting in the same house, and then I leave you to judge who finds the door first. Truly their zeal is worthy of a better cause. But through the blessings of Him who owns the work, all their efforts are abortive to retard its onward march. The capital which the priests make of the "plurality" has prevented the people investigating heretofore, although it has had a salutary influence upon the Saints, and it is getting old and forgotten by the world gradually.

Baptisms have not been as numerous as we expect them to be shortly, although a few individuals are still being baptised everywhere. I will merely recite one out of many instances—even in Merthyr, the place where the very stones might have denounced a gospel-hardened race, the seed is sprouting like a tulip bed after a summer's shower—seventeen baptised and twenty backsliders returning in one branch in one week. That most popular of preachers—the Cholera—which has swept off hundreds in that vicinity of late, may have contributed some to accomplish the above; but I am glad to learn that out of the many attacked by that "king of terrors," no Saints have died there, and only two or three have I heard of elsewhere, the ordinance being their only antidote.

In regard to myself, I never did feel a greater desire to further the purposes of God, so far as I understand them, nor more pleasure in it; I never fancied that I could do much, but my mite is as willing as the much of my brethren. My counsellors, Elders Jeremy and Daniels, are very efficient and zealous men, of one heart and soul with myself in all things, and they are a great blessing to the Saints. May the Lord bless them for it.

I have lately published upwards of 50,000 Welsh tracts on the first principles, "Replies" and "Invitations," with the addresses, time of preaching, etc., for every branch of note throughout the principality, nearly all of which are in circulation, at the lowest rates, besides other Welsh tracts previously on hand, and a fair proportion of English, so that taking all into consideration, we have a reasonable prospect of success when the spirit of truth accompanies them home to the honest heart. The problem is solved, that tract distributing, so far from augmenting, is the best method of liquidating old book debts, by winning new co-workers to that, as well as to every other laudable work; proving the force of the expression of one of old—"He which soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly;" whereas the liberal mind deviseth liberal means, and by his liberality shall he live.

The old debts have been considered quite an impediment to the progress of the work in all the conferences, but I am pleased that of late a new era has dawned upon us in this respect, by the abundant blessings manifestly poured upon the faithful minority in proportion to their exertions in paying the debts, so that by far the majority are now convinced that the Lord pays better interest upon their loans than they had conceived of; nor is it new or strange to hear them detail in the meetings how the Lord has repaid them for days' work contributed, but the fact engenders faith in Him and in His promises, in proportion to its use.

Without particularizing on incidents, you will be able, by the above representation, to delineate the general features of the work in Wales at the present time; and while your superior judgment may deliberate over the scene, that the spirit of inspiration may dictate amendments, alterations, new means, or anything, anyhow, to give the gospel a greater impetus in our midst, is the heart's desire of him who has no higher ambition.

I will detain you to state one instance which occurred lately, to show the rage of the adversary, and you may have a suggestion on the subject.

While two elders were preaching in Caermarthenshire a few Sundays ago, a gang of thirty or forty, led on by a tavern keeper, commenced shouting and hallooing, professedly to drown the voice of the brother who was preaching. Their lungs failing before they accomplished their object, the stones came next; one struck the brother in the face, until his blood was streaming; others whizzing by their heads failed to dislodge them, so the mobs rushed upon them, forced them to flee, and pursued them for a long way, until one succeeded in gaining the woods; the other was knocked down by a stone, and brutally kicked while bleeding on the ground, the timely aid of a stranger saving his life, when they had pronounced him dead. The stranger carried him to a house, and he so far recovered as to be able to ride back with a guard next day to detect the mob, when the tavern keeper openly avowed the deed, and declared that "the next time, instead of stones they would use guns;" and he subsequently, when arraigned before the authorities, reiterated the threat with impunity, and without the least prohibition, fine, or censure on their part. The highest dignitaries have written abusive letters to our attorney for defending the brethren. These are the third and fourth elders whom this man has attempted to murder; one, an old man, over sixty years of age, was struck down by a stone hitting him on the head, thrown by this same villain, a year ago, abused, and left for dead. When he recovered so far as to be able to prosecute him, the court fined the defendant 6d! The plaintiff had the costs to pay, and had a severe reprimand for preaching, with threats if he continued. Another elder, having called at this fellow's house on business, he came in with a club, and beat him so brutally that he barely escaped with his life.

There are those in that vicinity who believe, and some desire baptism, but this roaring lion threatens the life of any Saint he meets, and we can get no protection. But I have probably written enough these busy times, hoping this long history will remind you of that long letter promised me long ago.

With congratulation upon your safe return, and continual prayer for you in every good, and with my respects to yourself, to President Spencer, if there, (heaven alone can reward him for the good he has done here—universally and deservedly beloved and esteemed,) also to the brotherhood in the office, I bring my epistle to a close.

From your brother in the covenant,

D. JONES.

"THE FANATICISM OF THE MORMONS."

BY ELDER E. W. TULLIDGE.

It has become almost a point of the popular faith to consider the Mormons a most "fanatical people." If an editor but dips his pen to write of that "strange sect," he makes two emphatic dashes under the "FANATICISM OF THE MORMONS," and our sincerest friends also firmly think that we are deluded. Now, I dare say that it is very clear to them that we are such as they believe, but then it is not so clear to us. Moreover, the saints are of the opinion that the term "fanatic," when associated with us, is very inconsistently applied, and that it will suit any other religious professors better. Strange as the assertion may appear, nevertheless the Latter-day Saints make it a point to judge religion by the strictest principles of logic; indeed they do what is done by no other people, namely, treat it as a positive science. They reduce the subtlest question to the simplest rules of reason and revelation, believing that truth is consistent with order and simplicity. Instead of the tendencies of their religion being lawless, intangible, and unnatural, they are severely logical. Hence, at the very onset, the saints treat as the profoundest nonsense the idea that the universe was created from nothing; that a Being exists without body, parts, or passions; that there are three persons in the Godhead—yet there are not three, but one; and many other notions of a like nature, so universally received. Surely it is is a wonder that those who are fanatical enough to call such foolishness philosophy and theology, should dare talk of the "fanaticism of the Mormons."

But why are we called fanatics? Merely because we contend for the faith once delivered to the saints! To believe in apostles, prophets, inspiration, and those principles so true in the experience of the ancient people of God, constitute us weak-minded in the eyes of all the world. Yet so simple is it that the "Everlasting Gospel" of Jesus Christ is the same in all its characteristics and effects, in all times and in all places, and if not the same it must be another gospel, that we are forced to receive this view, even at the risk of being considered fanatical. If Abraham, Jacob, Moses, or Paul, testifies to the visitation of angels and the revelations of God, it is true religion. Jesus, Peter, and the other apostles, preached baptism for the remission of sins, the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and the signs following the believer. Paul says he would not have the saints ignorant of spiritual blessings. Jude exhorts them to contend earnestly for the miraculous faith of the ancients. And the word of God positively declares that, where there is no vision, the people will perish. Now, all this is true and reasonable enough to the sectarian, so long as it is only a written word—but let the Mormons make the fai-of the ancients a present and positive one to them; let them but live out the religion of prophets and apostles, and they are called fanatics. This is strange logic; indeed so strange that a saint in his simplicity would call it nonsense. We can understand the apostles, however, better than modern teachers, and we cannot forget that one of them declares that, though even they, or an angel from heaven, dared preach any other gospel than that which they had already preached, the offenders should be punished with the curse of God. Let this be a warning, then, to those who speak of the most holy faith of the apostles, as the "fanaticism of the Mormons."

I make no hesitation in asserting that it cannot be proved, either by reason, analogy, or revelation, that the Latter-day Saints are fanatics. True, there are tens of thousands who will testify that God raised up Joseph Smith as a prophet, and has established His kingdom again on the earth, and that those who will not obey the divine message shall be cut off from among men, by the judgment of an offended God. But then, this is not fanaticism; it is the very truth, and we do indeed know it. These are not groundless assertions, neither is Mormonism offered to the world as a speculation—a religion, the truth of which cannot be known until death solves the mystery, and eternity declares whether it be the everlasting exaltation or damnation of the millions who receive or reject it. I am aware that this very confidence of the Mormons is taken as a sign of their fanaticism, for such things as certainty and demonstration in religion, are considered by modern theologians absolutely impossible. But how unscriptural and how unphilosophical is such a theory. That which is most true is the most certain. Truth has an irresistibleness which no sophistry can destroy. What man with the sense of sight can conscientiously and without doubt say that the sun does not shine. If we hit upon a truth, with our minds prepared to receive it, it is impossible not to know it. Wherever doubt exists, there also must be a flaw, and that flaw is either in ourselves or in the subject under investigation. If it be a fact that religion and the soul of man cannot be in perfect harmony, or, in other words, if religious certainty be impossible, then are we forced to the conclusion that religion is unfitting for man, and man for religion; for where there exists no harmony, no certainty, no positiveness, there can be no fitness. It is an infallible sign that where doubt exists, there is also darkness; where religious uncertainty dwells, there is also a lacking of religious truth. One of the great characteristics of the ancient saints was, that it brought them knowledge. "We know," says the Apostle John, "that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness." This is something like the "fanaticism of the Mormons." Jesus, also, a most profound philosopher and the greatest of all theologians, declares that "if any man will do His (God's) will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." I think that no one will have the hardihood to say that He was a fanatic.

But how do the Latter-day Saints know that they are the people of God, and that their church is the church of Jesus Christ? I answer, firstly, by its strict analogy to the church as it existed in the days of the apostles, and the agreement of their faith with that of the ancient saints. This can be worked out by the simplest principles of logic. The form is the same in all its characteristics. Was that church organized with officers named apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, elders, &c? So is the Latter-day church. Did those inspired men teach faith in a present revelation of Jesus Christ, repentance, baptism for remission of sins, the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, the signs following the believer, the ministering of angels, and the inspiration of the Spirit? So also do the Latter-day Saints. And they defy the world to show even one principle or institution, received by the people of God of any age, that is not incorporated in the religion of the Mormons. I speak not of the law, for that was added because of unbelief.

In the second place, the Latter-day church is characterized by the power as well as the form. Tens of thousands will testify to the revelations of God, and the signs following the believers, and volumes of their testimony are printed and published to the world. But the skeptic will tells us that, by working ourselves up to a pitch of enthusiasm, and from trifling coincidents in our own experience, joined with the big things palmed upon us by a few designing men, we deceive ourselves in these things; and the mocking sectarian will say, "O, it is all delusion, imposture and fanaticism! Is this all the evidence the Mormons have to offer for the truth of their religion?" This is certainly a very easy but a very uncertain way of wiping out such a mass of testimony, and the intelligent truth-seeking man would not receive such arguments against this great Latter-day work. I would ask, can the skeptic say as much in favor of his infidelity, or the sectarian for his creed, as the Mormon does, in offering to the world a religion strictly analogous on all points to the faith and institutions of the ancient saints? No, he cannot! He is therefore a greater fanatic who rejects Mormonism, than he who receives it. To believe in such a work, is the necessary result of a strict logical investigation, while unbelief is the effect of bigotry, ignorance and priestcraft.

There is another point of evidence which all saints possess individually. And this evidence, although it be in harmony with perfect doctrine and organization, and with the testimony of each other, is nevertheless to an extent independent of them, and superior to all other demonstrations. This is a consciousness of the truth by the gift of the Spirit of God. To illustrate this point I will ask, how do we know that we exist? No one will consider the question fully answered by saying, that it is because we hear, see, speak, &c. In truth these are strong signs of life that are within, but anteceding and underlining these signs is a consciousness of existence. We know that we exist! The truth of Mormonism, then, is like the consciousness of every existence; every faithful Latter-day Saint is conscious of the divinity of his religion, and thus he knows. At first sight, this point of evidence might appear too fine to be admissible, but, if we analyze it, we shall find that it is perfectly legitimate. Indeed, some of the most exalted and glorious truths have their strongest proofs in our consciousness. They are forced upon us in spite of our ignorance, errors, and unbelief. Such are the existence of God, the immortality of the soul, and the fitness of religion to the condition of the human family. An instinctive consciousness of these truths is inborn in every man, although it is not fully comprehended or manifested in all persons in the same way. It burns in a greater or less degree in different natures, but still it is there; it glimmers even in the most depraved minds, and often finds the most beautiful illustration in the life and experience of the skeptic. Few if any thinking men would reject the evidence of their consciousness on these points. Yet how few will dare say that they are conscious that their interpretations of God, immortality and religion are the truth. Here, then, comes the wonderful authority of the gospel as restored to the Saints. They not only feel the existence of God, but are also as conscious that their faith proceeds from the Almighty, as they are that such a Being lives. And this, I think, is what Catholic, Protestant, or Dissenter will not dare say concerning their creeds. It must, however, be understood that the testimony of the Spirit of God, although superior to all other, is nevertheless in perfect agreement with reason and truth. That which does not agree with reason and revelation is not knowledge, but delusion. Therefore, although the sectarian should say that he is conscious of the truth of his dogmas, and the fallacy of the Latter-day gospel, inasmuch as it would disagree with the revelations of God and common sense, it should be treated by all thinking men as fanaticism. But when a religion bears a strict analogy to the faith and institutions of ancient saints—when it agrees with the simplest principles of logic, and the Spirit of God testifies of the truth unto our own souls, then can the tens of thousands who have received it declare that it is not fanaticism, but the work of Omnipotence!

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE ATLANTIC.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—The steamship Atlantic arrived off Sandy Hook this P. M., and was boarded by the news yacht of the associated press, and her news telegraphed to the city about two hours ahead of her arrival at her dock. The Atlantic met with an accident to her rudder head on the 16th, and was compelled to put back to Liverpool, where she was detained till Monday; she, therefore, brings dates to the 18th.

The news as to the war is unimportant.

The news from the seat of war is to Dec. 4th. Nothing could be done in consequence of heavy rains. The trenches were full of water and the roads impassable.

Omar Pasha was at Varna embarking nineteen battalions of troops for the Crimea.

Parliament had opened. The Queen's speech is wholly occupied with the war, except one sentence, in whtch the Queen says, "I have concluded a treaty with the United States, by which discussions long and difficult have been equitably adjusted."

The rest of the speech speaks of the army in the Crimea with admiration and gratitude; praises the co-operation of the French; says she has concluded a treaty with Austria, and calls for instant reinforcements for the Crimea. The speech had no effect on the funds; the debates on the address are interesting. A bill was read in the House of Lords to enlist a German Swiss Legion; also a bill in the Commons to send militia garrisons abroad. Nothing has been said of a loan.

The Danish Ministry has been reconstructed. Trade in China was dull.

Parliament has voted thanks to the army in the Crimea. The session depends upon government measures, but it will probably adjourn in about a week.

Gen. Osten Sacken has arrived in the Crimea, to take command of Danenberg's division.

A private despatch says that ratifications of the Austrian treaty were exchanged at Vienna, on the 14th. If the negotiations now pending do not produce a peace, Russia will call on the sixteenth man per thousand, equal to a million of men, to take the field as early as possible.

Karsen Pacha has been appointed Turkish Minister of Finance.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—The receptions by the President and members of the Cabinet, and the Foreign Ministers had been more generally observed than usual.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 1.—Advices from Texas state that Gen. Houston will resign his seat in the United States Senate at the end of the present session.

The Indians of Texas are disposed to settle on the lands reserved for them.

INDEPENDENCE, Jan. 1.—The Salt Lake mail, under charge of Mr. Emerson, reached here last night, bringing dates to the 3d. The party were compelled to pack through the mountains, there being from twelve to eighteen inches snow. Business is reviving a little at Salt Lake City. The new route from California to Salt Lake, avoiding the dangers on the Humboldt, was tried successfully by Mr. Greathouse, making the trip in twenty-five days.

A few Cheyenne Indians were met by the mail party. The weather was remarkably pleasant during the latter part of the journey. It has been ascertained by the Sioux Indians, themselves, that five of them, with a brother and son of the Big Bear chief, killed Jamison and party, to revenge the death of Big Bear, killed by the soldiers at Laramie, last August.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2, 3 P. M.—The steamer Daniel Webster has arrived with California dates to the 8th.

The steamer Star of the West left San Juan on the 23d ult., for New York, with 250 passengers and $700,000 treasure.

The California mails are quite unimportant.

A Russian privateer had arrived at San Francisco, having escaped from the Allied fleets,

The U. S. frigate Columbia, with Minister Wheeler and Ex-Consul Fabens on board, had arrived at Greytown, at which town there were eight British man-of-war.

The U. S. steamer Princeton was at Aspinwall.

Arrival of the Asia—Prospects of the war.

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—The Russian defenses on the south are estimated at one hundred guns stronger than when the seige commenced; while on the other hand, the British had erected a very powerful new battery, not yet opened, on an eminence north of the valley of Inkerman, commanding every house in Sebastopol, besides being another step towards the complete investment of the place.

Since the seige began two hundred British troops have deserted to the Russians. Deserters say that provisions and ammunition are becoming scarce in the city, but there was no panic.

It was observed that the Russians were arming their ships in the harbor, probably to attempt a surprise by sea.

THE DANUBE.—Five thousand French troops reached Constantinople on the 8th inst., on the way to the Crimea.

The contingent of Omar Pacha's force to be sent to the Crimea is now five thousand. Omar was to embark in a few days.

THE BALTIC.—As soon as the English fleet withdrew from the Gulf of Finland, the Russian Admiral Surrenoff put to sea from Sweaborg, on Oct. 14th, with nine ships and steamers, and was as far as Ligo on the 10th November.

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—The Asia arrived at Halifax at nine o'clock this morning, but the line to New York has been down most of the day.

The Baltic arrived out on Wednesday.

Affairs before Sebastopol still continue unchanged. The weather has been very bad and much sickness prevailed. The Russians made frequent sorties against the French, but were always repulsed with great loss on both sides. Reinforcements to both armies continue to arrive.

Prussia declined joining the Triple Alliance; but expressed a willingness to negotiate with England and France, and with that view a special Envoy had arrived in London.

Lord John Russell, in a speech in Parliment, looked confidently to an offensive and defensive alliance with Austria before the opening of the campaign. The foreign enlistment bill has awakened angry discussions.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Congressional—Dull Times in Washington—Political Topics in Washington—The Cuban Message—Warlike Appearances—Probable Change in the Cabinet—Marcy Changing Ground—Shirking Responsibility—Course of the Committee—Supreme Court—Bills Passed, &c.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30, 1854.

The Senate was in session a few moments yesterday, and the House to-day; but nothing was done, the session being held only with a view to adjournment till Tuesday next. Washington is now the most stupidly dull place imaginable, with an entire suspension of all business, both public and private, and without that extravagant and dissipated social gaiety which usually characterizes Washington society during the winter months. The President's levee on Monday next is looked to as the opening of the season, to be followed up by private soirees and parties till the close of the session of Congress.

The political circles are busily engaged in discussing the Kinney expedition, Molina's protest, and Marcy's reply; the Dominican treaty, the action of the British and French Consuls, and Cazneau's protest; the Gibson affair, and the American mediation resolutions; last, but not least, the forthcoming message from the President to Congress on the subject of Cuba, is to be enumerated as one of the favorite themes for comment and speculation. When the President's annual message was given to the country a voice of disappointment was heard coming up from every quarter, complaining that he had not even so much as complimented the Queen of the Antilles with a passing notice, although the Black Warrior outrage and many others of a similar character remained unsettled. This singular omission is chargeable to Mr. Marcy, who carries his peace policy to extremes, as is proven by the Gipson claim. As a dernier resort to save the sinking ship, the administration has at length determined to adopt the Ostend policy and kick up a war with Spain. The message is now in course of preparation recommending a resort to arms to enforce indemnity, and to seize upon Cuba. It will satisfy the cravings of the most reckless fillibusters, and must lead to the resignation of Mr. Marcy, who is opposed in toto to the whole movement, and the reorganization of the Cabinet. Such are the conclusions of the politicians here, drawn from very safe premises.

Mr. Marcy has prepared, in advance, a report to Congress; giving his reasons for not enforcing the claim of Capt. Walter W. Gibson, for indemnity against the Dutch Government. This claim was fully recognized by Mr. Marcy as being just, and Mr. Belmont was instructed to press it "temperately but resolutely upon the Dutch Government, and urge indemnity for the outrages." After this peaceful negotiation failed, and the Dutch refused positively to admit the claim of Capt. Gibson—charging that Capt. G. was the wrong-doer and "brought the evil upon himself"—then Mr. Marcy discovers, for the first time, that this Government cannot enforce the demand, as the outrage upon Capt. G. was clothed in judicial forms. He says, in his report of the case, that "we cannot go behind these judicial forms unless we yield to other Governments the same privileges as respects the proceedings of our own Courts. And why, I would ask in the name of our judiciary, should we shrink from any investigation into the character of our legal proceedings? If "we ask nothing but what is right, and submit to nothing that is wrong," why should we seek protection from the closest scrutiny into the justice and integrity of our "judicial forms?" And is it international that the Dutch Indians shall rob and imprison American citizens, and by cloaking the outrages with judicial forms escape chastisement? Humanity revolts at the idea. The sage conclusion of the Secretary of State comes rather late. He has been urging a claim for indemnity for outrages committed on Capt. Gibson by the Netherlands India. If that claim was unjust, he should not have sent the instructions he did to Mr. Belmont, our Minister at the Hague; if just, then he should not shrink from enforcing it, letting consequences take care of themselves. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the correspondence on this subject, will report at an early day in favor of enforcing the claim.

The Supreme Court will be engaged until Wednesday next, on cases No. 37, 38, and 39—McBlair et al. v. Oliver's executors. These cases depend upon the facts involved, and will consume much time in the arguments. The object of the appellants is to set aside a decree in bankruptcy, or be admitted as beneficiaries in the assets. The plaintiffs are Boston merchants.

Congress has passed sixty-one bills up to this time.

A firm faith is the best divinity, a good life is the best philosophy, a clear conscience the best law, honesty the best policy, and temperance the best physic.

AMERICAN VOLUNTEERS FOR THE RUSSIAN SERVICE.—Mr. Rosevelt, a lawyer of New York, who sailed in the Baltic last week, en route for St. Petersburgh, it is said, is to be raised to a Generalship in the Russian army. Several other Americans, it is reported, went out in the Baltic to proceed to Russia. The New York Sun says:

"Mr. Rosevelt has been engaged for the last two months in sketching the plan and calculating the costs of a campaign—all of which are reduced to paper, and capable of being rolled up into a compass sufficiently small to enable him to secrete it on his person without fear of detection. There are several persons of standing in this city who are familiar with the plans, having got their information from Mr. Rosevelt. They state that it is the intention of the Czar in the spring to open the campaign on the most formidable foundation, and to carry the war into Great Britain itself."

THE POSITION OF THE ALLIES.—The Allies in the Crimea have realised the fact that from being beseigers, they have, by the immensely superior force of the Russians, become in turn the beseiged. They are reduced to the defensive. The London Times says:

"A re-embarkation is out of the question. We have not the means of carrying our allies with us; and it were better to sacrifice every man and every gun than basely and meanly desert them. Indeed were we alone, such an operation in the face of such an enemy is not to be thought of. Howeves grave our situation may be, we are spared the fluctuations of doubt and the agonies of uncertain councils. There is nothing for the Allied armies in the Crimea but to maintain by their valor the position they have taken up, or to perish under the weight of overwhelming numbers. The hackneyed alternative "to conquer or die," was never put before an army in a more peremptory shape. This is their duty, and we doubt not they will do it. They know how to conquer and they know how to die."

It may not be generally known that editors get one important item of subsistence at a very low price—they get bored for nothing.

JOURNAL AT MADRAS.—Copies of the fifth and sixth numbers of the Latter-day Saints' Millenial Star and Monthly Visitor, edited and published by Elder R. Skelton, at Madras, have come to hand. It is an eight page periodical, of the same size of our Star. We rejoice to see that the faith and enterprise of our brethren in the east are making themselves obvious, and we congratulate the Saints in that portion of the globe on their possession of this new medium of intelligence, and also trust that it may prove a source of consolation, encouragement, and instruction to them, and a means of enlightening many honest hearts in the true principles of eternal salvation and eternal life.—[Millenial Star, (Liverpool,) Dec. 9th.

ONE OF THE MEN.—The Rockingham (Va.) Register thus describes a citizen of Pendleton county, Va., Frederick Keister by name:

"He is now in his 88th year, and has killed during his life one thousand deer, ten elk, three hundred bears, thirty panthers, and fifty-three wolves. Verily, he has slain his share of varmints. He was a volunteer in the whisky insurrection—has a very young wife, with two interesting young boys—"chips of the old block"—one two years old and the other four."

KOSTA AGAIN IN BONDS.—The Chicago Journal of the 13th inst., learns that Martin Kostza recently met with a fall, and through that means has again been captured. No Marcy-ful interference, however, will be expected, since the captive not only submits to his bonds, but actually boasts of them. The following is the account of the affair:

"In this city, on the 12th inst., by Judge H. L. Rucker, Captain Martin Kostza was married to Mrs. Lucinda McFall, of Chicago.

NARROW SOULS.—It is with narrow-souled people as with narrow-necked bottles—the less they have in them, the more noise they make in pouring it out.

A Mexican caught running away with a negro woman, was recently tried by a jury at Goliad, Texas, and sentenced to one hundred and fifty lashes, and to be branded with the letter T on his forehead.

Col. Benton and the Pacific Railroad.

The Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Times, writes:

Col. Benton says he has the Pacific Railroad in his pocket; that is to say, he has the names of twenty-three of the most eminent capitalists in the country, to be put into a bill, as the names of members of a company to whom Congress shall grant simply the right of way through the public lands for a railroad to the Pacific. These names were furnished him by Wm. F. Weld, the "Railroad king" of New England. Every man on the list is a millionaire, and, although some of them have not been consulted in the matter, Mr. Weld guarantees that all of them will consent to take part in the enterprise. The following is the list:

Hon Abbott Lawrance, William Sturgis, Robert C. Winthorp, Samuel Hooper, William Appleton, John M. Forbes, John F. Thayer, David A. Neal, H. H. Hunnewell, William F. Weld, William Amory, all of Boston; John C. Brown, of Providence, R. I.; Wm. R. Rodman of New Bedford, Mass.; Erastus Corning, of Albany, N. Y.; George Griswold, T. W. Perkins, Watts Sherman, R. H. Winslow, Edwin C. Litchfield, George Bancroft, Thomas Tileston, John A. Stephens, R. B. Minturn, all of New York.

Col. Benton proposes to introduce a bill giving these gentlemen the right of way for a road, leaving them to select the route, and giving no aid whatever from the Government, nor any promise of aid. He thinks he will get his bill through, and that the Company will go on with the work at once.

WHO FOUGHT THE BATTLES OF ENGLAD?—It appears that of the 1400 British killed at the battle of the Alma, no less than 759 were Irish.

STRENGTH OF THE PAPISTS.

With what success have the papists met in our land? Maryland was originally settled by them. Until the year 1820, Florida was as completely theirs as Cuba is at present. In Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, and all the territory west of the Mississippi, they held the ground, and had a golden opportunity of laying broad and deep their foundations. But in which of these States have they now a predominant control? In Maryland there are but 95 Papal churches, while there are 800 Protestant. Of 152 in Florida, 5 belong to the Pope. Of 278 in Louisiana, only 55. Of 133 in Texas, only 13. For the last fifty years Papal immigrants have landed on our shores by millions. There have also been monthly importations of ecclesiastics, who now number 7 archbishops, 33 bishops, and 1,754 priests. These have started and kept in operation 20 colleges, 20 theological seminaries, 120 female academies, and 53 weekly, 1 monthly, 1 quarterly, and 2 annual periodicals. How much have they gained on the Protestants? What is their comparative strength in numbers? The Protestant houses of worship, compared with the Roman, are 32 to 1. Unless we misinterpret the signs of the times, the Jesuits are on the wane. They have been sowing their seed in an uncongenial soil. They are multiplying their reapers, but are gatheting no harvest.

BE CAREFUL HOW YOU SPEAK.

Hush! why should you speak against the character of a female? It is all that she has to depend upon in this world. Just give the impression wings that she is not as good as she should be, and it will fly to every nook and corner of the town. The story you whisper will return in tones of thunder, to astonish even yourself, who was the first guilty wretch to repeat so base a story. A word has often proved the ruin of a virtuous soul—a word, thoughtlessly spoken it may be, but repeated by an evil mind. Suppress any thought, which, if uttered, might injure the character or feelings of another. A thought may be stifled at its birth, but a word spoken may never be lost. Weigh everything you utter, so that none may misconstrue or receive a wrong impression. Above all, never in a jest, whisper words, which, if true, would throw a blight upon a spotless reputation.—[Boonville Missourian.

MISSING VESSELS.—From the first of January last, up to the present time, as the Journal of Commerce states, the records show that fifty-two American vessels, of all classes, have been reported missing; and of this number forty-six have never been heard of. The total value of the vessels is set down at $595,700, and the insurance upon them at $343-000. The total number of seamen in them is estimated at 437.

THE BISHOP AND THE ARCHITECT.—The following story is told of the Bishop of London: Wanting alterations done in the palace of Fulham, he employed a first rate architect to inspect the building, and consult as to what was needed to be done. The business occupied the latter three or four hours, and the Bishop, on his report of the expense, determined not to proceed. He said, however, "Be good enough to tell me for how much I shall draw a cheque on account of the trouble you have taken." "I thank your lordship," was the reply, "a hundred guineas." "A hundred guineas?" "Yes, my lord." "Why many of my curates do not receive so much for a whole year's services." "Very true, my lord, but I am a Bishop in my profession." The cheque was drawn and handed over in silence, but the Bishop sighed as he thought how a mitred architect could charge the clergy.

A SENSIBLE DUEL.—A friendly duel, says the San Joaquin Republican, took place on Monday afternoon, at Moquelumne-hill, between Mr. Laforge, county clerk of Calaveras, and a Mr. Dudley. They chose the unique manner of squirting water at each other, to cool their wounded honor. One combatant supplied himself with the hose of the Union Water Company, the other with that of the Massachusetts Company. Marking the distance, which was about 20 feet, they commenced playing upon each other. The combatants withstood the cool application manfully for about ten minutes, when Mr. Dudley, thinking discretion the better part of valor, retired from the contest.—[N. Y. Herald.

REMARKABLE PREDICTION.—The following is taken from an old volume of predictions, written in the 15th century, and now in the possession of a gentleman residing at Chard, Somerset—

"In twice two hundred years the Bear
The Crescent will assail;
But if the Cock and Bull unite,
The Bear will not prevail.
In twice ten years again,
Let Islam know and fear,
The Cross shall stand,
The Crescent wane, dissolve, and disappear."

THE TRUE MEDICINES.—To feel well, you must take daily exercise in the open air. There is more vitality in half-a-dozen swigs at the fountain of pure oxygen, than in all the powders, pills, and other fixins of the whole race of potecaries.—[American Courier.

SIXTY YEARS AGO.—On Christmas Day, 1794, the ship Betsey, 190 tons was launched in Salem, thermometer 80 degrees at noon. The grease ran down the ways, and men and boys indulged in swiming as in summer.—[Boston Atlas.

A man came into a printing office to beg a paper. "Because," said he, "we like to read the newspaper very much, but our neighbors are all too stingy to take one."

Ladies wishing to punish their husbands, will do well to bear in mind that a little warm sunshine will melt an icicle sooner than a north-wester.

SPIRIT RAPPINGS.—Deputy Sheriff Higdon committed a resident of Hamiltown to the County Lunatic Asylum, yesterday afternoon, who has lost his reason through the influence of Spiritualism. For several days he had kept himself armed with a gun and a revolver, and occupied himself in shooting at imaginary objects.—[Cin. Times.

A man asked another, whom he was about to help to chicken, whether he wished the wing or the leg? "It is a matter of indifference to me," replied the other. "And infinitely so to me," replied the carver, laying down his knife and fork and resuming his dinner.

"Ma," said an inquisitive little girl, "will rich and poor people live together when they go to heaven?" "Yes, my dear, they will be all alike there." "Then, ma, why don't rich and poor Christians associate together here?" The rich mother did not answer.

BREAD OF LIFE.

Albeit for lack of bread we die,
Die in a hundred nameless ways—
'Tis not for bread alone we cry,
In these our later days.

It is not fit that man should spend
His strength of frame, his length of years,
In toiling for that daily end—
Mere bread, oft wet with tears.

That is not wholly good or gain
Which seals the mind and sears the heart,
The life long labors to sustain
Man's perishable part.

His is the need, and his the right
Of leisure, free from harsh control,
That he may seek for mental light,
And cultivate his soul;

Leisure to foster into bloom
Affections struggling to expand;
So shall his thought, with ampler room,
Improve his skill of hand.

And he should look with reverent eyes,
Sometimes, on Nature's open page;
Not solely are the wondrous skies
For school-man and for sage.

Earth's flower-hues blush, heav'n's star-lights burn,
Not only for the happy few;
To them the toiling man should turn,
For lofty pleasure, too.

But if ye take his blood for bread,
And drive him in one dreary round,
Since he and his must needs be fed,
Ye crush him to the ground.

His mind can grow no soaring wing,
His heart can feel no generous glow;
Ye make him that wretched thing—
A slave, and yet a foe.

Teachings of Joseph Smith, July, 1839; Brif Synopsis of Great Truths.

About this time, in reply to many enquiries, I gave an explanation to the Priesthood, and many principles connected therewith, of which the following is a brief synopsis:

The Priesthood was given to Adam; he obtained the first Presidency, and held the keys of it from generation to generation. He obtained it in the creation, before the world was formed, as in Gen. i, 26, 28. He had dominion given him over every living creature. He is Michael the Arch-angel spoken of in the Scriptures. Then to Noah, who is the angel Gabriel; he stands next in authority to Adam in the Priesthood; he was called of God to his office, and was the father of all living in his day, and to him was given the dominion. These men held keys first on earth and then in heaven.

The Priesthood is an everlasting principle, and existed with God from eternity, and will to eternity, without beginning of days or end of years. The keys have to be brought from heaven whenever the gospel is sent. When they are revealed from heaven, it is by Adam's authority. Daniel vii speaks of the ancient days; he means the oldest man, our father Adam, Michael; he will call his children together and hold a council with them, to prepare them for the coming of the son of man. He (Adam) is the father of the human family, and presides over the spirits of all men, and all that have had the keys must stand before him in this grand council. This may take place before some of us leave this stage of action. The son of man stands before him, and there is given him glory and dominion. Adam delivers up his stewardship to Christ; that which was delivered to him as holding the keys of the universe, but retains his standing as the head of the human family.

The spirit of a man is not a created being; it existed from eternity and will exist to eternity. Anything created cannot be eternal; and earth, water, &c., had their existence in an elementary state from eternity. Our Saviour speaks of children and says: "Their angels always stand before my Father."—The Father called all spirits before him at the creation of man, and organized them. He (Adam) is the head, and was told to multiply. The keys were first given to him, and by him to others. He will have to give an account of his stewardship, and they to him.

The Priesthood is everlasting. The Saviour, Moses, and Elias gave the keys to Peter, James, and John, on the mount when they were transfigured before him. The Priesthood is everlasting—without beginning of days or end of years; without father, mother, &c. If there is no change of ordinances, there is no change of Priesthood. Wherever the ordinances of the gospel are administered, there is the Priesthood.

How have we come at the Priesthood in the last days? It came down, down, in regular succession. Peter, James, and John had it given to them, and they gave it to others. Christ is the great high Priest; Adam next. Paul speaks of the church coming to an innumerable company of angels—to the judge of all—the spirits of just men made perfect—to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, &c.: Heb. xii, 23.

I saw Adam in the valley of Adam-ondi-Ahman. He called together his children and blessed them with a patriarchal blessing. The Lord appeared in their midst, and he (Adam) blessed them all, and foretold what should befall them to the latest generation. See D. C., sec. iii, 28, 29 pars.

This is why Abraham blessed his posterity—he wanted to bring them into the presence of God. They looked for a city, &c. Moses sought to bring the children of Israel into the presence of God, through the power of the Priesthood, but he could not. In the first ages of the world they tried to establish the same thing; and there were Eliases raised up who tried to restore these very glories, but did not obtain them; but they propesied of a day when this glory should be revealed. Paul spoke of the dispensation of the fullness of times, when God would gather together all things in one, &c; and those men to whom these keys have been given will have to be there, and they without us cannot be made perfect.

These men are in heaven, but their children are on earth. Their bowels yearn over us. God sends down men for this reason. Matt. 13—41; "And the Son of Man shall send forth his angels," &c. All these authoritative characters will come down, and join hand and hand in bringing about this work.

The kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard seed. The mustard seed is small, but brings forth a large tree, and the fowls lodge in the branches. The fowls are the angels. Thus angels come down, combine together, to gather their children and gather them. We cannot be made perfect without them, nor they without us. When these things are done, the Son of Man will descend, the Ancient of Days sit; we may come to an innumerable company of angels—have communion with and receive instruction from them. Paul told about Moses' proceedings, spoke of the children of Israel being baptized, &c. He knew this, and that all the ordinances and blessings were in the church. Paul had these things, and we may have the fowls of heaven lodge in the branches, &c.

The Horn made war with the saints and overcame them, &c., until the Ancient of Days came; judgment was given to the saints of the Most High from the Ancient of Days; the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. This not only makes us ministers here, but in eternity.

Salvation cannot come without revelation; it is in vain for any one to minister without it. No man is a minister of Jesus Christ without being a prophet. No man can be the minister of Jesus Christ except he has the testimony of Jesus; and this is the spirit of prophecy. Whenever salvation has been administered, it has been by testimony. Men of the present time testify of heaven and of hell, and have never seen either; and I will say that no man knows these things without this.

Men profess to propheay. I will prophecy that the signs of the coming of the Son of Man are already commenced. One pestilence will desolate after another. We shall soon have war and bloodshed. The moon will be turned into blood. I testify of these things, and that the coming of the Son of Man is nigh, even at your doors. If our souls and our bodies are not looking forth for the coming of the Son of Man, and after we are dead, if we are not looking forth, &c., we shall be among those who are calling for the rocks to fall upon us, &c.

The hearts of the children of men will have to be turned to the fathers, and the fathers to the children, living or dead, to prepare them for the coming of the Son of Man. If Elijah did not come, the whole earth would be smitten.

There will be here and there a stake for the gathering of the saints. Some may have cried peace, but the saints and the world will have but little peace from henceforth. Let this not hinder us from going to the stakes; for God has told us to flee, not dallying, or we shall be scattered, one here, another there. There your children shall be blessed, and you in the midst of friends where you may be blessed. The gospel net gathers of every kind.

I prophesy that that man who tarries after he has an opportunity of going, will be afflicted by the devil. Wars are at hand; we must not delay; but are not required to sacrifice. We ought to have the building up of Zion as our greatest object. When wars come, we shall have to flee to Zion. The cry is to make haste. The last Revelation says, "Ye shall not have time to have gone over the earth, until these things shall come." It will come as did the cholera, war, fires, and earthquakes; one pestilence after another, &c., until the Ancient of Days come, then judgment will be given to the saints.

Whatever you may hear about me or Kirtland, take no notice of it; for if it be a place of refuge, the devil will use his greatest efforts to trap the saints. You must make yourselves acquainted with those men who, like Daniel, pray three times a day to the House of the Lord. Look to the Presidency and receive instruction. Every man who is afraid, covetous, etc., will be taken in a snare. The time is soon coming, when no man will have any peace but in Zion and her stakes.

I saw men hunting the lives of their own sons, and brother murdering brother, women killing their own daughters, and daughters seeking the lives of their mothers. I saw armies arrayed against armies. I saw blood, desolation, fires, &c. The Son of Man said that mother shall be against daughter, and the daughter against the mother, etc. These things are at our doors. They will follow the Saints of God from city to city. Satan will rage, and the spirit of the devil is now enraged. I know not how soon these things will take place; and with a view of them, shall I cry peace? No! I will lift up my voice and testify of them. How long you will have good crops, and the famine be kept off, I do not know. When the fig tree puts forth her leaves, know then that the summer is at hand.

We may look for angels and receive their ministration; but we are to try the spirits and prove them, for it is often the case that men make a mistake in regard to these things. God has so ordained that, when he has communicated, no vision is to be taken but what you see by the seeing of the eye, or what you hear by the hearing of the ear. When you see a vision, pray for the interpretation; if you get not this, shut it up; there must be a certainty in this matter. An open vision will manifest that which is more important. Lying spirits are going forth in the earth. There will be great manifestations of spirit, both false and true.

Being born again comes by the Spirit of God, through ordinances. An angel of God never has wings. Some will say that they have seen a spirit; that he offered them his hand, but they did not touch it. This is a lie. First, it is contrary to the plan of God; a spirit cannot come but in glory; an angel has flesh and bones; we see not their glory. The devil may appear as an angel of light. Ask God to reveal it; if it be of the devil, he will flee from you; if of God, he will manifest himself, or make it manifest. We may come to Jesus and ask Him; He will know all about it; if He comes to a little child, He will adapt Himself to the language and capacity of a little child.

Every spirit, or vision, or singing, is not of God. The devil is an orator; he is powerful; he took our Saviour on to a pinnacle of the temple, and kept Him in the wilderness for forty days. The gift of discerning spirits will be given to the Presiding Elder. Pray for him, that he may have this gift.—Speak not in the gift of tongues without understanding it, or without interpretation. The devil can speak in tongues; the adversary will come with his work; he can tempt all classes; can speak in English or Dutch. Let no one speak in tongues unless he interpret, except by the consent of the one who is placed to preside; then he may discern or interpret, or another may. Let us speak for the glory of Abraham, Noah, Adam, the Apostles, who have communion with these things, and then we shall be among that number when Christ comes.

More Baptisms—Improving Prospects in Philadelphia and in New Jersey.

We called a conference in this city on the 2d of October, when there were reported 160 members, including Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons, all in tolerably good standing. This branch was left in my charge by Elder Jacob Gibson, now in the valley, four years ago last March; it then numbered 128 souls. Since that time, there have been 100 souls added by baptism; the greater part of this number have gone to the valley, and some have been cut off. The saints here are, generally speaking, in poor circumstances, but wish to gather as soon as possible.

Through the counsel of Elders William Walker and Henry Lunt, who lately passed through this city on their way to Liverpool, the saints have gone forth and renewed their covenants by being re-baptized, and I am happy to say that there is now a better feeling amongst them than there has been for many years. We have now a very large hall to meet in, and many strangers come to hear preaching, and I think there will be a good work done here this winter, from present appearances. We have organized the official members, and set them to work visiting the saints. We have the city divided off in wards, and require the officers to visit the saints, and make a report at the council meeting once a month.

During this summer, I, in company with Thomas Colborne and Elders Willam Trace and Skidmare, visited the saints at Toms river, New Jersey, where we found a branch of fifty-odd members. The saints there received us very kindly, and we found a good spirit prevailing in their midst. We held a conference, and 54 members were reported in good standing, including 4 Elders, 3 Priests, 2 Teachers, and 1 Deacon. Many good saints have been gathered from this place.

The fore part of this month I paid them another visit alone. I was with them 10 days. I preached every night I was there. We had full congregations; the people seemed to be interested in the truth. The result is, I have baptized 15 into the church, and re-baptized nearly all the members, who seem to have a desire to renew their covenants and start afresh in the work. There are many that are believing and will soon be in the church—amongst these is an old Methodist preacher.

Mormonism in the Crimea.

Elder J. F. Bell, President of the Malta mission, writes to President F. D. Richards, Liverpool, under date of October 15, 1854. From this letter, published in the Star, we extract the following interesting items:

Having received a batch of letters from the two branches of this church, now in the east, namely, the "Floating Branch," and the "Expeditionary Foroe Branch," and their contents being somewhat interesting, I send you the chief particulars, from which you will perceive that while war with its attendant horrors is raging, the gospel still progresses through the instrumentality of these brethren. For the mercies of God in preserving those brethren, and still adding to their number, we feel to return Him our heartfelt praises, and to call upon all saints to do likewise, and join with us in prayers for their continued preservation and prosperity.

From a letter from Elder H. Russell, 22d September, Sebastopol, I learn that on the 20th a battle was fought at a place called Alma, (2000 killed) in which our brethren were engaged, but no one was even wounded. Elder West of the 93d regiment had baptized one. From other letters, I learn of the baptism of two others, and that many were expected to enter the church when they could get into winter quarters.

From Priest S. Ballard, (Rifle brigade) I learn that he was invited by some Methodists to preside over their meetings. This invitation he accepted; but having convinced one of them of the truth of the work, the remainder broke up, and do not even meet among themselves. The one continues to investigate the work with increasing satisfaction, and is expected, together with another, to be baptized shortly. Brother Ballard is creating considerable stir in the Rifle brigade. He and a brother Paul of the Royal Sappers, meet nearly every night for prayer, that God will direct them to the honest in heart. If the work takes a start in that division of the army, it may extend from that to another, and so on. At present the baptisms have taken place in one division only.

Elder A. Downes, of the Floating Branch, has two persons ready for baptism the first opportunity they can get. He has sent me an order for books, &c. All the brethren of that Branch, and those of the E. F. Branch, were in good standing. There has been a frightful mortality from cholera, both in the army and navy. On board the Brittania, about one hundred deaths had occurred.

From the Branch in Malta, I may say we, are united and rejoicing in the work. Although cholera has raged on every hand and taken away many, yet it was only permitted to pay us a hasty visit, the ordinance of anointing proving, with God's blessing, efficacious in one moment, for which we ever feel to praise God every time we think of it.

THE FORLORN HOPE.—The editor of the Courier & Enquirer, who has recently returned from Europe, says that the 93d Highlanders, the regiment which received and repulsed the charge of Russian cavalry with such coolness on the 25th of October, has volunteered to lead the storming party when the breaches are opened at Sebastopol. Probably not one of the gallant fellows will live to know whether the attack is successful or not.

CATCHING THE "TARTAR."

One who has the entree among Friend-ly circles in this city, relates an incident in real life well worthy of record. Though it may be unnecessary, we will remark, by way of preface, that among Friends, as among world's people, all professions and all trades, from a doctor to a seaman, are represented; and, better yet, the close-fitting bonnets sometimes shade prettier faces, and the sober-hued dresses cover more kindly hearts, than you shall find in days of search among recognized beauties.

Well, a bevy of these fair ones were gathered last Saturday afternoon at the house of one of their number, whose father is a noted physician—a man with the prefix of C. for a name, (at least we will give him that name now.) It was an old fashioned sewing circle meeting. Garments were made for the poor during the afternoon—after tea the young men were to come, and they all expected "a nice time" before they went home. When they sat down at the tea table, all were in high glee, but their mirth was checked by the sudden sickness of the mistress of the mansion, then engaged in pouring out the fragrant beverage. She was obliged to retire. The food provided was excellent, and all appetites were good, so that her absence was less noticed than it otherwise would have been. After the meal was over, one young lady complained of not feeling well, and volunteered to keep company with Mrs. C.

It was nearly time to expect the young men, and amusements as well as occupations were at a stand still, when another of the guests was, or thought she was going to be sick, and off she went. Another and another complained and retired, until at last every one had gone to those unknown regions "up stairs." The parlors were deserted and dark—the young men arrived, and looked blank. The scene "up stairs" was, aside from the associations, extremely ludicrous. On beds, on lounges, on chairs, on rugs, and even on the carpets—wherever recumbent positions could be secured—our beauties were to be found, and each held fast for her own special use some wash bowl or other appropriate article. Have you ever visited the ladies cabin of a steamer or packet the first day out at sea? Here was a counterpart of the scene.

Presently the physician came home, but he could not relieve either his wife or her guests—at least not until he found out what the matter was. He called for the cook, but received no answer. Going to the kitchen he found the poor girl groaning and in terrible distress—and she had a bowl too. He visited the still standing table and carefully inspected the tea, apple-sauce, the preserves, the butter—every thing. He made no discoveries.

By this time the cook had partially recovered, and he took her to task. "What did you put into the biscuits to-night?" "Sure, nothing, zur, (oh dear, how sick I am,) only what I always does." "Well, show me what you always put in them." "Yes, zur, immagitly; but ye see me crame-o'tartar was all gone, an' so I got some in your room." "Have not I forbid your going into my room at all?" "Yes, indade, zur; but I couldn't help it, an' I ony got some crame-o'-tartar there; I'll show it to you." And she did show it, and it was "Tartar Emetic" she had used by mistake!

At a late hour that evening a file of carriages was drawn up before the door. The half-lifeless forms of the young ladies were borne to them, and slowly they were driven to their homes. The drivers averred that the whole of them had been poisoned. The procession had all the appearance of a noctural funeral.—N. Y. Sun.

LIKE BEGETS LIKE.

A few days since, a lady entered one of our dry goods stores on Merrimack street, and wished to examine some blue Thibets. She was informed that the last of "those blues" had been sold the day previous, but they had some green, which was a really splendid article, and would suit her just as well, "if she only thought so." "But I wish for blue," said the lady. "Yes ma'am, but you had better try this green; it will suit you just as well if you only think so." The storeeeeper evidently thought he had struck a bright idea, and kept insisting in about the same language. The lady finally concluded she would accommodate the gentleman, and allowed him, in accordance with his earnest request, to cut off some of the green. When the package was duly prepared, the lady moved towards the door, with a smiling "good morning, sir." "You have forgotten to pay me," said the storekeeper. "That's no matter," replied the lady; "it will suit you just as well, if you only think so," and she actually walked away leaving the gentleman pondering on the effect of his own wit, and the remarkable facility with which she "stole his thunder." The general opinion appears to be, the lady was not "green" if the Thibet was. We go in with the majority.—[Lowell News.

DEPARTURE OF THE CLARA WHEELER.—The Clara Wheeler, with 421 Saints on board, including infants, cleared for New Orleans on the 24th ult.

Elder Henry E. Phelps took the Presidency of the company, with Elders John Parson and James Crossly as his counselloas. We commend these brethren and their company to the watchful care and protection of our Heavenly Father, and trust that His blessings will constantly attend them in their journey to the land and cities of Zion.—[Millenial Star, (Liverpool,) Dec. 9th.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLRED.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.
Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

He came by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

THE WAY OF LIFE AND DOMINION.

BY ELDER JAMES A. LITTLE.

In the morning of creation, when Adam and Eve were still clothed in the glory and beauty of an immortal state, the Lord God said unto them, "Be fruitful, and multiply and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth."—Gen. i. 28. However short and simple this commission may appear when compared with its importance, we learn from this passage that God created Adam, and then authorized him to rule over all the lower orders of creation pertaining to this earth. We learn of no limitation to his authority, but rather that it extended to the subduing of whatever opposed him.

Lucifer, in choosing a channel of communication through which to tempt Eve, selected the serpent, because he "was more subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made." Satan appears to have exercised equal wisdom in selecting the woman as the object of his temptations. From her weakness he probably anticipated success, and he was not disappointed. Be this as it may, it is quite sufficient for us to know that Satan succeeded in his plans, and that the fall of man was accomplished through the disobedience of the woman. Although not directly asserted, yet it appears from the context, that on this account the Lord said to her, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee."—Gen. iii. 16.

However independent of Adam, Eve may be supposed to have been before the fall, after that event the Lord placed her in a secondary position, to share responsibility with, but at the same time under the direction of, her husband.

This placed the man at the head, and left no one betwen him and his Creator, to whom he was accountable for the use he made of his authority. Power and authority are invariable accompanied with responsibility, proportioned to their magnitude and extent. This responsibility was so great upon Adam and Eve, that by breaking through one restriction, they introduced the seeds of mortality in themselves, and implanted the principle of dissolution in all that beautiful creation over which they had been set to rule. From that time death has had power to destroy, and will continue to have until brought into subjection to the principle of life. We have not learned that the Lord has yet deprived men of that authority with which He originally invested them, or released them from any of its obligations.

If, through men, the earth and all things thereon have degenerated, then through their agency must all things be restored to their primitive purity and excellence, death be overcome, and eternal life again pervade all things.

These things open our minds to the practical application of the principle, that mankind are not only responsible for their individual acts, so far as they directly affect themselves, but also for the state or condition of whatever comes within their supervision or influence.

Having shown, to a very limited extent, the great responsibilities which rest upon men, I will endeavor to make plain to the understanding a few things which are necessary for them to do in order to fulfil those obligations in righteousness.

The spirit of man was, in the beginning, and still remains, a perfect organization in and of itself. It possesses the powers necessary for progression in the scale of intelligent organizations. It was organized from the elements of a celestial world, and is the living, acting principle of man. The tabernacle of flesh is a portion of grosser material, organized from the inferior elements of this terrestrial world, and is indebted to the life-giving power of the spirit for its superiority over the grosser matter with which it is surrounded. The body is given to the spirit as a starting point from which to increase in dominion, and the power of propagating eternal lives. Herein, then, is the foundation of all our glorious hopes for the future, in improving and perfecting the body, that it and the spirit may become perfectly united, blended together in all their operations, and fitted for an eternal union in the worlds to come. This is the starting of that great principle of union, which is to bind together all things on earth and in heaven. We must first be one within ourselves, before we shall have power to become one in each other, and finally one in Christ, as he is one in the Father, unto the perfecting of our salvation. From this it is evident, that our first duty is to subdue that evil which the Apostle Paul said was ever present with him, and acquire perfect control over the body, and bring it under subjection to the laws of righteousness, under which it was organized, and through the keeping of which, it will be enabled to attain the object of its creation. To accomplish this desirable end, and lay a foundation for an eternal increase, requires a constant exercise of the will, a rigid determination of purpose, and a concentration of action, aided by the enlightening influences of the Holy Ghost. The Lord, in His wisdom, has surrounded us with a chain of circumstances which compel us to exercise our faculties for the attainment of either good or evil, but it is left to us whether we will choose the good, and increase in the organization of life, or the evil, and go down to disorganization and death. These circumstances are necessary for the increase of our powers and faculties, through their being properly exercised. Only a very small portion of mankind have any adequate conception of their inherent powers, because circumstances do not develope them.

The proper use of knowledge already in possession, will not only continually develope the powers of life within ourselves, but will enable us to shed abroad its redeeming influences upon this creation, which through us has become degenerated.

Self government is the first principle of celestial law, the foundation of eternal lives, and the beginning of the means by which we can lay hold of the powers to come, and arrive at those exalted conditions which will fit us for the presence of the Father. Tyranny, avarice, murder, fornication, and adultery, with their many evil effects, including war, pestilence, and plague, which have filled the earth with mourning and sorrow, are the result of perverting to evil purposes those intellectual capacities, varied desires and inclinations, which were given to man for his growth in the principles of eternal life.

None are in the way which leads to a celestial glory, until they begin to restrain themselves, and control for righteous purposes these degenerating influences which have been increasing in strength for many generations, through the transgressions of their fathers, and make that use of every part of their organizations which will tend to increase their strength and power. All things which the Lord created were good when He finished them, and not only so in themselves, but adapted to good purposes. In all the dark catalogue of human passions and propensities, which corrode the hearts of men, and blight the better feelings of their nature, there are none but what, if controlled in righteousness, would become blessings, and tend to exaltation. Anger, when subdued and governed, gives determination of purpose, and energy of character. Courage is perverted when used to oppress the weak; or to shed the blood of the innocent. It was designed to stimulate to noble deeds, to succour the oppressed, and to sustain the principles of righteousness and truth. The desire to accumulate wealth and influence serves continually to develope the powers of the mind, in modifying and re-organizing the elements with which we are surrounded. When perverted, this desire leads men to intrude upon the rights of others, and to assume to themselves an undue share of the blessings of life, and to the exclusion of equal or superior worth. Men stimulated by a righteous ambition, will strive for power by doing good, and by being superior to others in everything which tends to perfection and happiness. We often think and speak of attaining to the powers of the world to come, as if it was the work of a few short years, and as though we expected an immediate transition from contact with the crude elements of this "dark and dreary world," into all the great responsibilities and exalted occupations of the next.

This terrestrial globe, with all its various organizations and laws of progression, is in the similitude of the celestial sphere where God the Father dwells. We find in this state of existence that men have to acquire knowledge by the slow process of experience, and that whatever they attain to that is great and good, has to be acquired by individual exertion and obedience to the known laws of nature. We appear to be incapable of progressing any faster than these means will admit of. When we are resurrected, if that resurrection is with the just, the circumstances which will then surround us will, no doubt, be far superior to anything we can now conceive of. We may safely conclude, then, that the attainment of all knowledge, and the possession of eternal kingdoms and crowns, are only to be acquired by what now appears to us, a long course of obedience to the laws of progression. We read in Rom. vi. 16, "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." From this passage, we learn that we are the subjects of anything which we allow to influence our actions, whether it be the spirits of darkness, a mesmeric operator, the love of strong drink, lust, avarice, ambition and pride, or those life-giving virtues which exalt the soul, make the mind cheerful, the body vigorous, and a fit temple for the Holy Ghost to dwell in. When the Holy Ghost dwells within us, it creates a heaven within and round about us, and fits us to dwell in the more refined elements of celestial life.

We read in Doctrine and Covenants, xxx. 1., that "the works, and the designs, and the purposes of God cannot be frustrated, neither can they come to naught, for God doth not walk in crooked paths, neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left, neither doth he vary from that which he hath said, therefore his paths are straight, and his course is one eternal round." From this passage it is evident that all things have been done according to a certain code of laws, which ever have existed and always will; that in past periods of time, it was necessary for those persons who have now arrived at the Godhead, to go through a preparatory work, similar to the one we are now engaged in on this earth. From this principle we may also conclude, that our Father in heaven was once as we now are, a sojourner upon an earth similar to this, where the powers of evil for a time held sway, to afflict, trouble, and perplex Him and His fellow-sojourners, and that He in this way learned to feel for the afflictions and infirmities of His children.

The Redeemer of the world was also a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." By experience He acquired a knowledge of evil, and overcame evil with good, and kept the law of righteousness, through which he obtained His exaltation as "King of kings and Lord of lords," "and sits high and exalted on the throne of His glory;" as it is written: "He received not of the fulness at first, but continued from grace to grace, until he received a fulness."

It was by no sudden transitions, no miraculous power, that these holy and exalted personages attained to their present position. They, like us, commenced to drink of some of the smaller streams which flow from the fountain of eternal knowledge. They received the ordinance of baptism, and the Gift of the Holy Ghost, and brought everything pertaining to themselves into complete subjection to the sanctifying influences of the latter. The Holy Ghost is a celestial power, forming a part of the Godhead, an emanation from its personages, and will lead to eternal life all who are the willing subjects of its influence. The more perfectly we are subservient to its power, the more it will increase upon us, until we shall be able to control others by its operations through us, and begin to bear rule in the kingdom of our God.

As is now required of us, so those who have gone before us learned the principles of self government before they acquired dominion over others. While in their low condition, the spirit of their Father rested upon them for their direction, comfort, and consolation, and revealed to them things in heaven and on earth, as fast as they were capable of receiving and making a proper use of them, for their own benefit, and the building up of their Father's kingdom. In the same manner the Spirit of our heavenly Father will rest upon us, as we purify ourselves from everything that is uncongenial to its nature, to turn the keys of knowledge, open up the fountain of wisdom, make us feel the preludes of eternal joys, and enable us to endure those trials and afflictions which we must pass through in order to be made perfect.

We talk of progression, and pray that we may arrive at perfection, but we never shall until we begin to practice what we believe, and strive to attain to that which we pray for. The way to arrive at this most desirable result, is to go diligently to work, and make ourselves, and the will of God concerning us, the great study of life; to examine ourselves thoroughly, and endeavor to understand wherein we have departed from the laws of nature in our habits of life, wherein we have introduced unnatural substances into our bodies, whereby they have been injured, and filled with imperfection, and then use every means in our power, and particularly call to our aid temperance, cleanliness, and a cheerful spirit, and by these means endeavor to remove our imperfections, and strengthen the principles of life. In doing these things we fit our bodies for the reception of the Holy Ghost, which will increase upon us in proportion to our exertions to become fit temples for it to dwell in.

The Lord is decidedly a being who will assist those who help themselves. He has brought us into this probation, with the power of choosing what we will serve. All nature, in its various spheres, has been created under fixed laws for its government; and through obedience to these, each part exercises its proper influence over those which surround it But in addition to this, the Lord has bestowed upon man the power of free agency, to obey or disobey these laws, and thereby to choose life or death.

There is a principle which pervades all the various orders of creation, powerful in its effects, yet so common in its operations, that it has as yet received but little attention. This is that power which one organization possesses over another, usually called influence. We live, and move, and are moved upon, by its operations. This principle, like everything else pertaining to man, is capable of being used by him for good or evil. We see abundant illustration of this principle in the every-day transactions of life. If two persons meet, excited with anger and a desire to injure each other, they come in collision, and the spirit increases in both. On the contrary, if one is possessed of the spirit of kindness and forbearance, and is determined to exercise it, he will at least modify the disposition of the other, and generally bring him under his influence.

It is a true maxim that like begets its like, and men are responsible for the use they make of this power in instilling a good or evil spirit into other persons or beasts who may come within the range of their influence. There are thousands of men who are not fit to have even the control of a brute, for instead of improving its nature by kindness and good treatment, they impart to it their own vicious and vindictive temper, and then abuse it the more for the very evils of which they are the authors. The query naturally arises in our minds, What are such persons good for in this world, who thus become the fountain of evil? or, what are they preparing to be in the next? They cannot control themselves nor any living thing upon the principles of righteousness. Instead of improving the small portion of creation which comes under their influence, they corrupt and degrade it. The principle of salvation is not in such men, and what they seem to have will be taken away and given to those who will improve upon it. Those who pervert the blessings of the Lord will be placed among elements for which they have prepared themselves. We are, and ever shall be, wholly incapable of saving others, unless the principle of salvation exists in ourselves.

We are told in the Scriptures that God is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. This being the case, it is evident there is a certain code of laws governing and controlling all matter, and through which the Lord performs all His operations, and by which He makes those changes and modifications in His creations which he desires for the accomplishment of His purposes. There is an immense variety in the gradations of matter, and also an equal variety of laws by which that matter is governed. The lesser sphere is governed by the higher, through an infinite succession of intelligencies. Therefore, whatever changes are necessary are brought about by the higher law which governs those portions of matter to be operated upon. Consequently, there are no miracles, according to the generally received understanding of the word, viz., something done contrary to the established laws of nature. God is a God of order, and not of irregularity and unnatural disturbance. It may be asked, what has this to do with the principles of self government? I answer, everything. We need not expect the Lord to perform some unnatural act to accomplish our salvation, but in order to attain it, He expects men to keep the laws of their sphere, even as He observes the laws of that in which He moves. To keep these laws, is to increase in the principles of eternal life; to break them, leads to disorganization, or eternal death.

The Holy Ghost is a natural element, it works in a natural way, and its operations produce natural and unavoidable results. It cannot produce the same beneficial effects upon those whose bodies are unclean, whose blood is corrupted with the deleterious influences of tobacco, tea and coffee, impregnated with the fumes of alchohol, or weakened and enervated by gluttonous habits or undue indulgence in the gratification of lustful desires, as it can upon those bodies whose blood is undfiled, and pure, and who are not lavish of the principles of life and vitality—in short as those who keep the laws of nature, as made known by reason and the light of revelation.

It is evident that to secure our salvation, requires great individual exertion and self government. The Lord has opened up the way, shown us the road to travel in, and gives His Holy Spirit to all who will prepare themselves to receive it and obey its influences, that their minds may be enlightened and their understandings quickened, that they may not go astray. If we revert back to the early ages of the world, and consider the perfection and purity of the bodies of Adam, Enoch, Methuselah, and others who lived upon the earth for several centuries in vigor and strength, and then reflect upon ourselves—the weak and effeminate creatures of a few days, or years at the most, we can form some little conception of how low mankind has fallen. There was nothing miraculous or supernatural in those ancient worthies living hundreds of years. They lived because the principles of life were so strong that the elements had not power to overcome them. In those early ages, men had not become such adepts as have later generations in perverting the blessings of the Almighty, and turning them to evil. Mankind soon conceived a great variety of evil desires in their hearts, and found means to gratify them. The work of degeneration has progressed from age to age, until in these days the minds of men are the fountains of every debasing desire, millions are begotten in corruption, and born into the world filled with weakness and imperfections from the sins of their fathers. In such the vital principle is but a flickering flame, that some slight puff of the elements blows out. Men fall by thousands—death claims them as his own, because the power of life is not in them.

We live in the dispensation of the fulness of times, when all things are to be restored as at the beginning; yes, in that dispensation when men are to be raised up who shall possess that strength of body, and those powers of vitality and life, which characterized the worthies of early times, and which will enable men to live hundreds of years to do the work of the fathers, become saviours upon Mount Zion, and co-workers with the Lord Jesus in subduing everything which opposes the kingdom of God. The query arises, how is this great and wonderful change to be brought about? We must conclude that the evil having come by a natural process, by the same means must also come restoration and salvation. The starting point is in ourselves, and here we must lay the foundation. On the men and women of this generation, who obey the Gospel, devolves the responsibility of commencing this work, by beginning the reformation within themselves, learning their own imperfections, and then acquiring the knowledge of, and putting in practice, the means of remedying them. If parents will follow this course through life, and bring their children up in the belief and practice of the principles of life, and teach them to know themselves, the end of their creation, and to keep diligently the commandments of the Lord, they will grow up far superior to their parents in body and mind. When this is done we may expect, if the true children continue the work of the fathers, that not many generations will pass away until men will not only live three score and ten years, but just as long as life may be desirable, and then the transit be easy from a mortal state to immortality and eternal life. Then the visions of eternity will be opened to men, the vail of futurity raised, and they be fitted for the society of angels and just men made perfect.

Through the improvement of man, nature would also become renovated, and all things be gradually prepared for the change to a celestial state.

ISRAEL'S LAND AND ISRAEL'S PROMISES.

There is now, and I doubt whether there ever was not, since the days of the captivity of the land, a marked difference, between the land of Israel and the land of Judah. True, nature has done some of it, but not all. Why should not springs and brooks flow from the hills of Judea as freely as from the hills of Ephraim and Samaria? In form and composition they are the same; and, what is in their favor in this respect, they are larger and more in number. But they do not. Water is their greatest want. Much more artificial irrigation is needed here than further north. It is this dryness and heat of the soil that makes this part of the country so much more adapted to vines and figs than further north. These thrive best in a hot and dry soil. As a general rule, we may say, the land of Judah for fruit, the plains for bread-grains and vegetables, and the hills of the northern part of Canaan, Gilead, and Bashan, for pasturing. Like all other rules of this kind, this has many exceptions. All countries of similar latitude to this have a rainy and a dry season. The causes for these rainy and dry seasons it is not necessary for me here to explain. But it is a thing, however, that is now well understood. The rainy season commences about the first of November, and lasts till April. During the first half of the time it rains often and hard—almost every day—generally in the afternoon. As soon as the rains commence, and the hard and baked earth is sufficiently softened to admit of it, ploughing is commenced, and the seeds are sown as the occasion requires, through the whole of the wet season. When the rains cease, sowing ceases altogether; and during the time from April to November, they have one unclouded sky. Then all vegetation which cannot stand this drought, withers down, and its roots rest (as the roots of our plants do in winter) till the rains again commence, which is spring-time to them. Now, when things are thus situated, it must be very obvious to any one, that the longer or later the rains continue, the greater will be the amount and perfection of the produce of the land; and the shorter the time of the rain, the sooner will all be dried up, and the crop cut short.

The Israelites were often threatened by Moses and the prophets that, in case of disobedience, "the rains should be withheld." If they were withheld, they must, of course, be shortened in duration. Now, the rains that fell in the latter part of the rainy season, and especially those that fell after the usual period for them to cease, were called the "latter rains." These occasional showers, if continued through the time of the ripening of the fruit and grain, would add greatly to their abundance and perfection. The withholding of them would have the contrary effect. The withholding the "latter rains," and the promise of "their return," are things often spoken of in Scripture. These latter rains have been withheld century after century, till the land has been brought into the state that we now find it; and there can be but little doubt but that the return * of these rains again will be the means that God will employ to restore the land to its ancient fruitfulness. If we had no Scripture to bear us out in this opinion, we should be well assured of it, from the well-known scientific fact, that all soils require a certain amount of rain to carry on the decomposition of mineral matter in sufficient quantities for the supply of the crops. This is especially necessary in such a geological formation as the land of Palestine. So we see that there is no physical obstacle in the way, for God has the means close at hand, whenever the time for him to do it comes. For this event we can all adopt one of the expressions in a Jewish prayer—"The Lord hasten it, even in our day." And one fact there is that I will mention, that looks somewhat as though this prayer might be answered, "even in our day;" for since the efforts that are now making for the improvement and settlement of the Jews in Palestine commenced, the rains have fallen more than they have for many an age before. No question is more often asked respecting this land, than "What can be done to reclaim it from its barrenness?" I know not that a better answer can be given than this—Cultivate it, and trust the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob for the "former and latter rains."—[Jewish Chronicle.

* Within ten years these latter rains, as a matter of fact, have again appeared. The party who have gone from America to conduct an agricultural enterprise in Palestine, learn from the inhabitants that they have lately had showers in April, after the close of the usual rainy season, which phenomenon has not been witnessed by their ancestors for generations back. This party also bear witness to the same fact. Having been there two or three seasons, they have witnessed the fall of copious showers in April and May.

FEARFUL FOREBODINGS.

A letter from an intelligent and highly respectable American, sojourning in France, to the National Intelligencer, after stating what he considers the present aspects of the war, says:

"It is, I fear, but the prelude to a general war over all Europe, which will convulse the civilized world; destroy thrones, create new kingdoms, illusory and momentary republics, vandalism, taxes, paper money, loans, general distress and ruin, and horrible carnage."

The careful readers of prophecy have long looked for such convulsions in this age of the world's history. The fact that they come in fulfilment of prophecy, proves that "the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth," and that terrible as these things are in themselves, they are the necessary precursers of a brighter day, when pure Christianity shall bless all nations.

Questions Answered—Tithing and Emigration.

We have questions asked frequently by letter from Elders, and others, at a distance. And which to save having to answer them many times over, we will answer in the Luminary, believing that they will be beneficial to the saints generally who are scattered abroad.

Question.—Is it the duty of the saints, scattered throughout the United States and British Provinces, to pay tithing before they go to Salt Lake? Ans. Yes; and if they are not willing to do it, they are not worthy to go there and receive an inheritance among the saints. To whom shall they pay it? Ans. To Elder Taylor in New York, Elder O. Spencer in Cincinnati, and myself in St. Louis. What shall they do who have barely enough to enable them to emigrate? Come up hither and I will tell them. Is it the counsel of the church for those who are unable to go direct to Utah to gather into the region of St. Louis and Cincinnati. Ans. Yes, unless they are well situated, and doing good for themselves and the Church, where they are. Is it the duty of the rich to help the poor to emigrate? Ans. They should first pay their tithing, and then seek the councils of the Lord and his servants, what to do with the balance of their means. It is better for all concerned to loan them means, or to emigrate them at a given price, and take their obligations for it, to be repaid when they are able to do it, than to give it to them, unless it be a faithful and tried friend, to whom you wish to make a freewill offering. But, as a general thing, those whom the Lord has favored with this world's goods, would do better to donate liberally of their substance to the Perpetual Emigrating Fund, which is an auxiliary to the Church, and under the control of the President, and designed to assist those who try to help themselves, and who have been proven and found worthy. These obligate themselves to pay the Fund for their emigation, that the same means may be again sent out on its errand of mercy to hunt more of the Lord's poor. This method of assisting the poor teaches them to be grateful for the aid afforded them, and to manifest their gratitude by their works. Then, again if any who have thus been assisted, forget God and his cause (as is sometimes the case when they begin to prosper) and wish to run off to California or elsewhere, to serve the Devil, they find there is a bill to be settled for their emigration before they leave. Thus the means which God bestows upon us to do good with is wrested from those who prove themselves unworthy of it, and bestowed upon others.

Since our last number was issued the Salt Lake mail has come to hand, bringing news up to the 20 December. Our space will not permit us, this week, to give a full acconnt of the very interesting news received, but we promise a brief summary of the leading items, which will be interesting to our readers, both in this city and abroad.

The harvest has been plentiful and abundant throughout the the Territory; the weather has been remarkably fine; the general health of inhabitants excellent—very few cases of sickness known. The markets are good. Corn and grain of all kinds are in constant demand by California and our own emigrants, as well as by the United States troops located in Utah.

The Bowery is fast progressing. Large and superior dwelling houses are being built in all parts of the Territory. Forts and fortifications are progressing rapidly in all the settlements. Grist and saw mills are multiplying in every direction. City halls, council houses, music halls, seminaries, and other public buildings are already erected, or in course of erection, beautifying the cities of Utah.

Our Indian relations are good. The Indians around Nephi, Manti, Fillmore, and other cities, are said to be very friendly. Walker and several of his band passed through Parawan early in Nov., and appeared very friendly. A large number of his tribe were met in Beaver valley; they felt well, did not beg, but wished to trade.

Col. Steptoe and several of his company have visited some of the southern cities. They were pleased with the condition and appearance of the different settlements, remarking that they were never more kindly received and courteously treated, nor did they wish to be.

Our home manufactories are increasing and improving, and bid fair, ere long, to surpass those of older Territories and States; but our population is increasing likewise; and notwithstanding the immense quantity of merchandize sent across the plains from this city and elsewhere, the demand is still greater than the supply.

Education forms a prominent feature in the news. The strongest plea for education is by the editor of the Deseret News—A. Carrington. He says, "we have comfortable dwellings built, good farms opened, plenty of stock around, abundance of provisions, large wood piles, and a school-house in nearly every ward in our Territory, and have the best and most intelligent set of children in all the earth."

The article contained in our columns, by Truman O. Angel, architect, will give our readers a pretty full description of the temple of the Lord, now being erected in the tops of the mountains. We advise you to pay your tithing and help to build it, that when you go up to the valley you may be entitled to enter unto it, and receive the promised blessings.

It must be cheering to the Saints to learn this good news of the condition and prospects of the Saints in Utah. A different scene is presented, by our correspondence, to the scenes enacted in other cities, territories and countries. While turmoil, distress, poverty, rowdyism, murders, arson, adultery, revolutions, and bloody wars, are weakening, perplexing, and desolating almost every other people and country, the Saints in Utah are enjoying universal peace and prosperity. All nature is smiling around them; her blessings are profusely lavished upon them—the blessings of the ancient mountains and the lasting hills—the blessings of the breasts and of the womb—the blessings of the rich valleys and the fruitful plains—and above all, the blessings of the holy priesthood, which the Lord hath restored, by which these blessings shall be sealed upon the heads of the righteous, and their seed for ever and ever. And there is nothing to hurt or destroy in all the holy mountain. Savage and ferocious beasts have occasionally appeared among them, but the intrepid mountaineers have caught them, destroyed their fangs, and sent them growling to their dens. So bold and resolute are these men, that it is said, if their leader should but crook his finger, their antagonists would never leave with a whole skin.

The articles in our columns concerning the feelings and movements of the Jews, and the blessings of the Lord upon their land, will be read with interest and pleasure by all lovers of truth who may read them; showing, as they do, that the Lord our God is working in the hearts of that people, leading them to gather themselves together upon their own lands, in this generation, that the prophecies of the prophet Joseph may be fulfilled concerning them.

LITERARY NOTICE.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL TO SALT LAKE VALLEY.

We have before us several copies of a first class work edited by James Linforth, illustrated by a series of splendid steel engravings and wood cuts, from sketches made on the spot and from life, in 1853, exclusively for this work, by Frederick Piercy. It contains a complete description of the route from Liverpool to Salt Lake Valley. It is to be completed in 14 monthly parts, at 24 cents each. We cannot speak too highly of the character and excellence of this production, which we consider far ahead of any work ever published on the subject. We recommend our readers to subscribe for it, and judge for themselves.

EMIGRANT SAINTS FROM LIVERPOOL.—By letter from Pres't. Richards, shipping agent at Liverpool, dated Dec. 22, we learn the Clara Wheeler sailed again on the 7th Dec., and all was well on the 10th, when she parted with her Pilot 150 miles out.

The Hilois, with a large company of saints, including 210 P. E. Fund passengers, under the presidence of Elder Richard Balintyne, cleared for New Orleans on the 20th Dec., but owing to a slight casualty, she had been detained, and had not yet left the Mersey when the letter was written. Four hundred and forty-six Scandinavian saints where also on the way from Copenhagen and hourly expected at Liverpool.

We are indebted to Hon. John M. Bernhisel, Delegate from Utah, for papers and public documents. We have also seen his very able vindication of the conduct of Gov. Young and the people of Utah from the foul slanders of the newspaper press, which appears in the Washington papers of the 4th inst., but which came to hand too late for this weeks issue, but we will give it to our readers next week.

Correspondence of the Luminary.

FROM THE HIGH COUNCIL.

Beloved Brethren and Sisters—Being associated with you from time to time, we know there are some things that it is necessary to remind you of, as regards your several duties in the kingdom of God, to his Priesthood on the earth, and to yourselves.

Beloved Brethren and Sisters, the Lord requires you to obey his commandments now, as much as he did when you came into his kingdom; you felt it a duty then to bow to his commands, and knew it was right for you to do so, in order to obtain the blessings you were then seeking for; and the blessings you then enjoyed came through obedience to the commands of the Lord through his servants, and every blessing that you ever will receive, must and will come through the same channel. Then we would ask you, do you yet enjoy these glorious privileges? If you do not, whose fault is it, yours, or the Lord's? We answer, the fault is on your own side, for your Heavenly Father is as ready to give to you to day as he was when you first obeyed the Gospel. You then held in high esteem his authorities upon the earth, and have testified from time to time, that you knew they were the servants of the Lord, and when you said so, you felt that the spirit of the Lord bore witness to the same. Through this means, you showed your duty to God by respecting and holding up by your prayers and faith the Lord's authority upon the earth. Is it not as binding upon you now? We say it is, if you are still in the possession of the same spirit. Has not God, in and through his son Jesus Christ, given you the means for you to obtain salvation? He has. Then every truth you are in possession of, all the good you can do, everything you enjoy—whether temporal or spiritual—even yourself, wives and children, all belong to him, and he has only placed you as a steward over the same, and in his own due time he will call upon you for an account of your stewardship. Then before that time comes, do your duty to the Lord and yourself, by calling around you every morning and evening, your family to prayer, and before you partake of the food to sustain life, ask the Lord to bless it, that it may do you good, for the Lord most assuredly requires you to do this, in order that you may show your respect to him before your family, that your family may take pattern by it and respect you; but on the other hand, if you see no necessity in those things, but say you will pray when it suits you, you will ask a blessing on the food you eat when it suits you, you will assemble with the saints when it suits you, you will obey the servants of the Lord that are set over you when it suits you, depend upon it you are setting a bad example before your children, and when they grow up they will do the same things, unless they fall into the hands of those who will teach them the ways of the Lord; but inasmuch as you will do the things that the servants of the Lord require you to do, no matter how simple they may appear to be to you, the Lord will pour out his blessings upon you that will cause your hearts to rejoice. On the other hand, if you reject the council and will of those men that have been sent to preside over you in this stake of Zion, you will find that you are walking in the broad road that leadeth to distruction, instead of being saved in the kingdom of God.

Then, Brethren and Sisters, our desires and prayers for you are that you contend for that faith which was delivered to the saints, and do everything that shall be required of you, in order that you may obtain eternal lives in the kingdom of God. Even so. Amen.

Written in behalf of the High Council.

MILO ANDRUS, Pres't.

J. S. CANTWELL, Cl'k.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 8th, 1855.

DEAR BR. SNOW:—I resume my pen to communicate through the columns of the Luminary a few things that I trust will be of benefit to your readers. Since my last, I went, in company with many of the St. Louis Saints, on the 1st of this month, to a New Year party, held in Gravois branch. We arrived about 12 o'clock, and enjoyed ourselves, in company with the Saints at Gravois, with a walk in the woods. It was a delightful day—the weather as warm as spring. The hills were dressed with a mantle of green grass; the scene was calculated to move the heart of man with a degree of the inspiration of heaven. The groups of merry boys and girls showed that they were enjoying a happy new year. At half past five P. M., the meeting room was filled with a goodly company of Saints, whose cheerful faces plainly bespoke that they had come with the full intention of enjoying themselves. We sat down to a fine old English tea; after the tables had been replenished three times, and all satisfied, the tables were cleared away, the meeting called to order, and prayer offered up in thanks for past blessings; then followed speaking and singing, which lasted until half past ten, when the company were dismissed. All repaired to their homes in peace, having enjoyed one of the best new year days that they had ever enjoyed in this country. The spirit of friendship seems to be on the increase. I pray the Lord to bless the Saints in Gravois. While numbers there feel to thank the Lord for the prospect which I think is dawning among them, there is more interest manifested in the sacred principles of the Gospel there, than heretofore.

I now wish to turn your attention to this city, and our prospects here since my last communication, December 20. On the second of January, the Elders and other Quorums met in the basement of the church. I attended; and from hearing the testimonies of their own feelings, and of the Saints, so far as they had power to discover, all seemed to speak highly in favor of that reformation so nobly commenced in Utah, and working its way into every mission throughout the world. It makes every officer who is posted in any position in any part of the great harvest field, feel bold and determined to thrust in his sickle, and reap and gather the vine of the earth that is worthy of being gathered. I pray the same all-inspiring spirit may be in every officer and member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. There has been four added to this branch by baptism since December 20th, and there are others on the eve of entering in by the same door. Re-baptisms are also of weekly occurrence, showing a disposition in the Saints to obey counsel and renew their covenant. I feel to bear testimony that the word of the Lord is like a two-edged sword, and when wielded by a skillful officer, cuts its way and causes the hearts of those who feel disposed to practice iniquity, to tremble and fear.

I have received several communications from various parts of Utah, by the mail of the 16th. I select a few extracts that I know will be interesting to the Saints.

Elder Esaias Edwards writes from Toole city. He states that the commanding officer of the United States troops now in the Territory, had forty square miles surveyed of the best portion of Rush valley, lying about ten miles south of the city, where they have all their horses and mules stationed, in consequence of which it makes a ready market for flour, beef, oats, corn, vegetables, butter, cheese, and eggs. The prices are—flour, $5 per 100 lbs.; oats, $1.75 per bushel; corn, $2 per bushel; potatoes, 75 cents per bushel; butter 50 cents per pound; cheese, 25 cents per pound. It is also reported that the main California road to Carson valley will go through the city, there having been a new route discovered south of the desert, making the distance about 300 miles less, with plenty of grass and water. He states there never was such universal prosperity in that city since its first location.

The next extract is from Elder Isaac Bowman, dated Nov. 30. He states that the weather was very fine, health good, money plenty, and all kinds of business lively; the produce market good for the farmers—the improvements in the city, in the way of building, during the past year, without a parallel, there having been about 300 good buildings put up during the past year. He says that notwithstanding the great quantities of goods taken to Utah by the various merchants and traders, there will not be sufficient to last till spring, so great is the demand.

In consequence of the United States troops in the city and Territory, and California emigrants that are wintering there, drunkenness was found to be on the increase, in consequence of which the City Council have annulled all licenses for distilling and retailing liquor in the city. He also states that President Young has commanded all the Presidents, from the first quorum to the last and least, to purify themselves, and purge their Quorums of all evil doers, that a pure people may remain, that will do the will of the Lord in all things.

Another extract from Elder Joseph Cain, says that there has been a new route discovered to Carson valley, saving 400 miles; it goes west from Toole, and south of Marys river. He also says that brothers C. B. Huntington and S. A. Kinzie, who had just returned on the route, say there is plenty of grass and water every day, and a first rate road. This confirms the statement made by brother Edwards. I would also add that letters from my family bring the joyful tidings that all is well in Utah, so far as the Saints are concerned.

Dear brethren and sisters, I hope you'll strive to lay hold of the spirit of reformation, and purify yourselves that you may meet your brethren and sisters ere long in the valleys of the mountains, and be prepared to partake of the greater blessings of the Lord taught by his servants.

I am, as ever, your servant for Christ's sake and the Gospel's. MILO ANDRUS.

LETTER FROM BR. TYLER.

Elder Oscar Tyler writes from Texas, as follows:

DEAR BR. SNOW:—Although I have not a personal acquaintance with you, yet I feel it my duty to write to you. I was sent to Texas by last April conference. My kin-folk are all living here, among whom I was raised.

If you never saw a raw or green hand at the work, you might see one in me, for I feel that I am one; but the Lord blesses my work until I am almost astonished at myself. I have baptised seven of my kindred, and some more of them are believing. Some who were very friendly with me before I baptised any, have now turned their back upon me. I have been preaching around in other places with more or less success.

Texas is a very wicked place; but there are as good people scattered about in this country as anywhere else; and it is my desire to be an instrument in the hand of the Lord in finding them, and convincing them of the truth of the Gospel of Christ.

Brother Blair is doing a great work here, in which I rejoice.

I find I am not in the quiet valleys of the mountains; the powers of darkness prevail here to a great extent, and sometimes are ready to lay hold of me any how; but the Lord has blessed me so far, and I doubt not but he will do so to the end if I am faithful.

I see the blessing pronounced upon my head by the servants of the Lord in Salt Lake City, have been literally fulfilled.

Yours in the Gospel of Christ,

OSCAR TYLER.

For the Luminary.

LETTER FROM ELDER BLAIR.

Elder Seth M. Blair writes from Port Sullivan, Texas, dated Dec. 11th, 1854. We give the following extracts:

BELOVED BR. SNOW—The friend of the God and the servant of the people—I have this moment received your interesting letter, which gave me much joy, and caused me to be filled with renewed energy and vigor (if it is possible in the work in which we are respectively engaged).

I have, since I last wrote you, Nov. 8th, traveled and preached, bore my testimony, and counselled people continually in the way of truth and righteousness, having traveled 400 miles, which labor will augment my little company some eight or ten more, I believe; and among the number will be one, if not three, of my brothers. My old friends have received me kindly. A favorable impression is created, I think, with all with whom I have met. I have called upon some of the members of the Legislature, my old friends, and gave them the right end of Mormonism, too; they willingly exchanged it for the one they held.

I feel my labor and service has been a blessing, so far, in this land, to many; and the effect will be felt in my own family, and among my own connections. The field of labor I have traveled and preached over is from 50 to 200 miles, and that in every direction around me. I have now an invitation to preach in old Gen. Wilson's neighborhood, Washington county, some sixty miles south, where I intend to hold a protracted meeting. (Wilson is an old Mobocrat.) The people met in that neighborhood and took a vote upon my preaching there, and I won the election. Mormonism is the luckiest trump I can hold.

I have just returned here from Camp Jeddy, where already some of the Saints have assembled, and where we are wintering our stock.

The Saints here are rejoicing in health, and in the gifts and blessings of the Spirit, and are truly a good people. We have agreed to take twenty-five or thirty copies of the Luminary, and five copies you may send to my address in the valley.

I design starting my company March 1st. I shall leave them so soon as I get them on the Military Road, across the Arkansas river; and design coming immediately to your office, to make such arrangements and purchases for them as they may want, and meet them again at Fort Leavenworth. I feel cheered by the news brother Taylor brings me from home. I should like him to send me five copies of the Mormon to Salt Lake City.

I regret to hear of the death of our friends, but am happy to hear of the progress of the work through the world—of the organization of a stake at St. Louis, &c.

I will write an article for the Luminary occasionally, and will help to cool the devil when they get him raised. I am good on a ground sweat! My feelings kindle and ignite like a Lucifer match when troops and coercive measures are spoken of concerning us. Have not people a right to self-government in a republican government? Yes. The very name conveys with it the character of that freedom demanded by the vox populi. When freedom's right to reign, is trampled under foot, life has lost its bliss to me. But more anon.

Remember me in love to brothers Andrus, Taylor, Felt, Dr. Clinton, Spencer, and all and every servant and friend of the people of God. And may the peace and blessing of the Lord rest and abide with you, and may success crown your every effort to bring universal peace and righteousness upon the earth.

Your devoted friend and brother in the new covenant. S. M. BLAIR.

Oh Father of the power divine,
That leads us in the truth to shine,
May we proclaim to all the earth
The father of our noble birth;
That when we do obedience yield,
The Holy Spirit is revealed;
And when we know and do Thy will,
Thy promises are then fulfilled.

DIALOGUE.

ELDER.—Good evening, sir.

LANDLORD.—How are you?

E.—I am a traveling Elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and travel and preach the Gospel without purse and scrip. Can I stop with you to-night?

L.—Yes, I reckon so. Come in and take a chair. Well, people have a pretty mess of things in Salt Lake, haven't they?

E.—Why?

L.—Don't men have all the wives they want? By the by, how many has Brigham Young?

E.—I don't know. I never had the impertinence to ask.

L.—Well, how many have you?

E.—Allow me to ask you a question. Don't you have a plurality of wives in this country?

L.—No, we don't; the constitution of the United States won't allow it.

E.—(Seeing a little mulatto boy in the yard)—Come here, boy; what is your daddy's name?

B.—I don't know. Mama says mistress won't let her tell me.

E.—My children all call me daddy.

E.—Say yourself; I said nothing about it.

(Landlord in a rage.)

E.—Fret on old coon nobody cares.

(Landlady and servant enters.)

L.—Say, old woman, I have a notion to go to Salt Lake and get me another wife.

LANDLADY—Well, you can go if you like, but you will never have me again. Good-for-nothing women! Yes, I suppose they have all the wives they want there; and if I had them all tied up to a tree, I would be one to pack brash and burn them up; yes, that I would.

SERVANT—(Aside)—Bound for old Missis; any ting good, bound she want it all herself.

L.—Well, sir, the Mormons are going to take the United States, are they?

E.—Yes, sir.

L.—I always believed it—in fact, I know'd it.

E.—Hold; don't run off. It is a long way to Salt Lake; and understand correctly, we purpose taking the whole world besides.

L.—Why, how you do talk! How many of you are there?

E.—I suppose there is a thousand in the field.

L.—That all? (His face brightening up.) That all? Why, you couldn't whip the United States, then!

E.—Oh, yes.

L.—How?

E.—We purpose preaching the Gospel to them, and teaching them the will of God, and they will turn Mormons; and then we will have taken the government, or converted the people; and we shall be then what we are now—Christians of the same government.

L.—Can you cast out a devil?

E.—Yes, if he is not too big. I can cast him out soul and body.

L.—Can you do a miracle?

E.—I will try, if you please.

L.—Let's see one.

E.—Cut off your finger, then I will show you one.

E.—Nor I, neither.

More anon. S. M. B.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE BALTIC.

NEW YORK, January 11.

The Baltic arrived at 3 1-2 o'clock. Commodore Perry came passenger. War news is unchanged. The great event of the week is Napoleon's speech in the Legislature. It is warlike in tone, but makes no mention of any prospect of peace, and was immediately followed by a loan of 500,000,000 francs being unanimously voted. An important meeting of representatives of the five powers had been held at Vienna, but the result has not transpired.

Affairs before Sebastopol were unchanged. The Russians continue to make sorties. The allies received 18,000 reinforcements. The weather is more favorable. Nothing new in the attitude of Austria or Prussia.

The British foreign enlistment bill become a law. Parliament had adjourned.

The Liverpool markets were quiet.

The Baltic left Liverpool early on Saturday morning, the 30th ult., and reached her dock here at quarter past three P. M. She brings 82 passengers.

Arabia sailed from Marseilles on Dec. 21st, with 1,640 French troops for the Crimea. No news of importance from the Crimea.

The railway expedition from England was already on the way, in seven steamers and two sailing ships, with all the material for building a railway from Balaklava to Sebastopol. The wretched state of the country, from heavy rains, had almost put a stop to operations. Communication between Bielef and Simpheropol was completely impassable, and a week had elapsed since a courier had arrived at Odessa from Sebastopol; yet at last accounts the weather had improved, with heavy frost.

Both armies were renewing their activity.

France and England have notified the Swedish government that all the Russian harbors in the White Sea are to be stopped.

A Russian ukase has been published, saying, that whoever, after battle, shall commit acts of cruelty on the wounded or unresisting, shall suffer the penalty of death.

Ostensaken has been removed from the command of the 3d to the 4th corps, vice Danenburg, disgraced.

General Ochabelosky is appointed Governor of Odessa.

Eight English steamships were taking soundings off Eshakoff; hence it is surmised that the allies will make an attack on Kinbarn, preparatory to an attack on Perekop.

A levy of 10 men in every 1,000 is ordered in the eastern half of the empire, to be completed by the 10th of March.

Colonel Colt denies, in a letter to the London Times, that he has offered to supply his pistols to the Czar of Russia.

THE CRIMEA.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 20.

It is confidently asserted that the resolution had been adopted to storm Sebastopol as soon as the Turkish reinforcements should arrive. The French, it is said, are to storm, while the British and Turks attack Menschikoff.

DIED,

In this city, on the 5th inst., of fever, after an illness of 14 days, MARY, wife of Thomas Barratt, late of Nottingham, England, aged 33 years.

She died as she had lived, in the full enjoyment of the blessings of the Gospel, and looked forward with joy to a glorious resurrection to life and immortality. When asked by her companion if she feared to die, she replied, "No. I am only going behind the veil, and I shall soon meet you again, so grieve not for me.

Miscellaneous.

SIAM.

The following is an extract of a letter from Elder Elam Luddington to Elder George B. Wallace, dated Bankok, Kingdom of Siam, June 1, 1854.

I am situated in an insalubrious clime, among a few friends, and surrounded by many foes, who seek to contaminate and overthrow every righteous principle, and imitate the natives in nudity, debauchery, ebriety, &c.

Siam has been grossly misrepresented by American missionaries. The Rev. Mr. Smith offered one hundred tickalls if the Europeans would not write the particulars to Singapore concerning Captain Trail, who has been six weeks in durance for firing a salute in the roads of Singapore, on board of the king's ship.

I baptized Captain Trail and wife the first Sunday I landed, and confirmed them at the same time. I thrice have visited him in prison, and gave him some books. He will remain in prison till we can get a letter from Singapore.

I arrived here on the first day of your annual conference, or the 6th day of April, a stranger and alone in an uncivilized country. The first king called the governor to an account for allowing a vessel to pass Packingham before he got word, and was flogged severely. His subjects crawl on all fours, and sometimes on the belly like a serpent, when they approach the king. All Siamese subjects have to work for the king seventy days and upwards each year.

If a man gets into debt, and cannot pay, he is thrown into prison, loaded with irons, and then put to the torture, their hands put into machines or blocks of wood, and pinched till the bones crack, in order to draw out a few tickalls, when it is like drawing blood out of a pineapple They then become slaves and seldom get their liberty. The king never feeds his slaves or prisoners; they have to beg or seal—but generally prefer the latter—or cut grass for the elephants, which now number fifty at the palace. I visited them a few days ago; they are known by the commission they hold; they have from one to five gold rings on their tusks. The white elephant is allowed to eat from a gold table, and always salams the king. This great animal is proud of his office. The natives believe that their former king has transmigrated into the white elephant. These animals kill a great many of their keepers every year; the king says it is their bad luck or misfortune.

The king has got this place well fortified from the mouth of the river, or Packingham, a distance of forty miles. Siam is a large kingdom, with parts of some other different kingdoms that have been added, and different tribes taken and brought here as slaves. Part of Malacca was taken and nearly 1,000 slaves, men, women and children, for refusing to send yearly presents, as was said, but I was informed afterwards the presents were sent, but one of their nabobs took these gifts to himself, and being found out, took poison.

The king here released the other ruler of Malacca, but retained the trophies and slaves; they now number five thousand. I think there are ten or fifteen thousand Burmese in thraldom.

I visited one of their festivals a few days ago. I was cautioned to go armed, as they are a set of wild barbarians and outlaws; they would as soon take your life as to look at you. I had a view of heathen scenery, it was picturesque—fire works, Burmese dancing, masks, and Indian paintings, in true Asiatic style.

A large portion of the populace are Chinese, skilled in all manner of hypocrisy, and there are thousands of the sons of Ishmael, and of different tribes and nations of the antipodes of the earth.

This country lies very low, and for the most part is covered with fruit trees and herbage of various colors and hues. The fruit is luscious, but shut out, as it were, from all the rest of the world, in the dark regions of Father India. A man must not speak above his breath, without the second thought. All vessels coming here, if they have any diamonds, must stop at Packingham, or mouth of the river, for the benefit of the king; and the king takes all public letters to himself, if he thinks proper, and reads them. There is one large field of paddy, ten or fifteen miles long, on the opposite side of the river. Sugar cane is very productive, and large quantities are shipped. Board is five dollars per month; breakfast, 9 A. M., dinner, 5 P. M. Thermometer, 96°; N. lat. 13° 58'; E. long. 100° 54'. The weather is sultry and hot. The wet season is about one-fourth that of Burmah.

Bankok is a floating city; nearly all business is done on the water. Boat hire is expensive—one shilling a day, or one hour, all the same; four men paddle the boat.

A few evenings ago, while I was reading in my chapel, a tickall fell at my feet. I never learned where it came from, but there is a God in Israel that hears the ravens and saints when they cry.

I have delivered one lecture every Sabbath since my arrival in Bankok; some eight or ten Europeans generally attend. I am trying to learn the native language; it will, no doubt, take me from one to two years, the reverends say five. Mr. Silsbery, now on his way back to Ohio, I think, has studied the language seven years, and can't preach yet in Siamese. I will keep digging till you all say enough, and then if you see fit to call me home, I shall be truly in heaven, and happy in the extreme; or if you say, "Spend your days in Father India," it shall be even so; not my will, but my heavenly Father's be done.

Utah is a land of PEACE; India is HELL, and the smoke of her torment gets thicker and thicker. The whole earth is defiled with broken covenants, and men and women are full of abominations.

AUSTRALIA.

SYDNEY, 103 Paramatta Street. Sept. 18, 1854.

F. D. RICHARDS:

Dear Brother—I embrace the opportunity offered me to congratulate you upon your safe arrival among the British Saints, and I sincerely pray that the Lord may eminently bless you, in your two-fold capacity of President of the British Mission, and editor of the Star.

It gives me pleasure to inform you, that the work of the Lord is progressing in these Colonies. We are not baptizing our hundreds or fifties at one time, the work is moving along slowly but surely, more so in the interior than in this city. The principles are winning their widening way into every class of society. In fact, Mormonism has made quite an excitement among the people recently, the clergy have awakened in the opposition with renewed zeal and energy, and no course is too mean or despicable for them to pursue, so that they can but prevail upon the people not to listen to the Elders, nor to read our books. The usual ebulitions of calumny and slander, with their concomitants of falsehood, blasphemy, ignorance, &c., are poured forth in a manner alike discreditable to intelligence and honor At this we are not astonished, for what other weapons could they bring forth against truth and righteousness.

All this does not discourage us in the least, for we know whose we are, and that the work we are engaged in is the work of the Great God. And we feel grateful to our Father in heaven, who has in our weakness made us strong, giving us light, knowledge, and power in the things of His kingdom, so that we have been enabled at all times to rebuke the scorner, silence the gainsayer, and instruct and counsel the Saints.

It is true, the people of these lands are a peculiar people, being generally dead to the interests of religion, caring but little what the true principles of the Gospel are; it may, indeed, be said of them, that their faith is a mere tradition, their worship an empty form, the impression being transitory, ending with the service, when they again devote themselves to gold and pleasure. But withal, there are some as good and honest people in these lands, as can be found on the earth. These must be hunted and fished out and gathered. To accomplish this we are encouraged to labor, but the apathy of the people, and their scattered condition, together with the great opposition manifested by the priests, tend much to embarrass our movements, and to retard the progress of the work.

Still the Lord has blessed us and our labors, and we feel assured that he will continue to do so.

We received a letter from Elder William Hyde, on the 14th inst., dated San Pedro, June 13, giving an account of the passage of the Julia Ann, and the safe arrival of the company of Saints who left here on March the 22nd.

The desire to leave the confines of Babylon pervades the mass of the Saints here, and they are striving with all their power to gather, so that it is expected that another company will leave here about April or May next.

May God, the eternal Father, bless you, and prosper His work in your hands, is the earnest desire of your brother in the Gospel.

AUGUSTUS FARNHAM.

CAPE TOWN MISSION.

The following is an extract of a letter from Elder Jesse Haven to Elder Robert Campbell, City Reorder, dated L. D. Saints' Office, four miles from Cape Town, Cape of Good Hope, July 10th, 1854:

My health for the last three months has been poorly, but now is considerably better. It is now the middle of winter, and generally rainy, and when not raining it is very delightful. It is the season for raising vegetables, grain, &c. The summers are dry and hot, and grain, &c., cannot then be raised, except on low moist land, that can be irrigated. There is but little of either. I am speaking of things as they exist in the vicinity of Cape Town. How it is back in the country, I am not so well informed. Grapes, in their season, are plenty, and very good, and much wine is manufactured from them. Winter is the season for oranges, lemons, &c., and they are generally very plentiful.

The air is as clear and pure as in Salt Lake Valley; were it not so, this would be a very unhealthy place. On the mountains east of us we can see snow about three months in the year; but here there is no snow, and seldom any frost. The climate is very weakening to the physical and mental powers, and I don't believe an European can stop here long without materially feeling the effects of it. It seems a little odd to be obliged to look to the north for the sun at noon, and to have our shortest days in June, and longest in December.

A large portion of the inhabitants are licentious, and great lovers of wine, which is a great hindrance to the spread of the gospel. Bro. Walker is laboring in Graham's Town and its vicinity, distant about 600 miles. He had baptized nine, two of whom have been disfellowshipped.

Bro. Smith went to Port Elizabeth on the last of March, distant about 80 miles from Graham's Town. About 500 persons collected at the first public meeting he held, and broke it up by throwing brickbats and potatoes. The magistrate told the people, publicly, if they again meddled with Elder Smith, he would punish them to the extent of the law. Since then, Bro. Smith has preached to large congregations without any disturbance, and he had baptized three. Forty-eight have been baptized in the vicinity of Cape Town, six of whom we have been obliged to lop off as dead or diseased branches. The gift of healing is frequently manifested amongst us. I have not been able yet to get a door open in Cape Town, since the mob broke up our meetings nearly a year ago. A man to meet with good success in preaching in this country, ought to be well acquainted with the Dutch and English languages. The saints here are very anxious to gather.

There is a class of people here called "Malays," who believe in the Mahomedan religion. They are generally darker than the American Indians, and are peculiar about eating meat. They will not eat, nor even touch pork, if they can help it. All the meat they eat, with the exception of fowls, must be killed by their Priests. They are a very civil and quiet people. I never, to my knowledge, have received any insult from them since I have been here. But the good, holy, pious, devout, and reverend Christians, have frequently insulted me as I have passed the streets, crying out, "Mormonite! Jo Smith! Seven wives!" The Malays believe in the plurality of wives, which does not exactly coincide with the pious notions of the learned ignorance of the good Christians in this place.

There has recently been a Colonial Parliament formed for the Cape of Good Hope. They are now holding their first session. I understand that one of the bills that have been introduced is, to pass a law against Polygamy. I expect they intend to make the Malays put away all their wives except one, and get them to conform to their Most Holy practices; which is, to be married to one wife, but seduce and be with as many other women as they please. Whether the Queen of England will sign such a bill I think is rather uncertain, as she is now fighting for a nation that universally believes in, and practices, Polygamy.

With one thing we are satisfied, that Joseph Smith will prove himself a true Prophet, in declaring that wars, famine, and pestilence will waste the nations of the earth in this age and generation. And I believe the time is speedily at hand, when those who will not take up their sword to fight their neighbors, must flee to Zion for safety; for the people of Zion will be the only people at peace amongst themselves.

THE EAST INDIA MISSION.

The following is an extract from a letter written by El. Woolly to El. F. D. Richards, dated Chinsusah, thirty miles north of Calcutta, June 24, 1854:

I had some business at Calcutta, so I had to go down; but I came back in a few days, and brother Fotheringham with me.

While I was here the first time I baptised two persons, one was brother Sankey's daughter, who lives at Bardwan, forty miles distant, and who was here on a visit; the other was his step-daughter.

I will here relate a circumstance wherein the power of God was manifested. Brother Sankey's daughter told me one afternoon that she wished to be baptised that evening after meeting. I told her I was on hand any time. I will here say that she had it shown to her the night before by a dream or vision that I was a servant of God, and that I was to baptise her. This was in answer to my prayer, and also hers, as she told me afterwards that she asked for it after she retired, which I did also. After she had told me her desire, I went to look for the tank suitable for the purpose. After my return, I was walking in the verandah, and I felt as if all was not right some way; what it was I could not tell, but I thought that perhaps she would get out of the notion of being baptised, as some have done in this country after saying they were ready. But in a few minutes the mystery was solved. Sister Sankey came out and said, "Mary is very sick, (you will remember that a few minutes before she was as well as ever,) and wants you to administer to her." I went in immediately, and anointed her with oil in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and laid hands on her; and thanks be to the God of Israel, before we took our hands off her head, for brother Sankey laid his hand on also, the pain had entirely left her, and mostly before I got through with anointing. It was a very severe attack, similar to the cholera, but she was healed by the power of God, and was baptised, not the same hour, as I had to preach to a few afterwards.

Also, during my stay here, I anointed a native Hindoo woman, who had been afflicted with pains for four years. She was sister Haddeus Jah, (waiting maid,) and lives at Burdwan also, and the pains left her, but she would not leave her caste. I learn that she is telling it all around, and says she wishes I would come up to Burdwan and cure all the sick folks, etc. She cannot talk English. I would not be surprised if the pains would return again, for she ought to leave idolatry and be baptised; but this does not open the eyes of the people, and I guess they will not get them opened until they take a trip to the spirit world.

There have been other cases which I might mention, but shall not for want of time and room. You can see by the foregoing that the Lord has not left us, although we are in a land of darkness. This is the land where some of the apostles of old were killed, so we must look for opposition of the strongest kind. There are but a few who will ever obey the Gospel in this land; their circumstances and everything else forbid their doing it. Pretty much all have come here to get rich, and what can you do with such when you find them at home? I answer, but little there, and less here, so this tells it in a word.

Our meetings are pretty well attended at present; that is, from fifteen to thirty come to hear, but all are soldiers, not a single civilian. I have baptised three since I came up this time, and brother Fotheringham baptised one who had been baptised in England, by the name of Benjamin Cubits. I give his name, so that if you see fit to publish this, as you are at liberty to do with it as you please, the branch to which he belonged may know where he is. He is from about Manchester. I counselled him to renew his covenant by baptism, as I considered he must have got weak in the faith, or else he never would have gone to fight the battles of the Gentiles in this generation, when all the wicked, and those who serve not God, will be destroyed from off the face of the land. These soldiers are all in for ten years, and only one and a half of it is gone.

The reason why we can preach here, to the soldiers, is, we have a house—brother Sankey's—close to the barracks, and yet outside of cantonments. I was told by a sergeant that they had orders, while he was in Fort William, at Calcutta, that if any of us came into the fort, to send four men and a corporal to march us out.

P. B. Gibson, of Scotland, formerly an elder, is in these barracks, and has apostatised, torn up his license, given up all his books, and don't believe in anything scarcely. I have had conversation with him several times; he almost denied the existence of a God the first time, now he says he believes in some of the first principles of the Gospel, and in baptism for the dead, etc., but he says the prophets Joseph and Brigham, are base impostors, etc. This is the second or third time he has apostatised, so perhaps he will come back again.

One of the men I baptised used to be a bitter opposer in Dublin, and he told me that he used to create disturbances in our meetings there, but he has repented of it, and says he is very sorry he ever did so, and one of the elders there and then told him, as a prophecy, that he would yet belong to this church; so he predicted it, and through my instrumentality it has been fulfilled. This man's name is James T. Hurst, so that if any of the brethren ever had a feeling against him, they will forgive him, for he has been baptised for the remission of all his past sins, and has received the Holy Spirit; so he has told me since; which all will who will go forth with a contrite spirit and be baptised, and have hands laid on them for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

All those who have been baptised are rejoicing in the glorious Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. The devil showed his teeth some when I was up here before, and also at the first discourse after I came up this time—men would get up and try to stop me by commencing to talk, and if I testified that Joseph Smith and Brigham Young were prophets of the Most High God, which I always do, and would like to do so to all the world if I had a chance, they would tell me I was a liar, with all the rest of the epithets common in the mouths of such men, and would have their hands full of newspapers, Spaulding's works, etc., to prove it, but I checked it in the bud, by telling them I would not allow it, so they have quit coming to hear, as to disturb was all they came for, and some of them have since been put in the cungy (prison, solitary confinement) house for three months, etc. This was the best sign I had seen in India, and told brother Sankey so at the time; I was pretty sure that there were sheep close by, when the wolves commenced to howl.

I expect to baptise three or four more before long, if their officers do not stop it, which I do not think they can.

Brother Fotheringham has not been able to get a ship for your parts, as he wrote expecting to do, so he will not be there very soon, if he comes at all; the Lord seems to hedge the way.

Some might think we made a short stay of it in the Upper Country; but I will say that brother Willes was up there nearly a year before we went up, and preached in Agra and Delhi as long as they would come to hear him, and in Marat as long as he would have been allowed; so the brigadier and some others told us. He was allowed to preach in cantonment when he first went up, but the authorities said they saw that would not do, for the soldiers would think more of Deseret than Chelsea Hospital. This was put in their papers, and we read it, yet we were not disheartened at all, but thought it of no use to stop when we were not allowed to preach. When we got a place outside of cantonment no one would come to hear—the soldiers were not allowed. Where we staid, the people, as a general thing, told us they saw no use of us staying, as much as to say, "I am tired of boarding you," etc.

In Calcutta brother Jones has baptised three or four persons since I came up here this time.

But I must close for the present, praying God to bless you in your responsible station, and give you strength as your day may demand.

Remember me to brothers D. Spencer, C. A. Harper, C. A. Foster, and all the brethren in the office, also, when you write to Presidents Young, Kimball, and Richards, and to my good wife and family and your esteemed wife.

Brother Fotheringham joins in love to you and all the Saints.

P. S.—This regiment will leave here in September or October next for the upper provinces, but it will be of no use for any of us to go with it, for we would not be allowed to preach to the soldiers there, but we can ordain some of them, and they can do their own preaching, if their officers will allow it. I expect I shall leave for the States about September or October.

TRIP TO UTAH COUNTY.

G. S. L. CITY, Nov. 23, 1854.

Mr. Editor:—I left this city on Saturday, 11th instant, the day being cold and uncomfortable. I arrived at Lehi City much chilled; visited the wall and Tithing House, which are slowly progressing.

On Sunday at 10 o'clock I preached one hour and three quarters; then proceeded to Pleasant Grove and preached in the evening. On Monday I went to Provo, and found my family in good health, and very busy with grandmother's piano, weaving flannel for the neighbors; preached on Tuesday evening in the Seminary.

On Wednesday I went to Payson, visiting on my route, the Fort Saint Luke, at the mouth of Spanish Fork Kanyon, where there are sixteen houses in the course of erection, enclosing a square of about one hundred by one hundred and twenty feet, generally with a story and a half building; it is a good commencement, and will do honor to the energy of the builders; it will be necessary, however, for them to enclose around their fort, about fifteen or twenty acres, with a wall eight feet thick and fifteen feet high, to secure their stock, as they are located so near the mouth of the kanyon, they will be likely to be troubled with marauding parties of horse and cattle thieves, who could easily retreat up the kanyon out of the reach of pursuit; but from the well known energy of the builders of this fort, it is not at all likely that the outer wall will be neglected but a very short time, it being a light job compared wrth the advantages resulting therefrom. Arrived at Payson in the evening, and preached in the school house.

Thursday evening I returned to Palmyra, preached there at 2 o'clock, and again in the evening; some of the brethren there, thinking that my family might need some bread, donated and sent to the Provo Tithing Office for my benefit, thirty-three bushels of wheat, and sixteen bushels of potatoes. The bishop of Palmyra had on hand in the Tithing Office, seven hundred and forty bushels of wheat, and a great deal had not been paid in, because the bishop had not sufficient storage to receive all, as yet. On Friday I visited the fort built for the defence of Jacob Houtz's grist mill on Spring Creek; it is quite a beginning, but would be better if it was increased in thickness and height. In the evening I listened to interesting discourses from Elders Aaron Farr and John L. Smith, in the Provo Seminary, on tithing.

Saturday, visited the Provo City wall; the Music Hall, a new building fifty-eight by twenty-four feet, built by Messrs. Goddard, Pace & Co., to accommodate cotillion parties is enclosed, and will be completed in a few weeks. Several of the brethren are engaged in enclosing Bell's Hall, for a meeting room. I preached to the Elders on Saturday evening, in the Seminary. Sunday, the weather being fine, I preached in the open air, as there was no room in town sufficient to hold the people.

I went to Springville and preached about two hours, in the evening. Monday, I visited the Springville wall, about fifty rods of which was built twelve feet high, and about forty rods, six feet high, which, so far as it has progressed, is one of the best in the country; a number of hands were at work on it.

On Monday evening I again addressed the Elders, in the Seminary at Provo, showing them the draft that President Young had furnished two years ago, for a meeting house in Provo, read the bill of materials, and advised the brethren to get the rock and lumber on the ground this winter; the brethren were pleased with the advice. The adobie work of Higby & Smith's mill is completed. Horace Roberts has erected quite a large dwelling house; also, Thomas Ivie; and a number of others are in progress.

On Tuesday evening I preached at Lake City; on Wednesday evening at Union Fort in this county. Several persons here were very sick with a fever; the wall was progressing rapidly; they have a comfortable meeting house, and have built many good dwellings. I arrived in this city this forenoon.

The general health of the people of Utah is good; very few cases of sickness have come under my observation. The Indians were mostly absent on a hunt. A house is in progress of erection at Palmyra for old Peteetneet, and several cabins to accommodate High Forehead and the Indian inhabitants of Springville.

The citizens of Provo need their energies stirred on the subject of schools; although a town of twenty-five hundred inhabitants, its school facilities are behind any other in the Territory that has come under my knowledge. If some of the Regents of the University would make them a visit, it would no doubt be attended with beneficial results to the cause of education. I had the spirit of preaching, and on each occasion, I preached from one and a half to two and a quarter hours; every preaching place was crowded, and the strictest attention given. I addressed the saints on the subject presented to the bishops by the President, at Conference; also, upon the law of tithing, showing its connection with the ordinances for the dead; also, on the necesity of carefully educating their children, and it seems as though I had only to stand up, and it run out of my mouth as though I was a fountain of preach.

The seventies in Utah county, have organized in such a manner as to send some of their body to every place in that county, to preach on Sabbath days, which has a good result in stirring up the saints, and brightening the minds of the elders.

The harvest has generally been plentiful, and a great portion of the grain is now in the bins; the weather has been remarkably fine for making preparations for the winter.

The progress in walling in the towns has been slow, owing to the amount of time required in the fall to secure the crops, and in some places, from a want of energy.

Seven hundred and fifty bushels of wheat had been paid in the Provo Tithing Office, and was being forwarded to the city by the bishop. Many were waking up on the subject of tithing, and making efforts to settle their arrearages. In the smaller towns a much greater observance of the law of tithing was manifest, as can easily be seen by comparing the town of Provo with Palmyra, which contains about sixty-five families. A Tithing Store-house is being built at Palmyra, also at Lake City, and Lehi, mostly for the preservation of vegetables.

A Council Room is being finished by private subscription, in the upper part of the Tithing House, at Lake City. A number of good dwelling houses are going up at Lehi and the other towns in Utah county, of a far more comfortable, and of a better class, than has hitherto been built.

Major Charles Hancock is building a good grist mill at Payson, which will be in operation about Christmas.

EMIGRATION TO PALESTINE.

WURTEMBURG, Oct. 26.

We are informed of a contemplated emigration in mass to Palestine, the former "land of promise." The plan has already been so far matured, that it has been resolved to petition the German Diet for its intercession with the Sublime Porte to grant a tract of land for the above purpose. The origin of this idea of the great exodus, is the peculiar view of the present social relations generally, and of religious life especially. Both are considered to have fallen into decay to that extent, that it is the duty and requirement of every one, to whom the will of God and his own true salvation are yet dear, to disengage himself betimes from this degenerating position. This the masses can accomplish only by turning their back to the Babel, and gathering together in the Holy Land; there, unaffected by corrupt influences, to form a state in which the will of God, as the highest law, shall be recognized in its full power, and arrive at the desired consummation. As far as we can learn, the petition to be laid before the Diet has already received the signatures of 300 families. This intelligence is the more remarkable, since the families thus resolved to leave their fatherland for Palestine, are not of the Jewish, but of the Christian faith.—[Jewish Chronicle, Nov. 10.

A letter from Stuttgard (Wurtemburg) of Nov. 18, says:

"It may be remembered, that a very numerous society was formed here some time since of persons who, from purely religious motives, propose to emigrate to Palestine. This society denominated itself 'The Society for the gathering together of God's People in the Holy Land.' It has just presented a petition to the Germanic Diet to the following effect: The Society prays the Diet to ask the great German States to address a demand to Sultan Abdul Medjid, requiring, first, a grant of land in Palestine, upon which the society may found a colony; second, that the society may have the right to administer the civil and religious affairs of this colony according to their own ideas, that is, conformably to the word of God; third, that the persons and property of the colonists may be protected against any arbitrary proceedings on the part of the Ottoman authorities, and against all oppressive taxes; fourth, that the colonists may be exempted from military service; and fifth, that all the colonists may have equal rights, whether they may have been formerly Catholics, Protestant, Jews, Turks, or of any other religion."—[Daily News.

UNPUNISHED CRIME IN ST. LOUIS.

The acquittal of Mrs. Baker and of Jackson, both charged with murder, is still fresh in the minds of our citizens. In the latter case, especially, as far as we have heard an expression, the acquittal is universally condemned by our citizens. Crime in our city is becoming more and more rampant, for the reason that it is not punished. Our people should wake up and see the wounds that are being inflicted on society, the disgrace that is brought on the American name, and the reproach that is cast on the principle of self government, by such unequal administration of the law as is frequently witnessed among us. If an old man, half blind, should be detected in trying to pass a counterfeit bill, and be sent to the penitentiary for seven years, why should a man, tried for murder of his wife and child, on the same day, be sent to the penitentiary for only five years? If a man destitute of a shirt, steals one, and another poor man steals an armful of shingles, and both are sent to the penitentiary for two years, why are those found "not guilty"—though proven upon them and they confess it—one of whom murders his friend, and the other cuts open the head of a man with a butchers cleaver?—[Missouri Cumberland Presbyterian.

ST. LOUIS LUMINARY.

The above is the title of a weekly paper, published in this city, by Elder E. Snow, to explain and advocate the principles of the Mormon Church. It is printed on good paper, and is a very handsome made up sheet, and will doubtless be read with interest by those who wish to be informed as to the peculiar doctrines and practices of this Church. To us Gentiles, some of the ideas advanced seem rather odd, but perhaps it is because we are behind the times. A late number contained Gov. Young's idea of a true republican government. He says the President should be a man that feared God and loved righteousness—Should be ruler, lawgiver, dictator, judge, and chief—Should hold the office during the pleasure of the Almighty—Should not have $25,000 a year pledged to him, for if he knew enough to rule the nation, he would know enough to take care of himself, etc. In the last number we find the Governor's exposition of the text—"The Bishop must be blameless, the husband of one wife."—[Missouri Cascade.

A VENTURESOME CREW.—A large mackerel boat of about twenty tons, is now undergoing the necesary repairs and alterations, at Newlyn, for the purpose of carrying a crew of five men to Australia. To enable the boat to sustain the many storms which may be expected on her voyage out, and to render her as secure as possible, the crew have coppered the lower part of the hull; in addition to which, she is comfortably decked, cabins also being placed for the accommodation of the tars who intend to navigate her. The boat will be ballasted with fresh water.—[Cornwall (Eng.) Gazette.

THE ACRES AND HANDS.

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof,"
Said God's most holy word:
The water hath fish, and the land hath flesh,
And the air hath many a bird;
And the soil is teeming o'er all the earth,
And the earth has numberless lands;
Yet millions of hands want acres,
While millions of acres want hands!

Sunlight and breezes, and gladsome flowers,
Are over the earth spread wide,
And the good God gave these gifts to men—
To men who on earth abide:
Yet thousands are toiling in poisonous gloom,
And shackled with iron bands,
While millions of hard hands want acres,
And millions of acres want hands!

Never a foot hath the poor man here,
To plant with a grain of corn,
And never a plat where his child may cull
Fresh flowers in the dewy morn.
The soil lies fallow—the woods grow rank,
Yet idle the poor man stands!
O millions of hands want acres,
And millions of acres want hands!

'Tis writ, that "ye shall not muzzle the ox
That treadeth out the corn!"
Yet, behold, ye shackle the poor man's hands,
That have all earth's burdens borne!
The LAND is the gift of a bounteous God,
And to LABOR His word commands;
Yet millions of hands want acres,
And millions of acres want hands!

Who hath ordained that the few should hoard
Their millions of useless gold,
And rob the earth of its fruits and flowers,
While profitless soil they hold?
Who hath ordained that a parchment scroll,
Should fence round miles of lands,
When millions of hands want acres,
And millions of acres want hands?

'Tis a glaring LIE on the face of day,
This robbery of men's rights;
'Tis a tie that the word of the Lord disowns,
'Tis a curse that burns and blights;
And 'twill burn and blight till the people rise,
And swear, while they break their bands,
That the hands shall henceforth have acres,
And the acres henceforth have hands!

THE TEMPLE.

To the Editor of the Deseret News.

SIR: You request a brief description of the temple now being built in this city, for the information of your subscribers. I will give it as presented on the draught now before me, hoping it will tend to obviviate so many questions being asked by various individuals.

The temple block is forty rods square, the lines running north and south, east and west, and contains ten acres. The center of the temple is 156 feet 6 inches due west from the center of the east line of the block. The length of said house, east and west, is 186 1-2 feet, including towers, and the width 99 feet. On the east end there are three towers, as also on the west. Draw a line north and south 118 1-2 feet through the center of the towers, and you have the north and south extent of ground plan, including pedestal.

We depress into the earth, at the east end, to the depth of sixteen feet, and enlarge all around beyond the lines of wall three feet for a footing.

The north and south walls are eight feet thick, clear of pedestal; they stand upon a footing of sixteen feet wall, on its bearing, which slopes three feet on each side to the hight of seven and a half feet. The footing of the towers rise to the same hight as the side, and is one solid piece of masonry of rough ashlars, laid in good lime mortar.

The basement of the main building is divided into many rooms by walls, all having footings. The line of the basement floor is six inches above the top of the footing. From the tower on the east, to the tower on the west, the face of the earth slopes six feet; four inches above the earth on the east line, begins a promenade walk from eleven to twenty-two feet wide, around the entire building, and approached by stone steps on all sides.

There are four towers on the four corners of the building, each starting from their footing, of twenty-six feet square; these continue sixteen and a half feet high, and come to the line of the base string course, which is eight feet above the promenade walk. At this point the towers are reduced to twenty-five feet square; they then continue to the hight of thirty-eight feet, or the hight of the second string course. At this point they are reduced to twenty-three feet square; they then continue thirty-eight feet high to the third string course. The string courses continue all around the building, except when separated by buttresses. The string courses are massive mouldings from solid blocks of stone.

The two east towers then rise twenty-five feet to a string course or cornice. The two west towers rise nineteen feet and come to their string course or cornice. The four towers then rise nine feet to the top of battlements. These towers are cylindrical, having seventeen feet diameter inside, within which stairs ascend around a solid column four feet in diameter, allowing landings at the various sections of the building. These towers have each five ornamental windows on two sides, above the basement. The two center towers occupy the center of the east and west ends of the building, starting from their footings thirty-one feet square, and break off in sections in line with corner towers to the hight of the third string course. The east center tower then rises forty-feet to the top of battlements; the west center tower rises thirty-four feet to the top of battlements. All the towers have spires, the details of which are not decided on.

All these towers, at their corners, have octagon turrets, terminated by octagon pinnacles five feet diameter at base, four feet at first story, and three feet from there up. There are also on each side of these towers two buttresses, except when they come in contact with the main body of the building. The top of these buttresses show forty-eight in number, and stand upon pedestals. The space between the buttresses and turrets is two feet at first story. On the front of two center towers are two large windows, each thirty-two feet high, one above the other, neatly prepared for that place.

On the two west corner towers, and on the west end, a few feet below the top of battlements, may be seen in bold or alto relievo, the great dipper, or Ursa Major, with the pointers ranging nearly towards the north star. (Moral, the lost may find themselves by the priesthood.)

I will now glance at the main body of the house. I have before stated that the basement was divided into many rooms. The center one is arranged for a baptismal font, and is fifty-seven feet long by thirty-five feet wide, separated from the main wall by four rooms, two on each side, nineteen feet long by twelve wide. On the east and west sides of these rooms are four passages twelve feet wide; these lead to and from by outside doors, two on the north and two on the south. Further east and west from these passages are four more rooms, two at each end, twenty-eight feet wide by thirty eight and a half long. These and their walls occupy the basement. All the walls start off their footings, and rise sixteen and a half feet, and there stop with ground ceiling.

We are now up the line of the base string course, eight feet above the promenade, or steps rising to the temple, which terminates the cope of pedestal, and to the first floor of said house. This room is joined to the outer courts, these courts being the width between towers, sixteen feet by nine in the clear. We ascend to the floors of these courts (they being on a line with first floor of main house) by four flights of stone steps nine and a half feet wide, arranged in the basement work; the first step ranging to the outer line of towers. From these courts doors admit to any part of the building.

The size of the first large room is one hundred and twenty feet long by eighty feet wide; the hight reaches nearly to the second string course. The room is arched over in the center with an elliptical arch which drops at its flank ten feet, and has thirty-eight feet span. The side ceilings have one-quarter elliptical arches, which start from the side walls of the main building, sixteen feet high, and terminate at the capitals of the columns or foot of center arch, at the hight of twenty-four feet. The columns obtain their bearings direct from the footings of said house; these columns extend up to support the floor above.

The outside walls of this story are seven feet thick, The space from the termination of the foot of the center arch to the outer wall is divided into sixteen compartments, eight on each side, making rooms fourteen by fourteen, clear of partitions, and ten feet high, leaving a passage six feet wide next to each flank of center arch, which is approached from the ends. These rooms are each lighted by an elliptical or oval window whose major axis is vertical.

The second large room is one foot wider than the room below; this is in consequence of the wall being but six feet thick, falling off six inches on the inner, and six on the outer side. The second string course provides for this on the outer side. The rooms of this story are similar to those below. The side walls have nine buttresses on a side, and have eight tiers of windows, five on each tier.

The foot of the basement windows are eight inches above the promenade, rise three feet perpendicular, and terminate with a semi-circular head. The first story windows have twelve feet length of sash, to top of semi-circular head. The oval windows have six and a half feet length of sash. The windows of the second story are the same as those below. All these frames have four and a half feet width of sash.

The pedestals under all the buttresses project at their base two feet; above their base, which is fifteen inches by four and a half feet wide, on each front is a figure of a globe three feet eleven inches across, whose axis corresponds with the axis of the earth.

The base string course forms a cope for those pedestals. Above this cope the buttresses are three and a half feet, and continue to the hight of one hundred feet. Above the promenade, close under the second string course, on each of the buttresses, is the moon, represented in its different phases. Close under the third string course, or cornice, is the face of the sun. Immediately above is Saturn with her rings. The buttresses terminate with a projected cope.

The only difference between the tower buttresses and the one just described is, instead of Saturn being on them, we have clouds and rays of light descending downward.

All of these symbols are to be chiseled in bas relief on solid stone. The side walls continue above the string course, or cornice, eight and a half feet, making the walls ninety-six feet high, and are formed in battlements, interspersed with stars.

The roof is quite flat, rising only eight feet, and is to be covered with galvanized iron or some other metal. The building is to be otherwise ornamented in many places. The whole structure is designed to symbolize some of the great architectural work above.

The basement windows recede in from the face of outer wall to sash frame, three feet, and are surrounded by stone jambs formed in mouldings, and surmounted by labels over each, which terminate at their horizon, excepting the oval windows, whose labels terminate on columns which extend from an enriched string course, at the foot of each window, to the center of major axis.

My chief object in the last paragraph is to show to the judgment of any who may be baffled, how those windows can be come at, etc. All in the windows in the towers are moulded and have stone jambs; each being crowned with label mouldings.

For further particulars, wait till the house is done, then come and see it.

The whole house covers an area of 21,850 feet.

A Wholesome Thought.

"Bring hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind," if you would have them healed of their many infirmities. We boldly and fearlessly assert that the Mustang Liniment will positively CURE Rheumatism. Let any who are afflicted with that most painful complaint try it thoroughly according to the directions, and if they are not cured, we will give them their money back. What more can we say? It will also cure the Piles. Thousands have tried it—and all were cured. Bruises, Sprains, Sores, or Eruptions, fade away as if touched by the magician's wand. Its application to a Burn or Scald acts like "oil upon the troubled waters," The tempest of pain and agony is soon spilled, and the patient is hushed to quiet and peaceful slumbers. "There is a balm for every wound," and that balm is the Mustang Liniment. Everybody that sells medicines keeps it for sale. "Hold your Horses," and if they are crippled, galled, or sprained, use the Mustang Liniment.

The Field of Inkerman after the Battle.

The correspondent of the London Herald, who went over the ensanguined field of Inkerman, after the battle of the 5th November, gives the following description of its horrors:

"I have said over and over again that it was a sight which never could be described. A considerable number, some eight hundred to one thousand Russians, killed and wounded, were lying among our tents, and here also, were many, too many, corpses of Zohaves and French infantry of the line. All our wounded had been removed, and the wounded of the enemy were being gathered in. The kindness and attention of our soldiers to their helpless enemies was beyond all praise. They brought them water, got knapsacks to put under their heads, and borrowed blankets in which to cover them from the raw night air. Here and there small groups of them stood absorbed in pity round some prostrate foe, to whom their kindness came too late, and who, shot either through the head or lungs, gasped out his existence in painful sobs or terminated it in a horrible convulsion.

"A little above the line of tents, was the brow of a hill overlooking Inkermann Hights. Here was the spot where the allied artillery engaged that of the enemy after the retreat, and here the sight was sickening indeed. Suffice to say, that here, among the carcasses of some two hundred killed and wounded horses, lay the bodies of our brave English and French artillery men, all more or less frightfully mutillated. Some had their heads taken off at the neck, as if with an axe; others their legs gone from the hips; others their arms; and others, again, who were hit in the chest or stomach, were literally smashed as if they had been crushed in a machine. But it was not alone the allies who lay here; on the contrary, for one of theirs there were ten Russian corpses; but the latter were all killed by musketry before the artillery came up.

"Passing up the road to Sebastopol between heaps of Russian dead, you came to the spot where the guards had been compelled to retire from the defense of the wall above Inkermann valley. Here our dead were nearly as numerous as the enemy's. Across the path, side by side, lay five guardsmen, who were killed by one round shot, as they advanced to charge the enemy. They lay on their faces, in the same attitude, with their muskets very tightly grasped in both hands, and all had the same grim, painful frown upon their features, like men who were struck down in the act of closing with their foes. Beyond this the Russian guardsmen and line regiments lay thick as leaves, intermixed with dead and wounded horses. The latter, with fractured limbs, were now and then rising, and, after staggering a few steps, rolling over among the corpses, snorting and plunging fearfully.

"Up to the right of the wall was the way to the two gun battery. The pathway lay through much thick brushwood; but the path was slippery with blood, and the brushwood was broken down, and cumbered with the dead. The scene from the battery was awful, awful beyond description. I stood upon the parapet at nine o'clock at night, and felt my heart sink as I gazed upon the scene of carnage around. The moon was at its full, and showed every object as if by the light of day. Facing me was the valley of Inkermann, with the Tchernaya, like a band of silver, flowing gracefully between the hills, which, for varied and picturesque beauty, might vie with any part of the world. Yet I shall never recall the memory of Inkermann valley but with feelings of loathing and horror; for around the spot from which I surveyed the scene, lay upwards of 5,000 bodies. Many badly wounded also lay there; and their low, dull moans of mortal agony struck with horrible distinctness upon the ear, or worse still, the hoarse gurgling cry and vehement struggles of those who were convulsed before they passed away. Around the hill small groups of men with hospital stretchers were searching out for those who still survived; and others again with lanterns busily turning over the dead, looking for the bodies of officers who were known to be killed, but who had not been found. Here also were English women, whose husbands had not returned, hurrying about with loud lamentations, turning the faces of our dead to the moonlight, and eagerly seeking for what they feared to find. These latter were far more to be pitied than the inanimate forms of those who lay slaughtered around. The ambulances, as they came up, received their load of sufferers, and even blankets were employed to convey the wounded to the rear.

"Outside the battery the Russians lay two and three deep. Inside, the place was literally filled with bodies of Russian guardsmen, 55th and 20th. The fine, tall forms of our poor fellows could be distinguished at a glance, though the gray coats, stained with blood, rendered them alike externally. They lay as they fell, in heaps; sometimes our men over three or four Russians, and sometimes a Russian over three or four of our soldiers. Some had passed away with a smile on their faces, and seemed as if asleep; others were horribly contorted, and, with distended eyes, and swollen features, appeared to have died in agony, but defying to the last. Some lay as if prepared for burial, as though hands of relatives had arranged their mangled limbs, while others again were almost in startling positions, half standing or kneeling, clutching their weapons or drawing a cartridge. Many lay with both their hands extended toward the sky, as if to avert a blow or utter a prayer, while others had a malignant scowl of mingled fear and hatred, as if, indeed, they died despairing. The moonlight imparted an aspect of unnatural paleness to their forms; and, as the cold damp wind swept around the hills and waved the boughs above their upturned faces, the shadows gave a horrible appearance of vitality, and it seemed as if the dead were laughing and about to rise. This was not the case on one spot, but all over the bloody field."

THE THRIFTLESS FARMER.

The thriftless farmer provides no shelter for his cattle during the inclemency of the winter; but permits them to stand shivering by the side of a fence, or lie in the snow as best suits them.

He throws their fodder on the ground, or in the mud, and not unfrequently in the highway, by which a large portion of it, and all the manure are wasted.

He neglects to keep the manure from around his barn—if he has one—by which they are prematurely rotted, and his barn destroyed.

He has a place for nothing, and nothing in its place. He consequently wants a hoe or a rake, or a hammar, or an auger, but knows not where to find them, and thus looses much time.

He loiters away stormy days and evenings, when he should be repairing his utensils, or improving his mind by reading useful books or newspapers.

He spends much time in town, at the corner of the street, or in the "rum shop" complaining of hard times, and goes home in the evening with a "pretty large brick in his hat."

He has no shed for his wood; consequently his wife is out of humor and his meals out of season.

He plants a few fruit trees and his cattle forthwith destroy them. He "has no luck in raising fruit."

One-half of the little he raises is destroyed by his own or his neighbor's cattle.

His plow, harrow, and other implements lie all winter in the field where he last used them; just as he is getting in a hurry for next season, his plow breaks, because it was not housed, or properly cared for when last used.

He has of course but little money, and when he must raise some to pay his taxes, &c., he raises it at a great sacrifice, in some way or other, by paying an enormous shave, or by selling his scanty crop when prices are low.

He is a year behind instead of being a year ahead of his business—and always will be.

Take him all in all he is a poor farmer, a poor husband, a poor father, a poor neighbor, and a poor Christian.—[Farmer's Magazine.

'ORRIBLE.—Day after to-morrow morning, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, a little man by the name of Smith, with a heel in the hole of his left hand stocking, committed arsenic by swallowing a dose of suicide. The verdict of the inquest came to his facts in accordance with death. He leaves a child and nine small wives to mourn his loss ultimately.

It has cured more cases of

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out. I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.

Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

ELECTION AND REPROBATION.

This article was first published in the Millenial Star, in the year 1841, which the prophet Joseph says, in his History, is one of the sweetest pieces that has been written in these last days.

Do you believe in election and reprobation? To prevent the necessity of repeating a thousand times what may be said at once, we purpose to answer this oft-asked question in writing, so that the saints may learn doctrine, and all who will may understand that such election and reprobation as is taught in the Old and New Testaments, and other revelations from God, we fully believe, in connection with every other principle of righteousness; and we ask this favor of all into whose hands our answer may come, that they will not condemn until they have read it through, in the spirit of meekness and prayer.

"The Lord (Jehovah) hath spoken through Isaiah (42. 1) saying, 'Behold my servant whom I uphold—mine elect in whom my soul delighteth;' evidently referring to the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, chosen or elected by the Father (I Pet. 1. 20) 'Who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you, who by him do believe in God to serve him in the redemption of the world, to be a covenant of the people (Isaiah 42. 6) for a light of the Gentiles, and the glory of his people, Israel, having ordained him to be the judge of the quick and dead (Acts 10. 42) that through him forgiveness of sins might be preached (Acts 13. 38) unto all who would be obedient unto his Gospel (Mark 16. 16.17).

"Every high priest must be ordained (Heb. 5.1) and if Christ had not received ordination, he would not have had power to ordain others, as he did when he ordained the Twelve (Mark 3. 14) to take a part in the ministry which he had received of his Father; also, (John 15.16) 'Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit (Heb. 5.4) for no man taketh this honor unto himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron (5.5); so also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest, but he that said unto him. 'Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.' No being can give that which he does not possess; consequently no man can confer the priesthood on another, if he has not himself first received it; and the priesthood is of such a nature that it is impossible to investigate the principles of election, reprobation, &c., without touching upon the priesthood also; and although some may say that Christ as God needed no ordination, having possessed it eternally; yet Christ says (Mat. 28.18) 'All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth;' which could not have been if he was in eternal possession; and in the previously quoted verse, we discover that he that said unto him (his Father) glorified him to be made an high priest, or ordained him to the work of creating the world and all things upon it, (Col. 1.16) 'For by him were all things created that are in heaven and that are in the earth,' and of redeeming the same from the fall, and to the judging of the quick and dead, for the right of judging rests in the priesthood, and it is through this medium that the Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son (John 5.22) referring to his administration on earth. It was necessary that Christ should receive the priesthood to qualify him to minister before his Father unto the children of men, so as to redeem and save them. Does it seem reasonable that any man should take it upon him to do a part of the same work, or to assist in the same priesthood, who has not been called by the spirit of prophecy or revelation, as was Aaron, and ordained accordingly? and can it be expected that a man will be called by revelation who does not believe in revelation? or will any man submit to ordination for the fulfillment of a revelation or call in which he has no faith? We think not.

"That we may learn still further that God calls or elects particular men to perform particular works, or on whom to confer special blessings, we read (Isaiah 45.4) 'For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect. I have called thee (Cyrus) by thy name to be a deliverer to my people Israel, and to help to plant them on my holy mountain, (Isaiah 65.9, see connection) for mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there, even on the mountains of Palestine, the land of Canaan, which God had before promised to Abraham and his seed,' (Gen. 17. 8) and the particular reason why Abraham was chosen, or elected to be the father of this blessed nation, is clearly told by the Lord, (Gen. 18.19) 'For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him;' and this includes the general principle of election, i.e. that God chose, elected, or ordained Jesus Christ, his Son, to be the creator, governor, savior, and judge of the world; and Abraham to be the father of the faithful, on account of his foreknowledge of their obedience to his will and commandments, which agrees with the saying in the II. Tim. 2.21, 'If a man purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work.'

"Thus it appears that God has chosen or elected certain individuals to certain blessings, or to the performance of certain works; and that we may more fully understand the movements of the Supreme Governor of the universe in the order of election, we proceed to quote the sacred writers, (Rom. 8.28,30) 'For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren: moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called, and whom he called, them he also justified, and whom he justified, them he also glorified.' And whom did he foreknow? Those that loved him, as we find in the 28th verse of the same chapter—'For we know that all things shall work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.' And who are the called according to his purpose? Those whom he foreknew, for he foreknew that those who loved him would do his will and work righteousness; and it is vain for men to say they love God, if they do not keep his commandments. Cain found it so when he presented an unrighteous offering, for God said unto him, (Gen. 4.7) 'If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?' and yet he was not accepted; 'but whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected; and hereby we know that we are in him (I. John, 2.5) or that we are the called according to his purpose.'

But did not God foreknow all things and all men? Surely, 'known unto God are all his works, from the beginning of the world,' (Acts 15.18) but does that prove that all men would love him and keep his commandments, so that he could predestinate them unto eternal life? Certainly not, for that would make God to foreknow things which were not to be, and to predestinate men to that, unto which they could never attain, (Mat. 7.13), 'for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat.'

"The principles of God's kingdom are perfect and harmonious, and the scriptures of truth must also agree in all their parts, so that one sentiment thereof shall not destroy another, and when we read that, whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate; and that, known unto God are all his works; so that it might appear from an abstract view thereof, that God foreknew all, and consequently predestinated all to be conformed to the image of his Son;—we ought also to read (Mark 16.16) 'he that believeth not shall be damned;' and (John 8.24) 'if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins;' also (Mat. 25.41) 'depart from me ye cursed, for I was an hungered and ye gave me no meat, etc.

Paul referring to the saints, (Rom. 1.7) calls them beloved of God, called to be saints; and says (Rom. 8.1) 'there is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit,' and goes on to show in his epistle to the Romans, that the law (the law of carnal commandments given to the children of Israel, the covenant people,) could not make the comers thereunto perfect; (see also Heb. 10. 1) but was given for a schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, (Gal. 3.24) so that when he had come and offered himself without spot unto God (Heb. 9.14) the sacrifice of the law should be done away in him, that the honest in heart all might come unto the perfect law of liberty, (James 1, 25,) or the gospel of Christ, walking no longer after the flesh, but after the spirit, and be of that number who love God and keep his commandments, that they might be called according to his purpose;' (Romans 8, 28;) and these were the individuals referred to, whom God foreknew; such as Abel, Seth, Enoch, Noah, Melchisedec, Abraham, Lot, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Caleb, Joshua, the harlot Rahab, who wrought righteousness by hiding the servants of God, when their lives were sought by their enemies, Gideon, Barak, Sampson, Jeptha, David, Samuel, and the prophets, (Heb. 11,) who, through their faith, subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, and turned to flight the armies of the aliens. These all died in faith, having kept the commandments of the Most High, having obtained the promise of a glorious inheritance, and are waiting the fulfillment of the promise which they obtained, (Heb. 11, 40,) God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

The prophet Alma bears a similar testimony to the other prophets concerning election, in his 9th chap., (Book of Mormon,) saying, 'This is the manner after which they were ordained; being called and prepared from the foundation of the world, according to the foreknowledge of God, on account of their exceeding faith and good works, in the first place being left to choose good or evil; therefore they having chosen good, and exercising exceeding great faith, are called with a holy calling; yea, with that holy calling which was prepared with, and according to a preparatory redemption for such; and thus they have been called to this holy calling on account of their faith, while others would reject the Spirit of God on account of the hardness of their hearts and blindness of their minds, while, if it had not been for this, they might have had as great privilege as their brethren; or in fine, in the first place, they were on the same standing with their brethren. Thus, this holy calling being prepared from the foundation of the world for such as would not harden their hearts, being in and through the atonement of the only begotten Son, who was prepared, and thus being called by this holy calling, and ordained unto the high priesthood of the holy order of God, to teach his commandments unto the children of men, that they might also enter into His rest, this high priesthood being after the order of His Son, which order was from the foundation of the world, or, in other words, being without beginning of days or end of years, being prepared from eternity to all eternity, according to his foreknowledge of all things. (Rom. 9, 41, 12.) For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God, according to election, might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth; it was said unto her, the elder shall serve the younger,' as we have before shown why God chose Abraham to be the father of the faithful, viz., because He knew he would command his children and his household after him; so now we see by this why the purposes of God, according to election, should stand, and that for His oath's sake. (Gen. 22; 16, 17, 18.) 'By myself hath I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice.' Here the Lord Jesus, coming through the seed of Abraham, is again referred to, through whose suffering and death, or in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed, or made alive, as they had died in Adam. (1 Cor. 15, 22.) 'In this, election is made manifest, for God elected or chose the children of Israel to be his peculiar people, and to them belong the covenants and promises, and the blessings received by the Gentiles come through the covenants to Abraham and his seed; for through the unbelief of the Jews (Rom. 11, 17) they were broken off, and the Gentiles were grafted in; but they stand by faith, (Rom. 11, 20,) and not by the oath of election; therefore it becometh them to fear, lest they cease quickly to bear fruit and be broken off (verse 21) that the Jews may be grafted in again, for they shall be grafted in again (verse 23) if they abide not in unbelief.

'The Gentiles became partakers of the blessings of election and promises through faith and obedience, as Peter says, writing to the strangers scattered abroad, (1 Peter, 1st chap.,) who were the gentiles, the elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the spirit unto obedience; (1 Peter 11, 9;) for ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light, (verse 10) which in time past were not a people, but now are the people of God, which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

'Why were they a peculiar people? Because God had chosen that generation of Gentiles and conferred on them the blessings which descended through the priesthood, and the covenants unto the house of Israel, or grafted them into the good olive tree; (Rom. 11, 17;) and thus the house of Israel became the ministers of salvation to the Gentiles; and this is what the house of Israel was elected unto, not only their own salvation, but through them salvation unto all others, (John 4, 22,) for salvation is of the Jews, (Rom. 11, 11,) and through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles.

'Among the promised seed we find Jesus Christ neither last nor least, but the great high priest and head of all, who was chosen to lay down his life for the redemption of the world, for without the shedding of blood there could be no remission of sins. (Heb. 9, 22.) (Deut. 7, 6, 7, 8, 9.) Moses bears a similar testimony with Peter and Paul to the principles of election: for thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God; the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth. The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people, for ye were the fewest of all people; but because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh, king of Egypt. Know, therefore, that the Lord thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love Him and keep his commandments to a thousand generations, which proves the long continuance of the blessings of this highly favored people.

'And the Lord said unto her, (Rebecca, Gen. 25, 23,) the elder shall serve the younger. And why? Because that Isaac, the father of Esau and Jacob, the husband of Rebecca, and the son of promise to Abraham, was the heir; and as Esau was the elder son of his father Isaac, he had a legal claim to the heirship; but through unbelief, hardness of heart, and hunger, he sold his birthright to his younger brother, Jacob, (Gen. 25, 23,) and God knowing beforehand that he would do this of his own free will and choice, or acting upon that agency which God has delegated to all men, said to his mother, the elder shall serve the younger; for as the elder son, Esau, has sold his birthright, and by that means lost all claim to the blessings promised to Abraham, those blessings and promises must have failed if they had not descended with the purchased birthright unto the younger son, Jacob, for there was no other heir in Israel's family: and if those blessings had failed, the purposes of God according to election must have failed in relation to the posterity of Israel, and the oath of Jehovah would have been broken, which could not be, though heaven and earth were to pass away. (Rom. 9, 13.) As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated. Where is it written? (Mal. 1, 1, 2.) When was it written? About 397 years before Christ, and Esau and Jacob were born about 1773 years before Christ, according to the computation of time in Scripture margin, so Esau and Jacob lived about 1376 years before the Lord spoke by Malachi, saying, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated, as quoted by Paul. This text is often brought forward to prove that God loved Jacob and hated Esau before they were born, or before they had done good or evil; but if God did love one and hate the other before they had done good or evil, He has not seen fit to tell us of it either in the Old or New Testament, or any other revelation; but this only we learn, that 1376 years after Esau and Jacob were born, God said to Malachi—Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated; and surely that was time sufficient to prove their works, and ascertain whether they were worthy to be loved or hated.

'And why did he love the one and hate the other? For the same reason that he accepted the offering of Abel and rejected Cain's offering; because Jacob's works had been righteous and Esau's wicked; and where is there a righteous father who would not do the same thing? Who would not love an affectionate and obedient son more than one who was disobedient, and sought to injure him and overthrow the order of his house? [Objection.] But God seeth not as man seeth, and He is no respector of persons. [Acts 10, 34.] True; but what saith the next verse, He that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of Him; but it does not say that he that worketh wickedness is accepted, and this is proof that God has respect to the actions of persons; and if he did not why should he command obedience to His law? For if He had no respect to the actions of men, He would be just as well pleased with a wicked man for breaking His law as a righteous man for keeping it; and if Cain had done well, he would have been accepted as well as Abel, [Gen. 4, 7,] and Esau as well as Jacob, which proves that God does not respect persons, only in relation to their acts. [See Matt. 35, 34 to the end.] 'Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat,' etc.; and because that God blessed Abel and Jacob, this would not have hindered His blessing Cain and Esau, if their works had been righteous like unto their brethren; so God's choosing one nation to blessing does not doom another to cursing or make them reprobate, according to the reprobation of God, as some suppose; but by resisting the truth they became reprobate concerning the faith, [II Tim. 3, 8,] and are abominable and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate, [Titus 1, 16,] consequently are not fit subjects for the blessings of election.

Rom. 9, 15, For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. [See Exodus 33, 13 to the 19.] My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest, for thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name, and I will make all my goodness to pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee; and I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will shew mercy on whom I will shew mercy. [Rom. 9, 16.] So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy; having His eye at the same time directed towards His covenant people in Egyptian bondage. For the Scripture saith unto Pharaoh, [Ex. 9, 16, 17,] And in every deed for this cause have I raised thee up, for to shew in thee my power, and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth. As yet exaltest thou thyself against my people, that thou will not let them go?

God had promised to bring the house of Israel up out of the land of Egypt at his own appointed time; and with a mighty hand and outstretched arm, and great terribleness; [Deut. 26, 8.] He chose to do this thing that His power might be known, and His name declared throughout all the earth, so that all nations might have the God of heaven in remembrance, and reverence His holy name; and to accomplish this it was needful that he should meet with opposition to give him an opportunity to manifest His power; therefore he raised up a man, even Pharaoh, who, He foreknew, would harden his heart against God of his own free will and choice, and would withstand the Almighty in His attempt to deliver His chosen people, and that to the utmost of his ability; and he proved himself worthy of the choice, for he left no means unimproved which his wicked heart could devise to vex the sons of Abraham, and defeat the purposes of the Most High, which gave the God of Abraham an opportunity to magnify his name in the ears of the nations, and in sight of this wicked king, by many signs and wonders, sometimes even to the convincing the wicked king of his wickedness and of the power of God, [Ex. 8, 28, etc.,] and yet he would continue to rebel and hold the Israelites in bondage; and this is what is meant by God's hardening Pharaoh's heart. He manifested himself in so many glorious and mighty ways, that Pharaoh could not resist the truth without becoming harder, so that, at the last, in his madness to stay the people of God, he rushed into the Red Sea with all his host, and was covered with the floods.

'Had not the power of God been exerted in a remarkable manner, it would seem as though the house of Israel must have become extinct, for Pharaoh commanded the midwives to destroy the sons of the Israelitish women as soon as they were born, [Ex. 1, 15, 16,] and called them to account for saving the men children alive, [verse 18] and charged all his people, saying, Every son that is born ye shall cast into the river; [verse 22] and yet God would have mercy on whom he would have mercy, [Rom. 9, 18] for he would have mercy on the godly child, Moses, when he was hid and laid in the flags [Ex. 11, 3,] by his mother, to save him from Pharaoh's cruel order, and caused that he should be preserved as a prophet and deliverer to lead his people up to their own country: and whom he would be hardened, for he hardened Pharaoh by passing before him in mighty power and withdrawing his spirit, and leaving him to his own wicked inclination, for he had set taskmasters over the Israelites to afflict them with their burdens, and caused them to build treasure cities for Pharaoh, and made them to serve with rigor; and made their lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar and brick, and all manner of service in the field, [Ex. 1st chap.,] beside destroying the men children; thus proving to the God of heaven and all men that he had hardened his own hard heart, until he became a vessel of wrath fitted for destruction; [Rom. 9, 22;] all this long before God said unto Moses, I will harden his (Pharaoh's) heart, [Ex. 4, 21.]

'Are men, then, to be saved by works? Nay, verily, by grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; [Eph. 2, 8;] not of works, lest any man should boast, [5, 9,] not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, [Titus 3, 5,] and yet faith without works is dead, being alone. [James 2, 17.] Was not Abraham our father justified by works? [5, 21.] Shall we then be saved by faith? Nay, neither by faith nor works, but by works is faith made perfect, [5, 22,] but by grace are ye saved, [Eph. 2, 8,] and if by grace, then it is no more of works, otherwise grace is no more grace; and if it be of works, then it is no more grace; otherwise works is no more works; [Rom. 11, 6;] ye see, then, how that a man is justified by works and not by faith only (James 2, 24].

Rom. 10, 3, 4: For they (Israel) being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God; for Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. Thus the righteousness of God is made manifest by the plan of salvation by his crucified Son; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved, but the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth; (Acts 4, 10, 12;) but of this the Jews were ignorant, although they themselves crucified him; and they have been going about wandering among all the nations of the earth ever since, for the space of 1800 years, trying to establish their own righteousness, which is of the law of Moses, which law can never make the comers thereunto perfect; (Heb. 10, 1,) yet notwithstanding their darkness and long dispersion, there is a remnant, according to the election of grace, (Rom. 11, 5,) whom God will gather from among all people whither they are scattered, and will be sanctified in them in the sight of the heathen; then shall they dwell in their land which God gave to his servant Jacob, and they shall dwell safely therein, and shall build houses and plant vineyards; yea, they shall dwell with confidence when I have executed judgments upon all those that despise them round about; and they shall know that I am the Lord their God; (Ezek. 2, 25, 26; Is. 11, 11 to 16;) and when this gathering shall be completed, it shall no more be said, the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, but the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of the north, and from all lands whither he had driven them, and I will bring them again unto this land which I gave unto their fathers, (Jer. 16, 14 to the end.)

'Rom. 11, 7: What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for, but the election hath obtained it. And why have they not obtained it? Because they sought it not by faith, but it were by the works of the law, for they stumbled at that stumbling stone; as it is written, Behold I lay in Zion a stumbling stone and rock of offense, (Rom. 9, 32, 33,) to both the houses of Israel, and for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and many of them shall stumble; (Isaiah 8, 14, 15,) but have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid; but rather through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles. (Rom. 11, 11.) And Jerusalem shall be trodden down by the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, (Luke 21, 24,) and when the house of Israel shall be restored to their possessions in Canaan, it may truly be said, the election hath obtained it; for the fulfillment of God's oath of election to Abraham, as the father of the faithful, and the promises to his children, will obtain that for Israel which he has sought for in vain by the law of Moses.

'This is the election that we believe in, viz., such as we find in the prophets and apostles, and the word of the Lord himself, and as we have not room to give all the quotations in full relating to election in this epistle, we would invite the Saints to examine the Scriptures in connection with these quoted; and whenever they find election, or any other principle or blessing, given or applied to the house of Israel, let those principles continue with the house of Israel, and not apply that to Esau which belongs to Jacob; nor to the churches of modern times which belong to ancient covenant people; and always ascertain how the Lord, the apostles and prophets have applied their words, and ever continue the same application, and knowledge and wisdom will be added unto you; and in the words of the beloved Peter and Paul, we would exhort you to work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure; (Phil. 2, 12, 13;) giving all diligence to make your calling and election sure, (II Pet. 1, 10,) for this is that sealing power spoken of in Ephesians 1, 13, 14: In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth; the gospel of your salvation, in whom also, after that ye believed ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory, (II Pet. 1, 11,) for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Dr. Rice, of this city, est engage en donnant a course of lectures in the Mercantile Library Hall upon the signs of the times, which have excited a good deal of interest and atttracted considerable attention.

His first lecture was delivered to a very large audience. The object of the lecturer was to show that the world is rapidly approaching another great epoch, which was foretold by prophecy and clearly indicated by the signs of the times.

Some who heard the Dr.'s first lecture thought he was a Millerite, and some asked if he was not a Mormon; and lest there should be still a dubity upon the minds of some concerning it, we would state that the lecturer is bona fide orthodox Presbyterian. It might be superfluous for us to add, he is a profound thinker, an able reasoner, and a good orator.

His second lecture was on the subject of infidelity in connection with the signs of the times. He traced the history of the various infidel systems, Deism, Atheism, Pantheism and Spiritualism, and showed conclusively that they were all in opposition to the reason and common sense of mankind—that all all these systems failed to satisfy the cravings of the immortal mind.

Had the lecturer been a Mormon he would have shown, moreover, that the Christianity of this age (so much boasted of) is as much opposed to the reason and good sense of true philosophers, and is as little calculated to satisfy the cravings of the immortal mind as infidelity.

He would have shown that the Christianity of this age is not the Christianity of the Bible.

The Dr. said, "that among the evidences of Christianity were those of miracles and prophecy;" that a miracle was the putting forth of divine power, as in the case of the calling forth of Lazarus from the dead; that genuine prophecy consists in foretelling future events which it is impossible for any human vision to forsee; he considered that infidels had not examined one-seventieth part of this class of testimony.

No one will think for a moment that the lecturer intended to be understood that modern Christianity has any of this class of testimony. No infidel has yet thought of examining the evidences of miracles and prophecies of Presbyterianism or Methodism, or any other of the sects of Christendom, for the simple reason that they have no such evidence to offer, and we are astonished that any intelligent mind should confuse the religion of the Bible with the religions of this age. The religion of the Bible according to the Dr.'s testimony, is a religion of miracles, prophecy, and divine power, whilst the religion of modern Christians denounce miracles as a humbug, prophecying as blasphemy, and divine power they declare a thing confined exclusively to former ages.

The lecturer said "we know that we are sinners, (he ought to have said miserable sinners,) and one of the most important questions is, Can God forgive sin? The Christian, with his Bible can show how it is done, Deism can't answer the question."

The Bible says that sins are remitted or washed away by baptism. Do modern Christians believe it? No. Then who are the greatest infidels, those who deny revelation in toto, or those who deny it in detail? To illustrate this question—the avowed infidel denies the religion of the New Testament as a whole; Christians deny it in parts. The Bible says God set in his church first apostles, second prophets, pastors, and teachers for the work of the ministry and perfecting of the Saints. The Christians say they are unnecessary; the work of the ministry can be carried on and the Saints perfected without them.

The Bible says be baptised for remission of sins; you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost by laying on of hands; you shall then speak in tongues and prophecy; you shall heal the sick by the prayer of faith, anointing with oil, and laying on of hands; and in the name of Jesus shall cast out devils. The Christians (so called) when questioned upon these things, will deny every item successively. We ask who are the worst infidels, those who openly acknowledge themselves unbelievers, or those who, cloaked in a religious garb, pretend to be true believers? Let the honest answer.

The third lecture was delivered on Thursday evening, the 11th inst. Subject: The signs of the times as they relate to our country, its mission, its perils, and its future prospects of permanent prosperity.

The lecturer dwelt in his introduction on the origin of our government, the peculiarity of its institutions, the character of its people, the extent and fertility of its territory, and its varied and exhaustless elements of greatness and power.

The lecturer said, "The Lord has raised up in other ages people and nations to accomplish his purposes, and in these last days has raised up this nation at this critical time, when the world is hastening to its last epoch to fulfill a special and divine mission.

We need not tell those of our readers who are at all acquainted with our doctrines that this is Mormonism; it is as the A B C of our education; these principles have been instilled into our minds from our very infancy in this church: these were the principles which burned in the bosom of the prophet Joseph and his noble brother Hyrum, and which dwell in the bosom of every Latter-day Saint.

The lecturer spoke in glowing language upon the character of the father's of this nation. "They were not," said he "the aristocracy of the old world who first sought a home in this land, but they were men who denounced the corruptions of their rulers—men who loved truth for its own merits—men who were oppressed in their own land because of their noble and independent principles; men who were willing to sacrifice everything for what they believed to be true—for truth they were prepared to brave every danger and boldly encounter every difficulty; these were the men who laid the foundation of this government, and who gave character to its institutions; and they were the right sort of men to lay the foundation of a new government. They were considered rebels, for they would ask no man how they were to serve God; their conscience was the only law they recognized upon that subject. Men who have no conscience or principle will change their opinions and principles as convemence or the will of their rulers may demand; but men of sterling principle would rather die than resign their faith and violate their conscience. The greatest rebels are generally men of the greatest principle."

The above needs no comment; suffice it to say, that Mormonism runs through every sentiment; for it runs through and encircles all things that are lovely, pure, noble and true, both in heaven and on earth.

The lecturer endeavored to prove that the divine mission of this nation is to evangelize the nations. He adduced as incontrovertible evidence that this nation would prosper, and as a ship, ride triumphant through every storm the following arguments: This country is far removed from the broils that disturb the old world, and in no danger from the weak nations in this hemisphere. While other nations are engaged in disastrous wars, we are left free to send the gospel of peace to the heathen. In this country we have as much liberty as any man can desire, and therefore there is no need of a revolution. Honesty, industry, and economy will always secure a competency, and the elements of wealth are accessible to all. Commercial interests bind the United States together; all portions are mutually dependent upon each other. The ties of kindred are a strong bond; members of the same family are to be found scattered over all the States.

The dangers to which this nation is exposed, the lecturer considered to be as follows: The rapid increase of wealth, and consequently luxury, dissipation, weakness; but this finds a salutary check in momentary crises, and the frequency with which wealth changes hands. The influx of foreigners—but American and Christian influence operates upon them and their children so as to prevent danger from that source; Popery—but the people of this country will never permit any potentate of Rome to dictate to them; Infidelity—but it has degenerated into abolitionism, woman's rights conventions, and spirit-rapping, and will not last much longer; the Slavery question—but while there is much talk among a few who are tenacious of one extreme or other, the masses of the people are more moderate, and have no idea of resorting to desperate means when nothing is to be gained by it; the decay of scund morals—but we hope to counteract this by sending the gospel and good books through the land.

After the lecturer had established peace and permanent prosperity for our country and ourselves, and had eloquently explained away the danger from our nation, he concluded by saying—"We cherish the hope that our vessel is safe; with the Bible as her guide all will be well. She will ride through the roughest gale, and gallantly weather the strongest storm. May the Lord perpetuate this glorious Union forever. Amen.

If we were skeptics we might ask for proof that this nation has a divine and special mission to evangelise the nations. We might ask to what individual or community this mission was given? If we were critics, we might ask, how long it will take this nation to moralise the world by Christianity, judging after the ratio of success at home? But as we are Americans and Christians, and believers in Divine missions, revelations, and in the signs of the times, in prophecying, in miracles, etc., we content ourselves by asking Christians generally, and all honest men, to examine the evidence we have to offer in support of these things; and we are fully satisfied that if this nation would believe our testimony, and arise en masse and make an atonement for the blood of prophets who have been murdered in this nation, and keep faithfully the commandments of God, that this nation would enjoy peace and prosperity, and be permanently established as a nation, in which the heavens were well pleased.

Elder M. Andrus requests us to say that he has received the invoice of the following books, which will be for sale on arrival of our first ships company, and gives the following list of books and prices for the information of our friends living at a distance, to save them the trouble of writing concerning them:—

Book of Mormon, $1; Doctrine and Covenants, 95 cents; Voice of Warning, 50 cents; Government of God, 50 cents; Hymn Books, roan, 50 cents, calf gilt, 80 cents, morocco $1 25; Divine Authority of Joseph Smith, 10 cents; Remarkable Visions, 10 cents; New Jerusalem, 15 cents; Only Way to be Saved, 5 cents.

Elder Andrus requests that all communications to him by letter, in future, be post-paid.

CAN THEY LET US ALONE?

The following beautiful extract is from the Millenial Star, of Dec. 23, in a leading article on the attitude which the United States were assuming toward the Saints, and the late newspaper war upon Utah:

"It would be well for our enemies if they would learn, by experience, the wisdom of letting us alone. Our past history surely shows that persecution has only served to increase our strength and influence, and we boldly throw out the assertion to the world that it will continue to be so in all future time.

"We expect persecution, knowing that the powers of evil will oppose the work of regeneration. Christ said it must needs be that offenses come, but wo unto them by whom they come. As a people, we have nothing to fear from persecution, for we know of a surety that it will build us up, while it will prove the downfall of our enemies.

"From small settlements in Missouri, we grew into a large and well organized city, and held the political control of a county in Illinois. After our expulsion from that place into the wilderness, we fled to the fastnesses of the Rocky Mountains, where alone we could enjoy that liberty denied us by hireling priests, corrupt rulers and a depraved people. There, through the blessings of the Almighty, we we have planted the germ of a future empire. There is a well organized territory, rapidly becoming weighty in the scale of political influence. The inhabitants are vigorous, energetic, and thoroughly inured to hardship and danger. They have thus far defended themselves against their enemies, and have been abundantly able to sustain the administration of their government, having received but little assistance from the United States.

"If thus in their earliest infancy they assumed the obligations of manhood, what will be the result of maturer years? What will be the next giant stride of a power which increases the more rapidly when violently opposed? We leave these questions for the future to disclose; and our enemies to answer, if they can. We know that the kingdom is the Lord's; that it will increase while other kingdoms decrease, and that every effort of its enemies to crush it will result in their own downfall. The pit they dig for the Saints they will fall into themselves, and the principles of truth will rise triumphant over all opposition.

"The approaching crisis in the United States, with regard to our doctrines and people, we have been anticipating for a number of years, and it has long been a subject of fireside conversation in hundreds of Mormon families. The angry clouds which, to the obscure vision of political demagogues and corrupt editors, appear to be gathering only over Utah, are big with the future destiny of the American Union.

"The eagle of freedom already hovers over the home of the oppressed in the valley of the mountains. The genius of liberty is departing from the American people. The escutcheon of the nation is stained with the blood of innocence. An attempted repetition of the foul deeds of Missouri and Illinois in a national capacity, and their glory will have departed. The north and south will rise up against each other, State against State, neighbor against neighbor, her peace will be taken away, and war, wasting, and desolation will prevail in all her borders.

"The present is not the only crisis we are expecting. They will arise in rapid succession, for the kingdoms of this world will come in collision with the kingdom of God and the powers of life. Their relative strength must be tested, and the great battles fought which are to win the earth from the dominion of Satan.

"While our enemies in anticipation gloat their bloodthirsty appetites over our long wished-for destruction, we look calmly at the approaching storms, knowing that each in succession will precede a more glorious day to all who remain faithful in the cause of truth."

CENSUS OF GREAT BRITAIN.

There were in 1851 in Great Britain—

Husbands, ...	3,391,271
Wives, ...	3,461,524

By this statement, Dickens says in his Household Words, it may be seen that every gude wife has not a gude man, the number of wives exceeding the number of husbands by seventy thousand two hundred and fifty-three. There were—

Widowers, ...	382,969
Widows, (oh, terrible phalanx to think on,)	795,590

The number of widows exceeding the number of widowers by four hundred and twelve thousand six hundred and twenty-one.

There were young men over twenty and under twenty-one—

Bachelors, ...	1,689,116
Spinsters, the same age, ...	1,767,194

Showing a balance in favor of the females amounting to seventy-eight thousand and seventy-eight.

There were of "old maids" over forty years of age, the moderate sum of . . . 359,969

Of bachelors, (shame on them,) . . 275,204

Showing a balance in favor of old maids (query, by whom favored?) amounting to eighty-four thousand, seven hundred and sixty-five.

The total number of females exceeds the number of males by six hundred and forty-five thousand seven hundred and twenty-seven. It must be remembered that the estimate does not include any of the population under twenty years of age.

In England and Wales, it is said, seven per cent. of the female population are widows; in Scotland, eight per cent.; in the British Islands, nine per cent.; in London, says Dickens, "we are blessed with widows to the extent of fourteen per cent.; and at Canterbury and Bury Saint Edmond's, they exceed fifteen per cent. This ought to make one serious."

The desolating wars in the east will not improve the present social and conjugal condition of the people; indeed, if the mortality of the male portion of the population of Europe should continue much longer, we should not be surprised to see Isaiah's prophecy fulfilled by their widows and daughters and others of the interested sisterhood, that is, seven of them take hold of one man, saying, let us be called by thy name, or in plain English, take us to be your wives, and thus take away our reproach. Monogamy will then be at a discount.

OUR EUROPEAN EMIGRATION.

President Richards writing under date of Liverpool January 29th, says: "In my last, I informed you of the 'Helios' being loaded, and receiving damage in the river by being stranded. She is now in dock, having discharged her passengers and their luggage, and is now discharging her cargo. The passengers may not be reshipped for a week or more.

"The Danish saints arrived here on Christmas day, all well and quite safe, and expect to sail some day next week on the 'James Nesmith,' hence for New Orleans.

"With nine hundred saints on my hands, I have had a busy if not a merry Christmas, with every prospect of opening the New Year with heart and hands full.

Correspondence of the Luminary.

[Extract of a letter from James McGaw.]

Hard Times—Beggary in Orleans—A Striking Contrast—Immense Emigration of Germans and Irish.

As for the times in this place, they are very hard and business is very dull; there are hundreds of men out of employment, and the streets are full of beggars. I have seen stout looking young men (Americans) actually begging for bread, saying that they had come from New York and could not get work, had no money nor food, and were suffering from hunger.

I see from the papers that there is much suffering n that city; that upwards of 15,000 have been turned out of employment from the various branches of mechanism.

The times are so dull and hard here, that it will be almost impossible for the emigration (should any be obliged to stay here) to find employment in this city; and it is worse, according to all account, in the eastern cities. But we have this confidence in God, that he will provide for his people.

What a contrast between the lovely Utah and this city—the fair Crescent of the South, as it is styled. There is no distress with hunger or poverty in the former; but the distress, wretchedness and degradation of multitudes of people in this place, is shocking to think of, and degrading to humanity.

The emigration from Germany has been immense this season, as well as from Ireland, and many have remained here, and among them it is that the ravages of misery have imprinted their teeth. This city is free at this time from epidemics or contagious diseases, but there is much murdering, larceny, burglary, and rapine reported daily.

Let them dwell in the metropolis of the sunny South who will, but for my part I would prefer a life in the secluded vallies of the Rocky Mountains, where I could enjoy the pleasant mountain breeze and the delicious draughts of the pure crystal streams that flow from the snow-capt hills, where friendship and love are without alloy—where no haunts of misery and wretchedness are known. But I endure as doing the will of my heavenly Father.

I had feared that some dark cloud had obscured the light from this city, as I had received but two numbers of the Luminary; but yesterday my fears were removed by its visitation. Now, Brother Snow, I wish you a happy New Year, and I pray that you may enjoy it, and be clothed with much power, and be filled with a double portion of the spirit of God, that you may be enabled to grasp all truth within your sphere, and disseminate light and knowledge to hundreds and thousands of the honest in heart, as well as comfort and strengthen the wayward Saints, and defend the cause of Zion through the invaluable colums of the Luminary, that is as a beacon light to elders among the nations of the East, and will be to the saints in every clime where it may enter.

I remain as ever,

Yours in the Gospel of Christ,
JAMES McGAW.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 1.

The Church of God vs. the Church of the Devil; Viewed by the Spirit of Revelation as Reflected in the Holy Scriptures.

BY WM. MORRISON.

The Church of God is sometimes called the kingdom of God, and sometimes the kingdom of heaven, in the plain, historical parts of the New Testament; in either sense, an organization of government applicable to few or many—the quality of her members or citizens having more to do with it than quantity or numbers. To how very few did the king Immanuel address himself, when he said—"Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom; and again, to his disciples—"The kingdom of heaven is within you." They, alone, knew the nature and extent of that kingdom upon the earth at that time, which had been organized by Jesus Christ in their midst, and by whom it was introduced among them, agreeably to the announcement of its approach by John the Baptist, who came crying—"Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." In the language of prophecy, the church of God is called the bride, the lamb's wife—a woman clothed with the sun, having the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars. The church is also called Zion. "Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness." "Awake, Zion, put on thy strength; say unto Zion thy God reigneth." "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion; and the nation and kingdom that will not serve Zion shall perish—yea, they shall be utterly wasted." This is the kingdom of light; her officers, (the apostles and prophets for the edification and perfection of the Saints,) peace; and the bishops and the deacons, (her exactors of tighting,) righteousness—necessary for the benefit of that heavenly community, as placed in that organization by Jesus: perfect in its adaptation to the Saints—the members of the church of Christ.

The church of the devil is called the synagogue of Satan. The great whore that sitteth upon many waters, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns—arrayed in purple and scarlet, decked with gold and precious stones; in her forefront a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots, that great city—Confusion—which has smitten all nations and reigns over the kings of the earth; and in her skirts was found the bland of Saints and Apostles; on the one hand is revelation, apostles, prophets and saints; on the other hand is mystery, confusion, a hireling clergy of Right Reverend Fathers in God, His Grace the Archbishop, My Lord the Bishop, Doctors of Divinity, not omitting the multitude of Reverend Mr. Somebodys everywhere adored, if these be not from the catalogue of false names, or some of the names of blasphemy, where shall we find them? We shall find them anywhere but in the church of God; there was neither Dr. Paul nor Dr. Peter, no, nor the Rev. Mr. Timothy, but the plain and simple characteristics of truth and loveliness; there was Peter, James and John. But for the infinite importance of the subjects, those heads of divinity and horns of power would excite a smile. Only think of Dr. Moses, the Rev. Mr. Joshua! Don't we all agree that the righteousness of those men makes their names far more famous without the appendages of modern Christianity? That they would feel infinitely disgraced by such empty baubles, we will leave it for the serious consideration of every candid reader, praying that their eyes may be opened to see the truth as it is in Jesus.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE CANADA.

HALIFAX, January 17, 6 P. M.—The steamer Canada, with Liverpool and London dates to the 6th inst., arrived at half past five o'clock, P. M.

Advices from the seat of war and diplomacy, by this arrival, possess but little of special interest, and the interesting features of it may be summed up in the two following points, viz: The Allies, at the latest advices, had three hundred guns in a position ready to open a fire on Sebastopol, and were only waiting for a favorable movement to commence, after bombarding the city and forts forty-eight hours, night and day.

They would then storm the city on the South side, while Menschikoff would be attacked in the field at the North. The whole programme had been arranged, and a full determination arrived at to make one grand attack immediately. Result looked for with intense anxiety, as the fate of the allies is involved in it.

The news from other points is that the negotiations at Vienna had been postponed fourteen days, to give the Czar one more chance to come to terms.

Rodgers & Wood, a London iron house, failed for a large amount.

NEW YORK, January 18.—The seige works at Sebastopol are advancing steadily, and direct communication between the troops in the city and the Russian force at Balaklava has been nearly cut off. Sorties are made most every night by the Russians, but on every occasion they have been repulsed with great loss. The Allies are strengthening their position, and will soon be able to take the offensive—their losses are more promptly and solidly repaired than are the Russians.

Notwithstanding the favorable turn in the affairs of the Allies, and the near completion of the arrangements for storming the city, it is thought that no important steps will be taken by them until January 15th. In the meantime, the armies are in high spirits, and anxiously awaiting the signal for the attack.

Canrobert writes that they will soon be ready to take the offensive, and make good the losses, more promptly and more solidly than the enemy can; the army is full of confidence. The allies, on the 25th, had opened their fire. The plan of operations is, that the fire is to be continued, without cessation, 48 hours, followed by a general assault by both the French and English.

The London Times created considerable excitement by advocating in the boldest terms, the immediate removal of Lord Raglan, on the ground of incompetency. The Times is also vigorously writing down the ministry, and indicates Marquis Dalhousie, the present Governor of India, as the only man capable of the position of Minister of War.

The Queen has written an autograph letter sympathising with the wounded soldiers.

The siege works had advanced so far that direct communication was prevented between the garrison of Sebastopol and the Russian forces near Balaklava.

The correspondent of the "Presse" believes nothing serious can be attempted before January 15.

CONGRESSIONAL.

WASHINGTON, January 12, 1855—SENATE.—The death of Senator Norris was announced, whereupon

Mr. TOUCEY arose and said: Mr. President, it falls to my lot to perform the melancholy task of announcing to the Senate the death of one of its members. The Hon. Mr. Norris, Senator from New Hampshire, is no more. He died at his lodgings in this city, of an affection of the heart, on Thursday evening at 11 1-2 o'clock. Three days ago we saw him in the midst of us, in the fullness of life and health; but he was struck down in a moment, without consciousness; and, though he revived for a time, and was restored to the full possession of his faculties, yet a recurrence of the attack proved fatal. He has left a wife and family of children to feel bitterly their loss.

Mr. CASS followed, and said—We have received another solemn warning that "in the midst of life we are in death." "Be ye also ready" is written on all the shifting scenes of life, from the cradle to the grave. May these lessons teach us so to live that when we enter the dark valley we may be sustained by our consciousness of the rectitude of our action, and our faith in the promises of our Redeemer.

Resolutions were then passed that the Senators wear crape on their left arm for thirty days; that they proceed to the late residence of Senator Norris to attend his funeral there at 4 o'clock this afternoon, to accompany his remains to the railroad depot; and that the House of Representatives be notified of his decease.

WASHINGTON, January 16—SENATE.—Mr. Cass introduced resolutions of inquiry, whether air and water tight mail bags cannot profitably be substituted for those now in use. Mr. Cass moved the bill on internal improvement be taken upon Monday. Mr. Benjamin suggested change to Monday next, and Hunter, to Wednesday week. The bill made the order of the day for Wednesday the 24th inst.

Senate—The Compensation Bill was debated. Various propositions to amend, so as to give members of Congress twenty-five hundred dollars per annum and mileage, and Judges of the Supreme Court $7,000, and District Judges from $2,000 to $5,000. Still pending when the Senate went into executive session and confirmed J. C. Breckenridge Minister to Spain. Adjourned.

Washington, January 18—Senate.—A message was read from the President enclosing a communication from the Secretary of War relative to a renewal of hostilities by the Indians. The Secretary recommends increase of force to hold the Indians in check, and represents the case as calling for prompt action. The President proposes to call into requisition the services of three thousand volunteers to protect the overland travelers to the Pacific, from the Indians.

Mr. Gwinn hoped the Senate would carry out the suggestions of the President. The message and communication were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

House.—The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Pacific Railroad bill.

SCHOOLS.

As we have now got so many comfortable dwellings built, good farms opened, plenty of stock around, an abundance of provisions, large wood pliles, and a school house in nearly every ward in our Territory, is it not high time to turn a little attention and means towards hiring good teachers at fair salaries, and prompt pay, and getting wood piles around our school houses, that scholars and teachers may be comfortable while occupying heir time n seeking and imparting useful knowledge? We are commanded to seek learning out of the best books, and as we have the best and most intelligent set of children in all the earth, we are anxious that they have a fair opportunity to keep the commandments, and prepare themselves for the greatest possible amount of usefulness. Religious Liberty in France.—The Washington Globe states that two spirited letters have been addressed to Louis Napoleon by English Christians, requesting that religious liberty might be granted to his Protestant subjects. Queen Victoria has also addressed him an autograph letter on the same subject. In one of their letters, the English Christians quote the memorable words of Napoleon Bonaparte, addressed to Protestants at his coronation. After stating that it was his firm purpose to maintain freedom of religious creeds, he adds: "if any of my race, hereafter to succeed me, should disregard the oath which I have taken and which, misled by the inspiration of a perverted conscience, he should come to violate, I devote him to public animadversion, and I authorize you to give him the name of Nero."

Beauties of the Law.—A case was decided in the Common Pleas, at Cambridge Mass., the other day, which illustrates the "glorious uncertainties of the law." In the spring of 1849, Tuttle of Acton, sold a cow to Brown of Concord, for fifty dollars.—Soon after the purchase, Brown discovered that the cow had one dry teat. He then requested Tuttle to allow him a discount of twelve dollars and fifty cents on the bill, and stated that he was ready to pay the balance. Tuttle refused to make any allowance for the dry teat, and sued Brown for the whole bill. The case was decided in his favor, but was carried up on appeal, again returned to the Common Pleas, where it has remained on the docket until last Tuesday, when it was decided in favor of Brown. The costs have amounted to eight hundred dollars.

Progress of Crime.—A contractor for carrying the mail from Milford, Delaware, to Cambridge, Maryland, was arrested yesterday as an accomplice of a postoffice clerk in a series of mail robberies. Almost every day the papers in some part of the country or other announce a robbery, breach of trust, embezzlement, or other felony on the part of some postoffice agent, contractor, bank officer, cashier, teller, or other person—evincing a growing laxity of morals and honesty. This is a sort of "progress" greatly to be deplored.—[Nat. Intel.

Anecdote of the Czar.—Nicholas, it is stated, was lately informed that a tradesman in a large way of business had insulted a Frenchman without provocation, and he immediately sent for him. When asked why he had insulted the man, he replied, "because I hate his nation." "Is it your only motive?" "Yes, sire." "Then you shall have an opportunity to gratify your hatred. I shall send you to join my army in the Crimea."

Edmund Lafayette, the grandson of Gen. Lafayette, and the only lineal descendant of the illustrious deceased, is now in Washington city. Yesterday he visited the two houses of Congress, and was introduced to members and others. After making the tour to the South he will return to France.—[Baltimore Patriot, 25th.

The depression of trade has caused large discharges of operatives at Cooper's rolling mill, Trenton, N. J., at the factories in Wilmington, Del., and in most of the manufacturing towns of New England. In Pennsylvania the distress is not so great, but, nevertheless, there have been large numbers of hands discharged from iron works, cotton factories, etc. At Morristown the Swede Iron Company, and Messrs. Thomas, Corsen & West have reduced the wages of their hands twenty per cent.

Through trains will run daily from Galena depot to Burlington, Iowa, on the 15th of this month. This line traverses one of the finest regions in the Western country, and will prove a route of the most vital importance to the business interests of our city.

SHAFFNER'S WORLD-GIRDLE TELEGRAPH.

We announced several months since, the departure of Tal. P. Shaffner, Esq., the editor of The American Telegraphic Magazine, for Europe, to make arrangements for the construction of a telegraph around the world. He has recently returned from his expedition, the results of which possess more than ordinary interest.

We learn from Mr. Shaffner that his recent tour in Europe was undertaken for the purpose, first, of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the different modes of telegraphing and constructing lines in the old world; secondly, to negotiate with the Danish Government for the exclusive right to lay a line over Greenland, Iceland, the Faroe Isles, and Denmark, for the term of one hundred years; thirdly, for the acquisition of similar rights over Norway, Sweden and Russia. With these and other rights, which he proposed to himself to secure, the success of his plan to girdle the world with the electric telegraph, no longer appears visionary or impracticable.

Starting from the coast of Labrador, the width of the sea to Greenland is about five hundred miles. From the point of landing, the line is to extend underground around Cape Farewell to a point on the east coast of Greenland, favorable for a submarine connection with Iceland. A subterranean line across to the eastern coast of that island will connect with a submarine wire running to the Faroe Isle, and thence to Norway, landing at or in the vicinity of Bergen. Mr. Shaffner informs us that the land and climate of Greenland, and the isles are as well, and even better, adapted to the construction of the telegraph than those of the United States. Greenland abounds with mineral wealth, and he thinks the telegraph will tend to develop the unappreciated resources of that country. By the route there will be no submarine section of more than five hundred miles, and the loss or failure of one section will not destroy the others. In a line direct from Ireland to Newfoundland the failure of any part occasions a loss of the whole.

After landing on the coast of Norway it is intended to run the line to Christiana, the capital of Norway, and from thence branches to Copenhagen and Stockholm. The Danish Government has bound itself to furnish proper connections with the governments on the continent and Great Britain. Consequently it will not be necessary to run a cable from the Faroe Isles to the Shetlands, Orkneys and to North Scotland. Treaties with the Emperor of Russia contemplate the extension of the line from Stockholm, in Sweden, to St. Petersburg, across or along the coast of Finland. By the construction of this section, America will be able to transmit intelligence direct to Russia, and thus establish most intimate relations between the subjects of the Czar and the sovereigns of the United States.

Leaving St. Petersburg, Mr. Shaffner proposes to run his line to Moscow, or connect at the latter place with the imperial lines already in operation—thence to Kazan across the Ural mountains, into Asia, passing through Orusk, Kolivan, Kausk, Oudinsk to Irkoutsk, near Lake Baikal. This is near the great tea country in Chinese Tartary, whence the Russian tea is brought overland on wagons. The trade in this tea, which is said to be the best in the world, is large, and the telegraph, it is supposed, will tend to increase it materially.

From Irkoutsk it is intended to run the line to the sea of Ochotsk, either north to Yokoutsk, or south with the Amour river, and thence along the coast of the sea of Ochotsk to Iamsk, and across the gulf to cape Utkoloka, Kamtschatka, and thence along the Aluetian isles to Aliaska peninsula or Cooke's inlet, in North America. From this point the line will be run along the Pacific coast to Oregon, and south to San Francisco, California. This range is entirely south of the latitude of St. Petersburg, and, in fact, the line can be carried around by the Behring straits, and be south of the Arctic circle.

From San Francisco Mr. Shaffner proposes to run the line along the best route to the Salt Lake, and thence to the western boundary of Missouri, where it will intersect the existing section of the California line, built by him a few years ago. Joining the great lines in America, the earth will be girdled with one continuous and unbroken flame of electric light.

In the ocean or submarine department of the great work, Mr. Shaffner has associated with him Mr. John W. Brett, who has been the projector and successful constructor of the vast ranges of submarine and subterranean lines of the old world.

The consummation of this great enterprise will be productive of consequences which the human imagination strives in vain to realize. It will enable us to communicate daily with every civilized nation on the face of the globe, and many not so civilized, for as soon as possible after the completion of the main trunk, branch lines will be extended to Japan, Pekin, Nankin, Canton, and other cities of China.

We are informed by Mr. Shaffner, that he expects but little trouble in maintaining the line through Russia in Europe, in Asia, or America. The roads are good and well improved—the climate is most favorable for the enterprise, and, with the aid of the Emperor, he thinks there will be no formidable hindrance. The military system is very perfect throughout the Empire, and will constitute an ample guarantee against any troubles which telegraphic science cannot provide against.

In the negotiations of Mr. Shaffner in Europe he has been singularly fortunate, and his efforts have been crowned with flattering success. Depending upon his energy, he has succeeded where the most skillful diplomats might have failed. He informs us that he had one great element of strength; that was, he was an American. His Majesty the King of Denmark intimated to him that he would not have considered the proposition had it come from a citizen of any other nation; but he informed Mr. Shaffner that he granted the patents under the belief that there were no obstacles in nature that could be a barrier against the genius and enterprise of his countrymen.—[Evening Post, 5th.

Combat between an Alligator and a Gar.

In Clarke county, near Choctaw Bluff, on the Alabama river, there is a beautiful and quiet little Lake of clear water, which has been the theme of praise since the first settlement of the country. It is fed by two creeks emptying into it, equally pellucid, and at all times it presents a scene of lovliness that a poet or a painter would dwell upon with rapture. In length it is about a mile and a half, hemmed in on one side by high and gracefully curving banks, and on the other fringed by the drooping foliage of overhanging trees. Upon the whole, it is a most beautiful and picturesque sheet of water, small as it is, and in the spring and summer is a place of great resort from miles around for fishing—perch, trout, cat and other fresh water fish existing there in great abundance. It is too, a favorite haunt of alligators. Many has been the "fish fry" there, whole families frequently going to make a pleasant day of it.

On one occasion two or three negroes were quietly angling there, relishing the sport as keenly as old Izaak Walton could have done had he been present, when, all of a sudden, a great commotion was observed in the middle of the Lake. Upon closer observation, it was observed that an alligator and a gar, both of a large size, were engaged in a deadly conflict. At times they would rise to the surface and by their fearful strife produce a great noise and violently agitate a large portion of the surface of the lake. Then the combatants would suddenly sink, and for a moment all was tranquil. But this was only for a brief space; for they would again rise, the gar fast hold of the fore leg of his adversary, chewing and "momickin" equal to the feat of a real biting and gouging bully. The alligator tried the same game, but the skin of the gar was too hard and smooth for his blunt teeth to hold on.

He then resorted to his tail, and the way he slashed his garship was a caution, and fairly made the lake boil. The contest became more and more exciting—the darkeys dropped their fishing-rods and looked on with wrapped wonder. "Look dar Sambo, 'fore God all de fish and gar and alligator are dar barring witness to dis awful fight"—and sure enough the surface for a wide space around was covered with every species of fish and a number of alligators, all seemingly attracted by the noise made by the combatants, and spell-bound in contemplating the conflict. Suddenly the belligerents plunged beneath the surface, and within a few moments the late scene of strife was hushed and quiet—they and the vast concourse of the finny tribe having sunk from observation, and night rapidly closed over the dreadful strife.

Early next morning, a party of gentlemen, accompanied by the negroes, visited the lake to ascertain the result of the battle. Mr. gar was nowhere to be found, but after a little dragging with hooks, the alligator was brought up from the bottom, "dead as a mackerel"—his throat completely cut, and the fore feet "chawed." These facts are vouched for by some of the most respectable gentlemen of Clarke county. Those who have seen the alligator-gar can readily understand how, with its long jaws and sharp teeth, it could cut the throat of an alligator, and with other peculiarities, make a very ugly customer for the most powerful alligator.—[Mobile Tribune.

FACTS OF THE YEAR.

The Cincinnati Columbian contains the following very interesting statistics of the past year:

The entire loss from fires in the United States for the year, is estimated at about twenty-five million dollars. There were also eighty-three fires, in which loss of life ensued, the number of victims being one hundred and seventy-one.

The number of railroad accidents was one hundred and ninety-three, killing one hundred and eighty-six persons, and wounding five hundred and eighty-nine. In 1853, there was only one hundred and thirty-eight similar accidents, but attended with the loss of two hundred and thirty-four lives, besides four hundred and ninety-six wounded.

The steamboat accidents of the year have alarmingly increased, the total number reaching forty-eight with the loss of five hundred and eighty-seven souls, and two hundred and twenty-five wounded, against thirty-one accidents, and three hundred and nineteen killed, and one hundred and fifty-eight wounded, in the year 1853.

Crime, too, of every grade, foots up a fearful catalogue. There were six hundred and eighty-two murders, and eighty-four executions during the year.

The list of mortality for the year includes the demise of no less than eighteen men, and twenty-seven women who had attained the age of one hundred years and upward. One (a colored woman) was said to be one hundred and forty-six, and another (an Indian woman) one hundred and forty-two years of age. The oldest white man was one hundred and seven, and the oldest white woman one hundred and twenty-one years.

Omar Pacha and a Lady at the Opera.

On Friday last, an incident occurred in the opera here, which has excited considerable sensation, and is the talk of the town, (Bucharest.) Omar Pacha made his appearance in his box, accompanied by the wife of his nephew, Tefwik Bey. The lady was completely unveiled, and sat thus listening to the music with the most perfect composure. This is I believe, the first instance on record in which the wife of a Mussulman has displayed her features before men, and above all before giaours, and is consequently a tremendous innovation, of which I am very anxious to see the result. It displays great courage on the part of Omar Pacha, but will, I am certain, when the news reaches Constantinople, excite the fiercest ire amongst the old Turks. Mussar Pacha came into the box soon after, and entered into conversation with Madame, and while this was going on Ismail Pacha (not he of Kalafat) arrived and took his place on the opposite side of the house. Glancing across, he saluted Omar Pacha, but on seeing the lady, he became deadly pale, remained motionless for two or three minutes, and then rose up, saluted again, left the box, and returned no more. On the same evening, Mussar Pacha distributed tickets to twelve English, twelve French, twelve Wallachian, and Turkish soldiers, who took their places in the stalls, and enjoyed the spectacle highly, to the great rage of the Austrian officers, who complained bitterly of it the next day.—[Corr. STEAM—A MIRACLE.

Sir Ralph Woodford told us that when his steamer was first started, (in Trinidad,) he and a large party, as a mode of patronizing the undertaking, took a trip of pleasure in her, through some of the Bocas of the main ocean. Almost every one got sick outside, and as they returned through the Boca Grande, there was no one on deck but the man at the helm and himself. When they were in the middle of the passage, a small privateer, such as commonly infested the gulf during the troubles in Columbia, was seen making all sail for the shore of Trinidad. Her course seemed unaccountable; but what was their surprise, when they observed, that on nearing the coast, the privateer never tacked, and finally, that she ran herself directly on shore, the crew at the same time leaping out over the bows and sides of the vessel, and scampering off as if they were mad, some up the mountains, and others into the thickets. This was so strange a sight, that Sir Ralph Woodford ordered the helmsman to steer for the privateer that he might discover the cause of it. When they came close, the vessel appeared deserted. Sir Ralph went on board of her, and after searching various parts without finding any one, he at length opened a little cabin, and saw a man lying on a mat evidently with some broken limb. The man made an effort to put himself in a posture of supplication; he was pale as ashes, his teeth chattered and his hair stood on end. "Misericordia! misericordia! Ave Maria!" faltered forth the Columbian. Sir Ralph asked the man what was the strange conduct of the crew? "Misericordia!" was the only reply.

"Sabeis quien soy?" *

"El—el—O Senor! misericordia! Ave Maria!" answered the smuggler.

It was a considerable time before the fellow could be brought back to his senses, when he gave this account of the matter: that they saw a vessel, apparently following them, with only two persons on board, and steering without a single sail, directly in the teeth of the wind, current, and tide:—

Against the breeze, against the tide,
She steadied on with upright keel.

That they knew no ship could move in such a course by human means; that they heard a deep roaring noise, and saw an unusual agitation of the water, which their fears magnified; finally, that they concluded it to be a supernatural appearance, accordingly drove their vessel ashore in a agony of terror, and escaped as they could; that he himself was not able to move, and that when he heard Sir Ralph's footsteps, he verily and indeed believed he was fallen into the hands of the Evil Spirit!—Coleridge's West Ends.

MISS EDGEWORTH.

There sprung up, to evade the law of Ireland, (repealed but twelve years since,) which made forcible abduction a capital felony, a clever system of evasion. The law punished the man who ran away with a young woman. A practice of putting the damsel before the man on the horse, commenced, and thus it appeared as if it was she that was carrying him off. There is a memorable instance of this which occurred in the higher class of Irish gentry. Captain Edgeworth, a widower with one son, married Mrs. Bridgman, a widow with an only daughter. At the ripe age of 16 and 15, these children declared their mutual love. The mother refused her consent. The young lady was an heiress, and her mother, it was known, would proceed to the utmost severity of the law against any one who should carry her off. Love has many expedients, and the lady, having first mounted on her horse, assisted her boy lover to a seat behind her. In this way she ran away with him. They were married and forgiven. Maria Edgeworth, the Irish writer, was a direct descendant of this marriage, and the writer heard the story from her own lips.—[Y. N. Times.

AMBROTYPE LIKENESSES.

A most valuable improvement in the art of producing likenesses has recently been introduced by Messrs. Cutting & Bowdoin, of Boston. The picture is taken upon plate glass after which a similar glass is placed over it, and the two are cemented together by an indestructable gum, rendering the picture impervious to atmospheric influence, and securing to it the most perfect durability. The great superiority of this new process is manifest, inasmuch as by it the most perfect, minute, and life-like delineations are produced, either in minature or of full size, and capable of retaining a perpetual brilliancy. The pictures are not reversed, as in the ordinary daguerreotyping process, and they are immediately perceptable in any light without the necessity of change of position. Mr. Cutting, the senior partner, is the inventor of this process, and patents have already been secured in the United States, Great Britian, and France. It may with perfect truth be urged that this is the most important discovery in the art of photography that has yet been made.—[Atlas.

Twenty-seven Thousand Destitute Females in New York.—Mr. Elias Fountain states to us that there are now about twenty-seven thousand females of good character in this city quite destitute of any means of support. This number is, in his opinion, rather under than over the mark. To provide for the exigencies arising from so much suffering, as must necessarily be the case, this gentleman, on Christmas morning, opened a book of subscriptions, on the cover of which he had written a pledge to raise $2,000 for this praiseworthy object. Mr. Fountain informs us, in an hour after he had opened his book, his applications were answered to the amount of $600, and he is confident of being able to fulfil his pledge.—[N. Y. Express.

Blessing Bells!—Rt. Rev. Bishop Bayley (Roman Catholic) on Tuesday last, blessed a chime of bells for the Church of the Most Holy Redeemer, in Third street, New York. This is the first time the ceremony was ever performed in this city. There were nearly two thousand persons present on the occasion. A military company, called the Independant Rifles, were present as a guard of honor. The bells, four in number, were sent from Germany to the World's Fair here. The largest was dedicated in the honor of St. Michael; the second St. Gabriel; the third St. Rapheal; and the fourth St. Alphonsus.

A New Proposed Railroad to the Pacific.

An extraordinary project has been submitted by the commissioner of the crown lands and eighteen others to the Canadian Legislature, and has been printed by order of that body for constructing a railway to the Pacific ocean. The project is embodied in a petition praying for a charter for the "Northern Pacific Railroad Company." The proposed railroad is designed to extend from the city of Montreal by the way of Bytown and the valley of the Ottawa, to the western boundary of Canada, and thence across the St. Mary's river, between Lakes Superior and Huron, at a convenient place, into Michigan, with the further right to enter into engagements with any other railway company or companies in Canada or the United States, for connecting their respective lines in such manner as may be found most advantageous.

The petition refers to the report of Governor Stevens as a proof of the practicability of extending a railroad across the continent of North America, in the valleys of the head waters of the Missouri, and by means of a short tunnel through the mountains at the summit level. The tunnel would be only five thousand feet above the surface of the sea. The approach to it would be gradual, the grade not exceeding sixty feet per mile, and it is believed that after crossing the Rocky mountain summit, a favorable and direct route might be found to San Francisco.

If the proposed road to the Pacific was built there would, without doubt, be some point on the upper Missouri river, where all the railways of the continent reaching westward toward the Pacific, would naturally converge, as a common point of junction and intersection.

Assuming this to be the case, the petitioners for the charter wish to secure a line of railway in the shortest possible distance between the great bend of the Missouri and the Atlantic ocean. They believe that the project is feasible. No physical difficulties exist to hinder its accomplishment. The agricultural and mineral wealth which such a road would open both to the United States and Canada, is urged as a strong argument in its favor; and besides contributing to hasten the settlement of the wild country in the neighborhood of the great mountain range, the construction of such a work would materially shorten the transit to the East Indies. It would, in short, confer upon Canada and the Northern States an immense degree of commercial and political importance.

LINE OF STEAMERS FROM CALIFORNIA TO CHINA—PACIFIC RAILROAD.

On the 9th inst., Mr. Latham, of the House of Representatives, from California, spoke in favor of establishing a line of mail steamers between San Francisco and Shanghai, touching at the Sandwich Islands. He argued to show that the colonization and settlement of California by our own race would have a similar influence on Asia, as the discovery and settlement of this continent had on Europe. The establishment of such a line would add substantially to the wealth and power of this entire country. California and Oregon are to play a part like that played by ancient Egypt in the civilization of the world. San Francisco will become a modern Alexandria, through which the wealth and magnificence of Asia will be poured into our lap. We will have an extensive trade with Japan, China, and the Indian Archipelago. Commerce is a greater civilizer than war. Should this bill pass, it will go further to effect those important results than any other measure involving no greater appropriation of money. In glowing language he showed the effects of trade with those nations, and the geographical advantages which we possess for the establishment of such a line of steamships. Among them the important one of shortening the distance between China and the United States. He incidentally spoke of the necessity of a railroad to the Pacific, and pressed the passage of the steamer bill on the grounds of humanity, civilization, commerce and navigation, and predicted it would largely contribute to the progress, power and grandeur of the American people.—[Ex.

A PRISONER AT SEBASTOPOL.

The last day I was in the trenches, while a slight skirmish was going on in front, and in a covered way I met one of our riflemen and a Russian rifleman walking slowly together. As I came nearer, I saw that the Russian was limping along in pain, resting his hands on our fellow's shoulder, who with two rifles under his arm, and a pipe in his mouth, was walking easily and coolly along, evidently giving his wounded opponent some good advice, which, I have no doubt, was all the better relished for not being understood. Struck with the singularity of their appearance, I waited till they approached, and asked the rifleman how he got his prisoner? "Is it where did I get him, sir?" said he, with an accent of indignant surprise, "faith I shot him with my own two hands." "When did you shoot him?" I inquired. "When? I shot him down there, of course," said he, pointing to the "ovens," where there had been a slight skirmish. "He was down there, behind a wall, sir, taking aim, with only his legs out, when I hit him with my last round in the knee; and I've got his pipe, sir, and I've got his bacca, sir, and all I wants now is his boots, and I'm leading him to the hospital, when I can take 'em off him comfortably." Having said this much with a droll earnestness, to which no words can do justice, he quietly resumed his way toward the rear, assisting and helping his poor wounded prisoner, who during the whole time of our dialogue had been bowing cap in hand from one to the other, as if to implore our mercy and protection.

True Philosophy.—One great secret of domestic enjoyment is too much overlooked. It lies in bringing our circumstances up to our wants. Wants will always be ahead of means, and there will be no end to the race if you set the latter chasing the former. Put the yoke of self-denial on Desire, apply the spur of industry to Energy, and then if the latter does not overtake the former it will at least come in sight of it.

Poetical Department.

THERE'S WORK ENOUGH TO DO.

The black-bird early leaves its nest,
To meet the smiling morn,
And gather fragments for its nest
From upland, wood and lawn.
The busy bee that wings its way
'Mid sweets of varied hue,
At every flower would seem to say,
"There's work enough to do."

The cowslip and the spreading vine,
The daisy in the grass,
The snow-drop and the eglantine,
Preach sermons as we pass.
The ant within its cavern deep,
Would bid us labor too,
And writes upon its tiny heap,
"There's work enough to do."

The planets, at their Maker's will,
Move onward in their cars,
For Nature's wheel is never still—
Progressive as the stars!
The leaves that flutter in the air,
And summer breezes woo,
One solemn truth to man declare—
"There's work enough to do."

Who then can sleep, when all around
Is active, fresh and free?
Shall man—creation's lord—be found
Less busy than the bee?
Our courts and alleys are the field,
If men would search them through,
That best the sweets of labor yield,
And "work enough to do."

To have a heart for those who weep,
The sottish drunkard win:
To rescue all the children, deep
In ignorance and sin;
To help the poor, the hungry feed,
To give him coat and shoe,
To see that all can write and read,
Is "work enough to do."

The time is short, the world is wide,
And much has to be done;
This wondrous earth, and all its pride,
Will vanish with the sun!
The moments fly on lightning's wings,
And life's uncertain, too;
We've none to waste on foolish things—
"There's work enough to do."

TERRITORY OF UTAH.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3, 1855.

To the Editors of the National Intelligencer:

GENTLEMEN: As the delegate in Congress from the Territory of Utah, I have the right to debate any question which may engage the attention of that body, and doubtless a liberal interpretation would be given to the language by which the right of a delegate is secured to me. The practice in the House of Representatives has given an extensive range to debate, and sometimes matters personal have been mingled with those that are national. That which affects the constituency has been generously allowed to be personal to the representative; and I have precedents which would justify me in troubling the House, in which I have the honor to occupy a seat, with the correction of errors which have been infused into the public mind respecting the administration of the governmental affairs of the Territory of Utah. The propriety of such a course, however, appeared to me in many cases to be questionable, and I avail myself of the press to correct one or two errors to which the press has given an injurious circulation.

Gov. Brigham Young has been superseded by a distinguished military gentleman, whose appointment the Senate has confirmed. I may, therefore, by a brief explanation, vindicate the character of Gov. Young, without suspicion of motive to secure his reappointment, which might create distrust of the facts to which I appeal.

By the twelfth section of the act of the 9th of September, 1850, entitled "An act to establish a Territorial Government for Utah," the sum of twenty thousand dollars was appropriated to the Territory, to be applied by the Governor and Legislative Assembly to the erection of suitable public buildings at the seat of government. That sum was advanced to Gov. Young in the month of July, 1851, and he has been unwarrantably charged with a misapplication of that money. Of that accusation a very simple statement will be an ample refutation.

On the 30th of September, 1853, Governor Young rendered an account and vouchers setting forth the expenditure of $10,373.48. Of this sum the Hon. Elisha Whittlesey, First Comptroller of the Treasury, allowed $8,703.98, but disallowed $1,668, paid for the services of various persons as a committee and otherwise, including traveling expenses on an expedition to select a site for the seat of government. Mr. Whittlesey objected to it as an unusual charge, though its necessity must be apparent. However, that sum deducted, the balance amounts to $11,296 02, for which Governor Young holds himself ready to account. The Indian hostilities which have troubled the Territory and other causes, have delayed the completion of the public buildings, but Governor Young has given notice to the Secretary of the Treasury, as the best refutation of the accusation against him, that he will honor a draft at sight if that officer of the General Government will draw upon him for the unexpended balance in his hands.

Can other evidence be necessary to show the wantonness of Gov. Young's assailants? Papers that have borne the character of respectability with intemperate zeal, have pandered to prejudice on no more substantial basis. On the one hand Gov. Young is represented as defiant to the General Government, threatening hostilities towards any gentleman that may be sent to succeed him, and on the other, the people are said to be disloyal to the General Government; and in the imagination of zealots, armies are marshalled in battle array, and Utah is already a field of blood.

Capt. Stansbury of the corps of Topographical Engineers of the United States Army, who, in his exploration and survey of the valley of the Great Salt Lake of Utah, had ample opportunity to form a correct estimate of the people among whom he so long dwelt, (and he will not be suspected of partiality to Mormonism,) in his report to his superior officer, which the United States Senate and the House of Representatives published, says he feels confident that the imputations which have been made against the personal character of Gov. Young are without foundation, and that his personal reputation is above reproach.

"Certain it is, (Mr. S. says,) that the most entire confidence is felt in his integrity, personal, official, and pecuniary, on the part of those to whom a long and intimate association, and in the most trying emergencies, have afforded every possible opportunity of forming a just and accurate judgment of his true character."

The disloyalty of Gov. Young and the people of Utah is disproved by the same unquestioned and unquestionable authority. An illustrative incident in the history of that people may put to shame their assailants. I quote again from Capt. Stansbury:

"In their progress westward through the northern part of Missouri, they were again driven from that State, by violent threats, into the southern borders of Iowa, whence, after much hardship and suffering, they reached in the course of the summer, the banks of the Missouri, beyond the limits of the States. Here they enclosed land and planted crops, leaving some of their number to reap the fruits, which were to be applied to the sustenance of other companies that were to follow as soon as they should be able to procure means. They were about crossing the river to pursue their journey westward, when an officer of the United States Government presented himself, with a requisition for five hundred men to serve in the war with Mexico. This demand, though sudden and unexpected, was promptly and patriotically complied with; but, in consequence, the expedition was broken up for the season. Those that remained being principally old men, women and children, prepared to pass the winter in the wilds of an Indian country, by cutting hay and erecting log and sod huts, and digging as many caves as time allowed and their strength enabled them."

In another portion of the same work Capt. Stansbury says:

"From all that I saw and heard, I deem it but simple justice to say, that notwithstanding these causes of irritation, a more loyal and patriotic people cannot be found within the limits of the Union. This, I think, was emphatically shown in the promptitude and cheerfulness with which they responded to the call of the Government to furnish a battalion for service during the Mexican war, while in the heart of an Indian country, and on the eve of a long and uncertain pilgrimage into an unknown wilderness, they were suddenly called upon to surrender five hundred of their best men to the hazards of a hostile campaign, and to the exposure and vicissitudes of a march of two thousands miles across trackless deserts and burning plains to fight the battles of their country. Their peculiar circumstances presented almost insuperable objections to a compliance with the requisition, yet not the slightest hesitation was evinced. 'You shall have your battalion at once,' was the reply of Mr. Young, 'if it has to be a class of our elders;' and in three days the force, recruited principally among fathers of families, was raised and ready to march. Here, certainly, was no evidence of a lack of patriotism."

The same author quotes from addresses delivered by Brigham Young, in which he expressed his exalted estimation of the Constitution of the United States, and the laws enacted in subordination to it, exhorting the people to magnify the laws, and assuring them that "that there is no law in the United States or in the Constitution but I am ready to make honorable." The author then adds:

"The following language, used by General D. H. Wells, at the celebration of the fourth anniversary of the advent of the Mormons in the valley, will show, I think, what were the feelings of the people:

"'It has been thought by some that this people, abused, maltreated, insulted, robbed, plundered, murdered, and finally disfranchised and expatriated, would naturally feel reluctant to again unite their destiny with the American Republic. * * No wonder that it was thought by some that we would not again submit ourselves (even while we were scorned and ridiculed) to return to our allegiance to our native country. Remember that it was by the act of our country, not ours, that we were expatriated; and then consider the opportunity we had of forming other ties. Let this pass while we lift the veil and show the policy which dictated us. That country, that constitution, those institutions, were all ours; they are still ours. Our fathers were heroes of the revolution, under the master-spirits of an Adams, a Jefferson, and a Washington; they declared and maintained their independence, and under the guidance of the spirit of truth, they fulfilled their mission whereunto they were sent from the presence of the Father. Why should we relinquish our interest in that country made dear to us by every tie of association and consanguinity? * * Those who have indulged such sentiments concerning us have not read Mormonism aright; for never, no never, will we desert our country's cause—never will we be found arrayed by the side of her enemies; although she herself may cherish them in her own bosom, although she may launch forth the thunderbolts of war, which may return and spend their fury upon her own head, never, no, never, will we permit the weakness of human nature to triumph over our love of country, our devotion to her institutions, handed down to us by our honored sires—made dear by a thousand tender recollections.'"

Such, surely, is neither the language nor the spirit of a disloyal people. Captain Stansbury elsewhere says:

"Direct charges have been widely published, seriously affecting the patriotism and personal reputation of the Mormon leaders, as well as the feelings of the people towards the General Governments. Such doubts and apprehensions are, in my judgment, totally groundless, and the charges I believe to be either based upon prejudice or to have grown out of a want of accurate information. A residence of a year in the midst of a Mormon community, during the greater part of which period I was in constant intercourse with the rulers and people, afforded much opportunity for ascertaining the real facts of the case."

But persons who never approached the longitudes in which Utah lies, hesitate not to denounce the Mormons as rebels and traitors, and, by a perversion of language, attribute to Gov. Young a defiant spirit. Gov. Young has never threatened opposition to the General Government or violence to a successor; nor have the people of the Territory of Utah failed to respect the federal laws. The language which has been perverted was the exposition of his confidence in the government of God, and the expression of his devout submission to the Providence which rules all created things.

He believes that if it is God's good pleasure that he shall retire to a private life, or continue Governor of the Territory of Utah, distinguished station in the General Government and political pre-eminence among men will be powerless to change the designs of Omnipotence; and hence he has said, how futile it is for man to be solicitous about that which he can not control. Will it be questioned that God rules in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth? Why, then, should it be deemed presumptuous in Governor Young to give utterance to unquestioned truth?

Nor is it true that Governor Young and the Mormon people refuse to comply with the requisitions of the General Government, "so far even as to transmit a copy of their laws or a statement of their public expenditures." Of the latter, enough has been said already, and of the former, it will be sufficient to say that it was not their duty. The federal government provides its own officer to discharge that and other duties, as will be seen on a perusal of the law itself:

"SEC. 3. There shall be a Secretary of said Territory, who shall reside therein and hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President of the United States. He shall record and preserve all the laws and proceedings of the Legislative Assembly hereinafter constituted, and all the acts and proceedings of the Governor in his executive department; he shall transmit one copy of the laws and one copy of the executive proceedings, on or before the first day of December in each year, to the President of the United States, and at the same time two copies of the laws to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate for the use of Congress."

If there had been neglect in the discharge of these duties, it would not have been the neglect of Mormons; but truth and justice require the statement to be made that the laws have been transmitted to the Executive authority and to the Congress of the United States.

Gov. Young's assailants have also charged that he is sustained by a military force in opposition to Federal authority. Thirty thousand men in arms, says one writer, and seven thousand disciplined troops another, support Gov. Young in his contumacy. That there are arms in Utah to keep the Indians in check no one will deny. What frontier settlement has them not? That there may be volunteer companies of militia is also true; and in this respect Utah is not unlike every village in the land. But Gov. Young is like the Governor of every State and Territory of the Union in his means of defence. He has no military power that is not possessed by all men in his station. An army is not necessary in Utah. Of the people of that territory, Gen. John Wilson, of whom Mr. Smith writes as a citizen of the first respectability, an officer of the Federal Government in California, he said, in a letter to the Hon. Truman Smith, then a member of the Senate of the United States:

"A more orderly, earnest, industrious, and civil people I have never been among than these, and it is incredible how much they have done here in the wilderness in so short a time. In this city, (Salt Lake,) which contains now, as I believe, about from four to five thousand inhabitants, (they are now nearly double that number,) I have not met in a citizen a single idler or any person who looks like a loafer. Their prospects for crops are fair, and there is a spirit and energy in all that you see that cannot be equalled in any city of any size that I have ever been in, and, I will add, not even in 'old Connecticut.'"

Of Gov. Young, the Hon. L. H. Read, the late Chief Justice of Utah, who was sent out by the Federal Government from the State of New York, says:

"I was received by Gov. Young with marked courtesy and respect. He has taken pains to make my residence here agreeable. The Governor, in manner and conversation, is a polished gentleman; very neat and tasty in dress, easy and pleasant in conversation, and I think a man of decided talent and strong intellectual qualities. I have heard him address the people once on the subject of man's free agency. He is a very excellent speaker; his gesture uncommonly graceful, articulation distinct, and speech pleasant. I was extremely edified by his address and manner. The Governor is a first rate business man. His private business is extensive; he owns several grist and saw mills; is extensively engaged in farming operations, all of which he superintends personally. I have made up my mind that no person has been more grossly misrepresented than Governor Young, and that he is a man who will reciprocate kindness and good intentions as heartily and freely as any one."

That Col. Steptoe will dissent from the testimony of the late Chief Justice Read is not anticipated. He has had the means of observation, and is enabled to know that the inhabitants of Utah have been maligned by men who, to secure the reputation of writing con spirito, sacrifice truth and decency. As a people they are hospitable to strangers, respectful to authorities, and loyal to the government. To prove themselves good members of civil society, they can point to the labor they have performed, and the thriving villages and fertile farms into which they have converted a distant wilderness. They desire to enjoy in peace the fruit for which they have toiled.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN M. BERNHISEL,
Delegate from Utah.

COMBUSTION OF DRUNKARDS.

The bodies of some drunkards have been so thoroughly steeped in spirit as literally to take fire and consume to ashes. It is said that no case of this combustion has ever occured except among hard drinkers, and it is altogether probable that, in every such case, an inflammable air has exhaled from the lungs or skin, and has been kindled by two near approach of a lighted taper, or some ignited substance. There is doubtless more danger than has been imagined, in a deep drinker's bringing his mouth or nose close to a lighted taper at evening. The wonder is, that instances of the combustion of drunkards should so rarely have occurred. Plouquet mentions twenty-eight cases.—[Address of Professor R. D. Mussey, M. D.

THE CAUSE OF FAILURES.—The New Orleans Delta has the following: Over and over again, the attempt has been tried, to keep afloat in circulation the value of fixed capital; to erect factories, to build ships and steamboats, to stock plantations with slaves, through the use of credit, by kites, by factors' acceptances of planters' drafts; and though for a while it may have met with temporary success, from the facility, the ignorance, or the interested motives of those who have the making and regulation of the paper money currency exchanged for this credit, these kites, these acceptances yet the attempt, has always recoiled with disastrous re-action on all its participants, and demonstrated afresh, every fresh attempt that commercial credit can only be supported on the basis of an exchange of commodities necessary to the daily and usual wants of man for consumption; and that bank credits or notes can only be kept in circulation by limiting the loan of it to those who restrict themselves in the use of their credit to legitimate commercial transactions.

A BRITISH DRAGOON'S IDEA OF PLUCK.—The Daily News correspondent in the Crimea overheard a conversation between two heavy dragoons, respecting the "pluck" of an officer. One of them ventured to assert that the subject of their conversation was "plucky." "Plucky!" said the other, "Why, he hasn't the pluck of a chicken, that's what he hasn't. Why, I actually seed that man dodging to a cannon ball!"

A Wholesome Thought.

"Bring hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind," if you would have them healed of their many infirmities. We boldly and fearlessly assert that the Mustang Liniment will positively CURE Rheumatism. Let any who are afflicted with that most painful complaint try it thoroughly according to the directions, and if they are not cured, we will give them their money back. What more can we say? It will also cure the Piles. Thousands have tried it—and all were cured. Bruises, Sprains, Sores, or Eruptions, fade away as if touched by the magician's wand. Its application to a Burn or Scald acts like "oil upon the troubled waters." The tempest of pain and agony is soon spilled, and the patient is hushed to quiet and peaceful slumbers. "There is a balm for every wound," and that balm is the Mustang Liniment. Everybody that sells medicines keeps it for sale. "Hold your Horses," and if they are crippled, galled, or sprained, use the Mustang Liniment.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of

MAN OR ANIMALS,

Requiring an External Application.

Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.

Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

MANUFACTURE OF IRON IN UTAH.

The manufacture of iron is an object of vast importance in any country where it can be entered into, and to none more so than to Utah Territory, situated as it is in the midst of vast plains and mountains, several hundred miles from any of the great channels of commerce.

There is probably no country in the world that so richly abounds in mineral resources as this, and in which, at the same time, they may be obtained with as little labor. There are fewer countries still, which have such a variety of minerals, adapted to the wants of civilized life, in so limited an extent of country. Among the most prominent of these are iron and coal, which nature has thrown out to view, as if inviting man to use them for his benefit. Iron ore, especially, is strewn about in rich profusion in many parts of Iron County, varying in quality from ten to eighty per cent.

About eight miles west of Cedar City commences a chain of mountains, many peaks of which are composed almost entirely of rich iron ore, which is strewn about their bases in fragments of every size. With a view to the final establishment of iron works in the immediate vicinity of this ore, the settlement of Parowan was founded in January, 1851, and was established for farming purposes, some twenty miles from the anticipated locality of the iron works, in order to serve as a source of supply to those who might be engaged in them.

The first year, this settlement, under the wise counsel of Elder George A. Smith, endured the rigors of a mountain winter, without houses, and labored with the most untiring diligence to build habitations, construct a fort for defense, and raise grain.

In the winter of 1851-2 a few families, mostly from Parowan, established the settlement now called Cedar City, on Coal Creek, about eight miles from the iron mountains, and two miles from the mouth of Coal Creek kanyon, which at that time was accessible only to footmen, but in which there had been very limited discoveries of coal. The first winter was necessarily occupied by the settlers in building houses to shelter them from the storms. These houses were put up in the form of a fort, with the intervals between the houses picketed, to serve the purposes of defense.

This was the first direct commencement of operations, which have thus far been watched with great interest, and which are expected in future to exert a great influence on the future growth and prosperity of the settlements in the mountains. Here were a few determined men buffeting the storms of winter, with no shelter but their wagons for themselves and families, dependent upon the stores of a weak settlement for supplies of bread, with no capital but their labor, and no resources but the crude elements of nature. The iron ore was there in rich abundance, but its very richness seemed an objection to many experienced workmen. There were indications of coal in the mountains in almost inaccessible places, but no vein of it had yet been discovered that would pay for working. Materials for building furnaces appeared to exist, but everything remained to be tried by the slow process of experiment, in order to establish a basis for permanent operations.

After struggling through the winter of 1851-2, in which all possible preparations were made for the labors of the coming season, the summer of 1852 was spent in raising a little grain for the future sustenance of the settlement, making a temporary road into Coal Creek kanyon, hunting up, selecting, and experimenting upon the materials which surrounded the settlement, and constructing such works as the means of the settlers permitted, or circumstances seemed to warrant.

We will now make a few extracts from the records of the Deseret Iron Company, as a further continuation of its history. The following report of Erastus Snow and Franklin D. Richards, general agents and managers of the Deseret Iron Company, was presented to their first general meeting, held in Cedar City, Nov. 1853:

"Brethren of the Iron Company—Considering the confusion of the Indian war now upon us; that the company has had no office in which to transact its business or preserve its papers, and that for a length of time the clerk was without a house to shelter himself or the books, it could scarcely be expected that we could furnish a correct and complete report of the company's business, transacted during the past year; but in this we have been more successful than we had anticipated. Our labors on behalf of the company commenced previous to its organization, when we were in England, and about to return from our missions in Scandinavia and Great Britain. We had received the sixth general epistle of the First Presidency, calling upon the Presidency of the church in Europe to organize a company of brethren for the manufacture of iron in Utah Territory, and we felt that we could not return to our homes without accomplishing something in favor of this important object.

"We commenced our operations at the special general conference of April 6th, 1852, in London. We here obtained of the Presiding Elders the addresses of our wealthier brethren in different parts of the empire, and spent most of that month in visiting them, and various iron works in England, Ireland, Wales, and Scotland, obtaining all general information on the subject of making iron from magnetic and other ores, but especially laboring with our brethren who had the means, the Lord laboring with us by His spirit, to show them the importance of the work we had undertaken. We found a general readiness on their part to receive our counsel, and employ their funds as we thought best for the making of iron in these valleys.

"On the 28th and 29th of the same month, at 15 Wilton street, Liverpool, we succeeded in organizing the present company, with a subscription of four thousand pounds stock, to be paid in on or before the 1st of January, 1853; for the particulars of which we refer you to the minutes of those meetings on the first pages of the company's records. It was at that meeting that we were constituted agents and managers for the company, agreeable to the constitution then and there adopted. On the 8th of May following we left England, and on our arrival in August, we reported the organization of the company to the First Presidency, who approved of what we had done, and advised us to establish works in Iron county as early as our means would allow.

"There being no funds in the company's treasury, and as subscriptions of stock could not be made available under about one year, and being anxious to set the business of the company in operation without delay, we proceeded on our credit to loan money, and with money and credit to purchase the goods with which we commenced the business of the company in this county.

"On our arrival in Iron County, in November following, it seemed to us advisable, in order to promote the best interests of the community, to associate with us the interests and labors of those brethren who were already endeavoring to lay a foundation for the development of the mineral resources of this county; and finding them inclined to unite with us, we negotiated, on behalf of the company, the purchase of a small blast furnace, with the apparatus attached, which they had erected on Coal Creek, for the purpose of experimenting on the ores, together with their right and interest in the coal mine of Coal Creek kanyon, for the sum of two thousand eight hundred and sixty-five dollars and sixty-four cents.

"We next secured to the Company a tract of land extending from Cedar City to the mountains eastward, embracing the numerous water privileges on Coal Creek.

"We also endeavored to concentrate the efforts of all the brethren in any wise acquainted with the manufacture of iron, and appointed John C. Smith to superintend their exertions in experimenting on the ores.

"The usual severity of the winter, and the consequent difficulty of obtaining coal from the mines in the kanyon, induced the use of charcoal and dry pine wood, large quantities of which were used, in varied proportions, during a series of experiments in the winter and spring following.

"The metal produced by these experiments embraced almost every variety of iron.

"The first wares made from this iron were a pair of 'Dog Irons,' cast from a small cupalo on the—— day of March last, which were exhibited at the General Conference on the 6th of April, in Great Salt Lake City.

* * * * * * * *

"The Territorial Assembly having granted our petition for the incorporation of the company, and for appropriations to aid in opening the coal mines, we thought it advisable to postpone further experiments with the furnace, and direct the energies of the company to the opening of the coal mines, and working a road to them. An extensive and excellent mine of coal was opened in the mountain, seven miles east, and a good road made to it. Active preparations were on foot for putting the blast to the furnace, when an Indian war broke out about the last of July, which suspended further operations.

"On the 3d of September a terrible flood from the mountains swept down Coal Creek, carrying before it all bridges and dams, completely inundating the site of the works, and sweeping off much of the company's property. The dam has since been rebuilt, and other breaches repaired, which will allow of the works being soon put in operation. The flood admonishes us of some of the difficulties to be encountered in supplying the furnace from the mines of Coal Creek.

* * * * * * * *

"By our last advices we are informed of the accession of new members, the subscription and payment of additional stock, and a general increasing interest in the company's welfare throughout the British churches, much of which may be justly attributed to the zealous labors of their President, Samuel W. Richards. We doubt not, when the Treasurer's report shall reach us, that it will be, as all his former advices have been, most cheering and satisfactory. Our drafts upon the Treasurer have been promptly paid, and in addition to the amounts expended in this county, we have purchased through our agent—Vincent Shurtleff, and brought to this place, a stock of goods for the use of the company, which will soon be exposed for sale in this city.

"The total amount of funds received by us from the company, as shown in the debit of our account, is	$10,704.29
The total amount by us paid out is	10,440.44
Add to this amount credited stockholders, as paid by them on stock,	4,003.91
Which shows the amount of business done in the Territory the past year to be	14,444.35
The amount drawn from the treasury by our agent, V. Shurtleff, and paid out for merchandise, transportation, etc.,	7,611.36
When added, will show the amount of the company's business in America to be	22,055.71
The amount of company's indebtedness is	4,823.38
The amount due the company on book account	934.34
There remains in our hands as appears by the difference of Dr. and Cr.	263.85
To which add the estimated income from the merchandise and teams	15,000.00
Shows the available means of the company in this county to be	16,198.19
From this deduct the company's indebtedness,	4,823.38
Leaves	11,374.81

in the hands of the company's manager with which to prosecute their business.

"In submitting this digest of its affairs, we feel to congratulate the company upon the favorable auspices under which we are permitted to retire from the responsibility of the sole management of its concerns, and it is with a lively sense of gratitude that we acknowledge the blessings of our heavenly Father upon our labors, in crowning them with such abundant success.

ERASTUS SNOW,
"F. D. RICHARDS,
"Agents and Managers.

"The report having been laid before the meeting, President Snow said—We now present ourselves before you, to know whether our labors and services are accepted; and if so, will they release us from further labors and duties as their agents and managers?

"Isaac C. Haight moved—That we accept of the report of brothers Snow and Richards, and their services rendered to the company, and return them a vote of thanks for the same; also, that they be discharged from further duties as general managers of the company; which was seconded and voted unanimously.

"President Snow, on behalf of brother Richards and himself, tendered thanks to the company for having accepted their services.

"The reading of the charter being called for, the Secretary read it, which is entitled an act to incorporate the Deseret Iron Company, and is written in full on the company's records.

* * * * * * * *

"President Snow asked the members present whether it was their wish to adopt the new charter, and organize under its provisions.

"F. D. Richards introduced the following resolution, which was read and unanimously adopted:

"Be it resolved by the Deseret Iron Company, That we gratefully acknowledge the favor of our Territorial Assembly, in granting us a charter, and in otherwise seconding our efforts for the manufacture of iron, by granting appropriations for the opening of mines and roads to them; and that we now accept, adopt, and organize ourselves under the provisions of the charter, as approved January 17th, 1853, invoking the blessings of our heavenly Father upon all our acts.

"The President then called for the number of voters present, and the number of they were severally entitled to cast under the new charter.

* * * * * * * *

"Henry Lunt presented the following resolution, which was read and unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we proceed to elect the officers provided for in the charter, in the following manner, viz., each stockholder present shall call out the name of the person he votes for. The Clerk shall write down the name of the voter, with the number of votes to which he is entitled, and name of person voted for. When all have voted, the Clerk shall count the number of votes for each candidate, and the person having the majority of votes cast shall be declared by the President duly elected.

"Erastus Snow stated that the meeting was now ready to proceed to the election of officers."

After the votes of the shareholders had been cast for the several officers of the company, the following persons were declared elected: Erastus Snow, President; Franklin D. Richards, Secretary; Thomas Tennant, Treasurer; and Isaac C. Haight, Vincent Shurtleff, Christopher Arthur, and Jonathan Pugmire, Trustees.

"President Snow then asked all the members of the company present, if they felt to concur with the voters in the election of the aforementioned officers; and if they did, to signify it by the uplifted hand, which they did unanimously.

"The President continued: The company being organized by the election of these officers, it will be their duty to file bonds with the Clerk of the County Court, with good and sufficient securities, for the faithful performance of their duties; and submitted the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted by a vote of all the members present:

"Resolved, That the President and Secretary be required to give bonds in the sum of ten thousand dollars each, the Treasurer in the sum of fifty thousand dollars, and the Trustees two thousand each, with such securities as shall be approved of by the Clerk of the County Court.

* * * * * * * *

"The foregoing minutes of the first general meeting of the Deseret Iron Company, together with the report of their general agents—Snow and Richards—having been read and approved by a vote of the company, it was moved, seconded, and unanimously voted, that this general meeting be adjourned until the first Monday in November, 1854.

"ERASTUS SNOW, President;
"F. D. RICHARDS, Secretary,
"HENRY LUNT, Clerk.

"November 26th.—The Board of Directors and other members of the Iron company, met at the house of Jonathan Pugmire, and adopted the following resolution:

Resolved by the Board of Directors of the Deseret Iron Company, That Isaac C. Haight be and is hereby appointed general manager of the company's affairs in this county, and that he be and is hereby authorized to transact all business belonging to the company, in its name and behalf, as he may be instructed by the Board of Directors, or, in the absence of instructions by the Board, as he shall be instructed by the President of the Company.

"And be it further resolved, That he be required to file in the office of the county clerk, bonds, with approved security, in the sum of ten thousand dollars, in addition to two thousand dollars as Trustee, for the faithful performance of the duties assigned him.

"ERASTUS SNOW, President of the Board;
"F. D. RICHARDS, Secretary;
"HENRY LUNT, Clerk."

During the winter of 1852-3, great quantities of charcoal and pitch pine wood were prepared, with a view to put the furnace in operation in the spring. This was done during a second visit of Messrs. Snow and Richards, in the latter part of April. The result proved most conclusively that that kind of fuel would not answer the desired purpose, as only small quantities of iron were produced at comparatively great expense, although generally of good quality.

The expenditure of the Territorial appropriations for the benefit of the Iron interest was placed at the disposal of Gov. B. Young, and President E. Snow was the bearer of instructions from him to appoint persons to expend the appropriations as designed. Messrs. James A. Little and Philip K. Smith were designated as the persons to carry out this object. They commenced operations immediately, and in the course of ten days several veins of coal were discovered. Their attention was ultimately directed to one which was traced for several miles on the precipitous side of a mountain, at a great elevation above the valley. This vein proves to be of excellent quality, with seven feet of pure coal, and about two feet more separated from the main body by thin strata of rock and fire clay. This coal bank is within about seven miles of the iron works. After its discovery there seemed to be nothing needed but a suitable furnace, and a proper combination of material to produce iron in any desirable quantity. In about two months after the discovery of this coal bank, it was opened, a quantity of coal was dug, and a good wagon road made to it, at an expense of some $6,000, which, in this country, appears extremely trifling for the attainment of so great an object.

Immediately after the completion of this work, news reached the southern settlement that an Indian war had commenced; and all the energies of the settlements were necessarily directed to making every possible preparation for self-defense, such as moving in the small settlements, fortifying the larger ones, securing the grain and hay for winter, with many other important items.

The events occupied the remainder of the season, until some time after the meeting of the iron company, the report of which we publish. Although great exertions were made by the company, under its new organization, to obtain a quantity of coal in the winter of 1853-4, but little was accomplished, on account of the accumulations of snow and ice in the kanyon, which rendered the coal mine almost inaccessible. In the spring the furnace was again put into operation, however, with but little success, as, in addition to the original imperfections of the materials with which it was constructed; it had become much impaired by repeated experiments.

In order to give our readers an idea of the present condition of the works, we here insert a portion of a letter from the manager, brother I. C. Haight:

"CEDAR CITY, Sept. 24, 1854.

"Dear Brother—Knowing that you feel a great interest in the prosperity of the Redeemer's kingdom, and in everything that tends to build up the same, I thought you would like to hear from Cedar City and the Deseret Iron Works, and of its prospects. I therefore write you a few lines, giving you a short account of matters with us.

* * * * * * * *

"The foundation of a new furnace was laid about the 25th of May, twenty-one feet square, of red sand stone, carried up perpendicularly twelve feet above the ground, then tapered eighteen feet to the top. The tunnel head is eight feet, making the furnace thirty-eight feet to top of tunnel head. It is six and a half feet in the boshes, three and a half feet at tunnel head inside, and thirteen feet square outside. The lining is of porus sand stone, that will stand the fire well. The cause of lining with rock is that we can get no fire brick that will stand. The hearth is of grey sand stone. It took some six hundred and fifty tons of rock, and cost $3,782.45. The particulars of the furnace, brother Elias Morris, who was the architect, will give you.

"We have also enlarged the water wheel four feet, and made circular cylinders three and a half feet in diameter, which also are completed. They work admirably, and will give a blast of two and a half pounds to the square inch.

"The furnace is also completed, and is said, by those who have seen it, to be as good a furnace as they ever saw in England, or any other country. The blast pipes are not yet finished, but will be by the time the furnace will be heated ready for the blast.

"We are also building six coke ovens, of the same kind of rock as the furnace; and after they are finished, I intend to add six more, with which I am in hopes to supply the furnace with good coke, and make good iron.

"We all feel sanguine in the expectation of making iron this winter. We want a good engine, and then I think nothing can hinder us. I hope the brethren in England and Wales will come forward to our assistance, and take shares, and send an engine to help us. A little assistance now would do us a deal of good. The brethren of Parowan and this place are uniting their small means to take shares and help us along. Most of the hands are willing to work as long as they can keep spirit and body together. And if we could only get clothing for them they would do very well.

* * * * * * * *

"With the best love and wishes to all the Saints, to the brethren in the office, and to yourself in particular, I remain your fellow servant,

"I. C. HAIGHT.

"Elder F. D. Richards, Liverpool."

In addition to the letter from brother Haight, we have also received one from brother Elias Morris, who superintended the construction of the new furnace, which gives a minute description of its proportions and construction, and which will be preserved for reference, but would not probably be interesting to the general reader.

We have now given a short history of the operations of the Deseret Iron Company, but it is still a very imperfect account of the privations, sacrifices, and labors that have been endured in the effort to establish this important branch of industry. Like everything else commenced or accomplished for the benefit of this kingdom, it has called forth the energies, prayers, and faith of the Saints. As every enterprise must prosper which is necessary for the progress of the Lord's people, so we believe this will, notwithstanding the difficulties which have hitherto surrounded it. With a little more experience in combining the new class of material, and perseverance in sustaining those engaged in the work, we feel assured that iron will soon be produced in sufficient quantity to commence supplying the wants of Utah, and make a profitable return to those who have made investments in the company.

The Lord has established His people in the mountains in a place fitted and prepared for them, where they must become capable of sustaining themselves independent of the Gentiles. With this view He, through His servants, is urging upon the people the necessity of manufacturing everything which is necessary for their comfort and well being.

Considering the difficult circumstances under which the Saints have been placed, far from resources, which has compelled them thus far to devote the most of their labor to supplying the more urgent wants of nature, much has been done towards manufacturing many useful articles, such as clothing, leather, paper, combs, sugar, etc., which must, however, progress slowly until iron can be more easily obtained.

We feel to urge upon all who desire to build up Zion, and have capital in their hands, to appropriate, if possible, a portion of it to strenthen the operations of the iron company the coming year. Now, in its infant struggles, is the time to assist it, that it may the sooner arrive at manhood, and be capable not only of sustaining itself, but of materially assisting to bring about the purposes of the Lord upon the earth.

We may anticipate that the new furnace will operate successfully, but whether it should or not there is ample room for the profitable investment of capital. Iron can be made in Utah, for it has been done, and we feel that it will be done in future in an ample and satisfactory manner, inasmuch as it is necessary to aid in accomplishing the designs of the Lord.

In closing this subject for the present, we will introduce the words of President Young, while speaking of the great difficulty and expense of getting the materials together for manufacturing sugar: "We shall never give up what we list to perform. The Lord guiding and directing us, we shall continue our operations, until we manufacture everything we wish to eat, drink and wear, in the midst of these mountains; so that we shall not be under the necessity of going to any other place in the whole earth, to get anything we wish to consume."

MYSTERIOUS PROVIDENCE.

One man sucks an orange and is choked with the pit; another swallows a penknife and lives; one runs a thorn into his hand, and no skill can save him; another has a shaft of a gig driven completely through his body, and recovers; one is overturned on a smooth common and breaks his neck; another is tossed out of his gig over Brighton Cliff, and survives; one walks out on a windy day and meets death by a brickbat; another is blown up in the air, like Lord Hatton, in Gurnsey Castle, and comes down uninjured. The escape of this nobleman was indeed a miracle. An explosion of gunpowder, which killed his mother, wife and some of his children, and many other persons, and blew up the whole fabrick of the castle, lodged him in his bed on a wall overhanging a tremenduous precipice. Perceiving a mighty disorder, (as well he might,) he was going to leap out of his bed to know what the matter was, which if he had done, he would have been irrevocably lost; but in the instant of his moving, a flash of lightning came and showed him the precipice, whereupon he lay still till the people came and took him down.

Men are more readily contented with no intellectual light than with a little; and wherever they have been taught to acquire some knowledge in order to please others, they have most generally gone on to acquire more, to please themselves.

What Shall be done with the Mormons?

The above has become one of the most interesting and important questions of the day. It has been asked with more or less intensity and enthusiasm for a quarter of a century. The statesman, lawyer, editor, and divine of every grade and shade of opinion has asked this question a thousand times, without any satisfactory solution; indeed, the question appears more difficult and complex than it was when first agitated.

Everybody sees something that ought to be done, and many have not been at all backward in doing; but the great difficulty is, nothing that is done will remain done. The entire history of this people for the last twenty-five years goes to prove the uncertainty of doing anything effectual or with any chance of success to their opponents.

A cursory view of what has been done, and the results, will be sufficient to sustain the above statement.

In the year 1830 this Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized in the State of New York with only six members; but small as it was, and contemptible as it was said to be, it was considered a most dangerous thing, and the good people raised their eyes with holy horror, and exclaimed, "Oh, Lord, give us power to destroy this people who blaspheme thy name and thy holy religion; but their God did not hear; if he did, he would not answer them.

No greater anxiety was felt by Herod when the infant Jesus was born, than was felt at the birth of Mormonism. No greater effort was made to destroy Jesus in his infancy, than was made to destroy Mormonism in its infancy. The same spirit that reigned in Herod's bosom, reigned in the bosoms of those who sought the life of Joseph and his early associates; but the Lord God of Israel was with them; by his hand were they sustained; and his power gave them deliverance from their adversaries, and gave them the victory over all their enemies.

In 1832 a monthly paper, called the Evening and Morning Star, was published in the city of Independence, Missouri. The Saints gathered in from other States. The church then numbered in that county about 500 persons. This was quite alarming to the inhabitants of that county; their prayers ascended daily and hourly that the Lord would arrest the progress of the Mormons—that he would curse them; and annihilate them, but all to no purpose. Onward they went—the very means employed to retard, appeared to accelerate their progress.

It was thought that Mormonism, if left alone, would soon fall to the ground or die a natural death; but it was soon discovered that the more it became known the more it was appreciated; and instead of the Mormons being lazy, idle, and vicious, as had been stated, it was found that they were more active, industrious, persevering, and successful in every enterprise than themselves. It was therefore resolved that every man, woman and child of the Mormon community should be whipped, scourged, and driven from the county.

Among the reasons alleged for the above resolution, we find the following, republished in the Evening and Morning Star of Dec. 18, 1833: "They have tampered with our slaves, and endeavored to sow dissentions and raise seditions among them, and openly blasphemed the Most High God, and cast contempt on his holy religion by pretending to receive revelations direct from heaven, by pretending to speak unknown tongues, by direct inspiration, and by divers pretensions derogatory of God and religion. These and other reasons of similar importance were considered sufficient to raise a lawless mob of 500 men, who with pistols, rifles, clubs, and whips, fell upon the defenseless Mormons, and death and destruction were dispensed among them, and they were driven; but it was soon discovered that they were not conquered.

We might trace their progress from New York to Ohio, from Ohio to Missouri, from Missouri to Illinois, and from Illinois we might follow them to Carthage jail and the Deseret plains, but this would exceed our intentions concerning this article; suffice it to say that each step is stained with the blood of prophets and saints. But each movement has brought us additional strength, influence and territory—to our enemies a disgraceful failure. Vain and contemptably futile has been every scheme devised and executed to injure us. Newspaper stories, blackguard sermons, and scurrillous pamphlets out of number have been fabricated, and retailed with intent to arrest the giant strides of Mormonism, but with the same result. Rapine, arson, bonds, imprisonment, vexatious law suits, disfranchisement, expatriation, and the murdering of hundreds of men, women, and children, have been alike ineffectual. A knowledge of these facts, and the position of the Saints in Utah, in St. Louis, and throughout the world, ought to silence every one who would lift his tongue against them, for these things prove to a demonstration that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, but by the Lord God of Hosts. And they prove, moreover, that all things work together for good to them that love God and are called according to his purpose.

The world is not dependent upon our testimony alone for evidence of the prosperity, respectability, sociability, and indomitable courage, perseverance, and success of the Mormon community. Nearly every traveler and visitor to Utah, and writer upon the subject adds additional evidence in support of these things. The celebrated Scotch writer, Chambers, in a pamphlet published by him a few years ago, writes upon this subject as follows:

"Within the space of twenty years since they first sprung into existence, they have gone on rapidly increasing in influence and numbers, and are now an established and organized society, amounting to not less than 300,000 people. They have borne the brunt of calumny and misrepresentation, endured the severest persecutions, and, in spite of every conceivable obstruction, triumphantly vindicated the earnestness and sincerity of their faith, and the practical objects which they have considered it their special mission to realize in the world. Their progress within the last ten years has been extraordinarily rapid, and is utterly unparalleled in the history of any other body of religionists. They are now a distinct and peculiar community, with a complete and effective organization; they possess and enjoy, in common, great wealth and material resources; their final settlement of Utah or Deseret, in New California, is in the highest degree flourishing, peaceable and orderly; and they appear not unlikely to become an important and independent nation, whose influence, politically and socially, may be expected to affect, and possibly to modify, the older and neighboring forms of civilization.

"The world may very well permit them to indulge in their millenial fancies and patriarchal crotchets, so long as they live peaceably and honestly among themselves, and make no intolerant aggressions on the beliefs and religious systems that differ from their own. Their steadfast and honorable industry, the unity of aim and sentiment that exists among them, their zealous devotion to a central idea, their reverent, if perverted, recognition of a Supreme Power over them, the pleasant fellowship that results from their social regulations, and the robust and sterling independence by which they are distinguished as a community; these and other highly creditable qualities and characteristics, assuredly entitle them to the honest respect of all candid and discriminating persons, and must sooner or later secure for them an extensive and deserving admiration. Nothing but good will and an indulgent charity are due to these earnest, stalwart children of the desert—these rough and intrepid backwoodsmen of the universe—who, called by a voice which they but imperfectly understand, have nevertheless gone forth to subdue and cultivate a remote and barren region, so that, instead of the heath and the brushwood, it may bear grain for the food of man, and become a blossoming and fruitful garden for his habitation and delight. Not inaptly have they been likened to the Puritans of New England; for although their professing faith is different, they resemble them thoroughly in their hardy isolation and exclusiveness, and are endowed with the like invincibility of purpose; they are as energetic and as enduring; they have sustained persecutions more fiery and desolating; have toiled against all imaginable obstructions for liberty to work and live; contended bravely with wild Indians and the hordes of pestilent outlaws that lurk about the frontiers of civilization; they have passed through many and enormous perils in roadless prairies and primeval forests, in rocky fastnesses and on the waves of bridgeless rivers; and after the severest struggles and endurance, they have at last made for themselves a prosperous and peaceful home in the bosom of the wilderness.

"Lieut. Gunnison, who lived among them for more than a year, in an official capacity connected with a recent exploring expedition to the Deseret or Utah Territory, under the direction of the United States Government says: 'Their admirable system of combining labor, while each has his own property, in land and tenements, and the proceeds of his industry, the skill in dividing off lands, and conducting the irrigating canals to supply the want of water, which rarely falls between April and October; the cheerful manner in which every one applies himself industriously, but not laboriously; the complete reign of good neighborhood and quiet in house and fields, form themes for admiration to the stranger coming from the dark and sterile recesses of the mountain gorges into this flourishing valley: and he is struck with wonder at the immense results produced in so short a time by a handfull of individuals. This is the result of the guidance of all those hands by one master-mind; (Brigham Young;) and we see a comfortable people residing where, it is not too much to say, the ordinary mode of subduing and settling our wild lands could never have been applied.

"'Among no people is the dignity of labor held more sacred than by the Mormons. The excellency and honorableness of work is exemplified in their whole polity and organization. A lazy person, we are told, is either accursed or likely to be; usefulness is their motto; and those who do not keep themselves, or try their best, are left to starve into industry.

* * * The labor for support of one's self and family is taught to be of as divine a character as public worship and prayer. In practice, their views unite them so as to procure all the benefits of social Christianity without running into communism. The Priest and the Bishop make it their boast that, like Paul, the tent-maker, they earn their bread by the sweat of their brow; and teach by example on the week-day what they preach on the Sabbath.'"

It might be expected that these facts would teach the world to be cool, temperate and respectful towards a people so manifestly superior in energy, industry, perseverance, moral courage, and in fact, every other noble quality, to the general mass of mankind; but we learn from some of the public journals that there are still a few restless and reckless spirits which are anxious to see a change in Utah. It is particularly distressing to their very sensitive feelings to hear of the astonishing progress of Mormonism among the nations, and more especially its rapid growth and its increasing influence and importance in this country. Some have modestly requested that a well defined boundary be determined for the Mormons in Utah, and that they be confined within prescribed limits, and prohibited from any intercourse or connection with neighboring States. Those who think that Mormonism could be confined in some corner of the earth, are profoundly ignorant of its true character. It has already grown so great that no Territory, State or nation can hold it; and if it were confined as suggested, it would soon bring forth enough of the true grit, and fill the whole earth.

Others have suggsted that an army be sent against Utah, and tha the Mormons be killed off, that an end may be pt to this fascinating delusion; but here is the difficult—causes produce such strange and uncertain effects, that when 'tis thought a heavy hand is upon them, nd that they are caught, it is found they are not thre.

We would recommend to those who appear so very anxious to provide for the Latter-day Saints, to let them alone, for all things that are done with intent to injure them, will certainly be overruled by the Almighty, so that it will favor and bless them; and He has said in these last days to the prophet Joseph, "It is my business to provide for my Saints;" so let every man mind his own business.

WILLIAM SMITH.

We have received a pamphlet published by this individual, vindicating himself in a characteristic style from certain charges of licentiousness, for which he has been held to answer before the courts of Illinois. We also received not long since, an article intended for the Luminary, accompanied by a personal letter from him, professing much piety and zeal for the cause of God. Several correspondents have also made reference to and asked questions about him. It is with regret that we feel thus called upon to make my reference to him whatever. We can only think of him with feelings of pity and of shame for poor human nature, and we could wish that many incidents of his life were obliterated from our memory. It appears that he still has, or affects to have, a few followers in Lee county, Ill. The character of his followers or associates may be readily conjectured by those who are acquainted with him. For the information of such as are in the habit of confounding them with Latrer-day Saints, and of such uninformed Saints as may be exposed to his deceptions, we would state that he was excommunicated from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints by the General Conference, held in the temple at Nauvoo, in the fall of 1845, and has had no fellowship or connection with said church since that time, and the conditions alone on which he ever could be restored to fellowship, are, to humble himself as a little child, and enter in at the door, bringing forth fruits mete for repentance. This he knows full well, and until he does so, all who believe the gospel and value their salvation, will stand far removed from him and all his hypocritical pretensions and unhallowed administrations.

REAL LIFE ON AN EMIGRANT SHIP.

An amusing incident lately occurred on board an emigrant vessel recently arrived at New Orleans. A few days after the company had left the shores of Europe, Mr. W., a lad about seventy years of age, fell deeply in love with Miss C., a young maiden lady about 50, who warmly reciprocated his affections. Dispensing with the tedious formalities of courtship, they were in a few days married. A short time after marriage the bridegroom fell sick. The spouse, anxious for the safety of her better half, hastened to the ship's physician, described her husband's malady, and asked a remedy. "What is your husband's name?" said the doctor. "Really, I don't know," said the bride, modestly; "but I'll go and ask him."

Correspondence of the Luminary.

Inquries after Truth—Intended Emigration, &c.

OQUAWKA, Jan. 12, 1855.

Dear Brother—I received yours of the 2d inst., last night, and have carefully perused its contents, and feel truly thankful to you for the wise counsel given in the same, and should I be in posession of anything interesting to you, or your readers, I will remit the same to you from time to time.

The ancient Jews said, "Can any good thing come out of Nazereth?" I think with propriety the same may be said of this place, as all seem to think they have enough truth, and that they need no more; but unfortunately they are wise only in their own conceit, with a few exceptions.

Since I have been in receipt of the Luminary, I have endeavoured to let its light shine upon the benighted people of this neighborhood, hoping thereby some might inform themselves of the true principles of our church, and be influenced to enlarge the subscription list, and thus assist you to accomplish the work whereunto you have been sent. As yet I am unable to send you any new subscribers; but the thick clouds are begining to disappear, and a spirit of inquiry seems to prevail in the hearts of a few whom I trust are honest, as appears from the following:

One of the most respectable men of this place invited me to his house, desiring information of the truth of the doctrine taught by the Latter-day Saints. I cheerfully accepted the invitation, and preached the first principles of the gospel to him and his family, (9 in number,) and they listened very attentively. I saw him again yesterday; he informed me he has made up his mind to gather with the Saints, as soon as he can dispose of his property.

On Tuesday last a lady came to my house to propound some questions, in order to obtain truth, fearing as she said she might be found in the wrong faith. I answered her many interogations, and on leaving said she felt in duty bound to renounce the church to which she belonged, desiring to hear me again, declaring she must be wrong if scripture be true, so you see the future prospects are somewhat encouraging.

I am the only one in this place belonging to the church, and therefore I have to combat with the powers of darkness, alone, but I hope to conquer, in the name of my master, even Jesus Christ, with the assistance of the spirit of truth. Although I have been a member in the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints over 14 years, yet I am only in the alphabet in the school of truth.

I will now close this communication lest I trespass too much on your time and patience, hoping you will remember me in your prayers to our Heavenly father, that the power of the holy priesthood may rest upon me, that I may faithfully discharge every duty encumbent upon me. With honor to his most holy name, knowing the efectual, fervant prayer of the righteous availeth much.

Yours in the bonds of peace,

WM. MARSDON.

P. S. If any Elder should pass this way, I hope they will call on me and preach to us in this place, say at least once, and as often as convenient.

W. M.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 25, 1855.

PRESIDENT E. SNOW—Dear Brother—The Clara Wheeler, Capt. Nelson, with 422 Saints on board, left the Mersey on the 27th Nov., 1854, under our charge; but owing to the weather we were driven on the lee shore, and nothing but the power of God could have prevented our vessel, which was drifting on to the reefs, from being dashed to pieces, as others were which had started under much more favorable circumstances. During the night of the 25th we were burning blue lights and signal rockets. Pilot, captain, officers, and crew had all given up hopes of our being saved; but the Lord was at the helm, and we returned to Liverpool in safety, where we laid wind bound several days, until, feeling that it was our privilege to rebuke the elements, we held a day of fasting and prayer; many prophecied that the wind would change that night, and that we should have a good breeze. It did change, and thus enabled us to get out on the next day, the 7th Dec., when we started afresh, the wind being favorable long enough to enable us to get clear. During the voyage we had one birth, eight marriages, and thirty deaths, seven of which occurred coming up the river. During the whole passage we were favored by our heavenly Father in having fair winds, and in making, I presume, the quickest passage ever known at this season of the year. We arrived at New Orleans on the 11th January, where we were met by Elder McGaw, our agent, making the voyage in thirty-six days. In fact, nothing seemed to have the power of hindering us. At the mouth of the Mississippi the vessel got on the bar, but was got off directly by the assistance of an extra steamer, which happened to be close by, whilst according to all human chances, she might have remained for hours or even days.

On our arrival at New Orleans we were equally fortunate. We took our passage on board the Oceana eighteen hours after our arrival. On arriving at the quarantine ground, where steamers with emigrants are compelled to stop and undergo medical inspection, causing a detention of one or more hours, we only stopped a short time, and succeeded in reaching this city on the afternoon of the 22d inst., just in time, for had we been detained a few hours longer, we should not have got up, as the river was soon after blocked up with ice, showing that the Lord was with his people. He also constrained the captain and officers of both ship and steamboat to show acts of kindness to us on our journey. The Saints are, on the whole, in good health and first rate spirits; the deaths were, as you will perceive by the list handed you, almost entirely among children, owing to the measles having been brought on board. Br. Parsons and I have had bad health nearly all the way. We have brought with us the mortal remains of Elder W. W. Magor, who died while fulfilling a mission in the London Conference, with feelings of gratitude, for our wonderful preservation and safe arrival at this stake of Zion.

I remain, dear brother, yours, faithfully,

HENRY E. PHELPS, President,

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE PACIFIC.

NEW YORK, January 25.—The Pacific arrived out at half past nine o'clock, on the 9th. In running up the Mersey, the night being very dark, she ran into the brig Corinthian, at anchor, outward bound, with a cargo valued at 20,000 pounds sterling, for Calcutta. The brig sunk at once. No lives were lost.

The Eastern question has assumed an entirely new phase. Prince Gortschakoff has announced to the Austrian Government that the Czar has accepted not only the four points of guarantee, but also the interpretation given to them by the three Powers; but as no armistice is agreed to, hostilities will continue during the progress of negotiations.

Sardinia has joined the Western alliance. The conduct of Prussia and the German States is still equivocal. The sincerity of Russia is doubted, and consols, which at first advanced two per cent., afterwards fell back. The Allies, it is said, will insist on the Russian naval power in the Black sea being placed on a level with that of other powers, and on this point it is expected negotiations will split as Russia will on no account assent to this.

The Russians have again invested the Principalities. A dispatch, dated Brailaw, January 9th, says the Russians have crossed the Danube and invaded the Dobrudscha and taken Bosh Satcha and Babadagh.

PARIS, Saturday, 1, P. M.—A courier arrived from Bucharest confirms the reports of the recommencement of the war on the Danube. The Russians in force crossed above Tultzcha, took the town, and were marching to Katchin. There was no interference on the part of the Austrians. This report caused some consternation.

The Czar accepts, unconditionally, the four guarantees, but his sincerity is doubted. Hostilities continue unchanged.

Sardinia has joined the Western Powers.

The siege of Sebastopol was unchanged up to the 2d, but there were reported rumors of its capture.

The conduct of Prussia and the Germanic States, is still equivocal, and the sincerity of Russia is much doubted. The Allies, it is said, will insist on the Russian naval power in the Black Sea being placed on a level with that of the other Powers, as a proof of their success. On this point, it is expected that the negotiations will split, as Russia will on no account assent to it.

FRANCE.

The news is devoid of interest. The Emperor reviewed a detachment of the Imperial Guards on the 9th, previous to their embarkation for the Crimea. There is a rumor that the Emperor of Russia has sent an autograph letter to the Emperor of France, making proposals of peace.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The proposed mediation of the United States had excited less attention than might have been supposed. The London Times treats the question with great candor, and submits that the United States must allow that such offers of mediation may be declined in any special case. No disrespect would be implied by the refusal. It is free to the one party to offer its friendly services, and free to the other to accept or refuse them.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—The California news is unimportant. There had been no rain until the day the steamer left, when a tremenduous storm prevailed. A number of frame buildings in San Francisco were blown down, and it is feared that considerable damage has been done to the shipping, but to what extent it could not be ascertained at the hour the steamer left. The gale was more severe than any that had visited that place since 1852.

The mining interest has suffered much from want of rain, and the interior traders were doing but little business.

The Supreme Court has decided that Sacramento is the Capital of the State.

James Hogan, the City Marshal of Oakland, has absconded with $20,000 of the public funds.

A general stampede of State prisoners took place on the 27th, and about thirty of them made their escape, after a struggle with the Sheriff and posse.

Considerable apprehension is felt for the agricultural interest, but still there is no reason to doubt that there will be sufficient rain though it may come late.

The Panama railroad will probably be formally opened on February 1st.

CONGRESSIONAL.

WASHINGTON, January 22.—It is confidentially rumored that Gov. Marcy may go to Europe. The Cabinet has been amicable of late. Gov. Seymour prefers staying at home.

The Democratic Senators held a meeting this morning to express the sentiments of their party on the question of Know Nothingism. They adjourned however, without taking any definite action.

Thos. D'Arcy McGee delivered a lecture this evening at music Hall, on Washington's opinion of Emigration and Naturalization. In the course of his lecture, some of his remarks were construed by the audience into a disrespect for the memory Washington, and it led to much confusion and some severe fighting in the Hall. The row was soon quelled and the disturbers ejected from the room.

January 23.—HOUSE.—Mr. Fuller presented a bill for amending and consolidating of the navigation revenue and collection laws. Referred ro the Committee on commerce. Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of next week will be devoted to the territorial business.

The bill authorizing the registering of the bark Lily, of New York, was passed.

Mr. Servony obtained leave to make a few remarks in regard to the establishment of a navy yard at Brunswick, Ga. The subject had been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, since which nothing had been heard from it. He wished to have the Committee report to the House upon the subject referred to them, so that definite action could be had.

The vote was taken upon the motion yesterday to reconsider the vote referring the Pacific Railroad bill to a select committee, and to lay that motion on the table, and resulted in the affirmation by a majority of one.

Jaouary 24.—Mr. Benton opposed the French Spoliation bill, as a game of claim Agents, who then beset the doors of the capitol. He contended that our commerce did not suffer during the French revolution, it was, on the contrary, more prosperous during that period.

Mr. Disney supported the bill.

Mr. Chamberlain spoke against our Government mediating in the affairs of Europe. He coincided with Mr Disney in his views in regard to the subject of the claims.

Mr. Goodrich obtained permission to present his views on the tariff question, and the committee rose.

The Senate bill to establish a board for adjudication of claims, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The House then adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—SENATE.—Mr. Cooper supported his resolution at some length, and was followed by Mr. Brodhead, who offered an amendment declaring that secret political organizations are repugnant to republican institutions, and subversive of the liberty of the people.

Some sharp words ensued between Mr. Cooper and his colleague, and no little irritation was shown by the former.

Mr. Weller offered two resolutions in amendment, declaring free speeches and open discussion essential to republican liberty, and the abrogation of religious tests for office constitutional provision, and expressive of the sentiments of the American people.

After a few remarks from Messrs. Bayard and Clayton, the further consideration of Mr. Cooper's resolution was postponed, and the army appropriation bill was taken up.

Mr. Brodhead moved an amendment denunciator of secret political societies.

Mr. Walker also moved an amendment, taking strong grounds against all secret organizations as anti-republican and subversive of the liberties of the people. After some debate the matter was postponed.

BUFFALO, Jany. 23.—Laborers on the Buffalo, Brantford and Duderick Railroad, are still in possession of the track, and are fully armed. The Directors with fifty men, took the train at Brantford, and came through to Fort Erie. Holderman and Brant take fifty British soldiers to-morrow, and proceed to the scene, when the road is expected to be opened, the laborers paid off, and discharged. This done, no further trouble is apprehended.

The examination of the man who killed Wimple, together with the thirteen prisoners, was finished today. He was held over, charged with wilful murder.

There has been a storm for forty-eight hours. It has now abated. The snow averages two feet.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 25, P. M.—River stationary. Weather cloudy.

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 25, P. M.—River unchanged. Slight snow this afternoon, but turning into sleet.

MARRIED.

On the 20th inst., by Elder Milo Andrus, Mr. WILLIAM CLEGG to Miss SARAH SANDS, both of St. Louis.

A Wholesome Thought.

"Bring hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind," if you would have them healed of their many infirmities. We boldly and fearlessly assert that the Mustang Liniment will positively CURE Rheumatism. Let any who are afflicted with that most painful complaint try it thoroughly according to the directions, and if they are not cured, we will give them their money back. What more can we say? It will also cure the Piles. Thousands have tried it—and all were cured. Bruises, Sprains, Sores, or Eruptions, fade away as if touched by the magician's wand. Its application to a Burn or Scald acts like "oil upon the troubled waters." The tempest of pain and agony is soon spilled, and the patient is hushed to quiet and peaceful slumbers. "There is a balm for every wound," and that balm is the Mustang Liniment. Everybody that sells medicines keeps it for sale. "Hold your Horses," and if they are crippled, galled, or sprained, use the Mustang Liniment.

THE CRIMEA.

Casualties to the Brethren on Nov. 5—Prospects of the Work and the War.

Heights near Sebastopol,
Nov. 25, 1854.

Dear President—Your letter of the 3rd instant came safe to hand, and was very welcome, for our communication with the rest of our friends throughout the world is nearly cut off, partly by us having no proper opportunity of writing, and partly because a great number of the letters that we send, and of those that are sent to us, are not carried to their destination.

I will now relate the manner in which your letter came to hand. Two men of the 49th Regiment went four days ago on pass to Balaklava, about six miles from this, and were ordered to call for any letters that might be there waiting transmission to their own regiment. The men are still absent, but their haversacks were found this morning by some sailors on the road between this and Balaklava and forwarded by them to the regiment. In one of them were found your letter, and another from brother Bell at Malta.

Since I wrote last to you, we have had rather busy times, in coming to the Crimea and fighting several battles. As for the battle of the Alma, which we fought on the 20th of September, you have already heard more full accounts than any I can give, but we have fought two engagements since that time, one on the 26th of Oct., when the Russians attacked the position which we occupied, and which we still occupy, but they were driven back with considerable loss. There was only our division engaged against them, but supported by other divisions, both French and British. The Russian loss was about 800.—There were about 15,000 Russians engaged.

Their next attempt was on the 5th of this month, when they began to drive in our pickets early in the morning, under cover of a foggy rain. Our division was again the first into action, being encamped nearest the point of attack, but we found it was not so easy to drive them back as formerly, for they came against us in immense numbers, having formed up near the point of attack during the night, besides planting a number of heavy guns against us. They likewise brought 105 field pieces into action. Our division was engaged for a length of time, and driven back nearly to our camp, before any of the other divisions had time to come to our assistance, but, then, division after division began to arrive, both of French and British, and the Russians were again forced to retire. Our troops were forced back three successive times to the very borders of our camp, but they forced the Russians to fly at last, and captured a number of their guns, besides taking a great number of prisoners. The loss of the Russians in killed and wounded is said to be 13,000. I do not know how many came against us altogether, but I hear that there were 60,000, of whom 20,000 never went back to Sebastopol.

Our division being the first engaged, and so long unsupported, was reduced to a mere skeleton by killed and wounded. I was wounded, myself, by a bayonet, in the left arm, but I was able, through the blessing of God, to return to my duty in about five days. One of the brethren, of the name of Brodie, belonging to the 41st Regiment, was killed, and brother Hay, of the 55th, had to get his right arm cut off above the elbow. Another, of the 41st, was wounded slightly in the hand. Brother McDonald, of this regiment, was wounded three times—the top of his head was first scraped by the splinters of a shell. He had it bound up in a handkerchief, and entered the engagement again, when another shell burst near him, which threw the clay and stones up into his face, knocking him senseless for some time, and swelled his jaw very much. He received also a musket ball in the palm of his hand, but he appeared to be doing well at the time he went away with the rest of the wounded to Balaklava. The rest of the brethren are well.

I am sorry to say that nothing can be done for the spread of the work, at present. We can hold no meetings, and it is only by stealth that we can have an opportunity of conversing with one another; indeed, there are some brethren, within a mile of me, whom I have not seen since we took our position before Sebastopol, but some of the brethren in the division with me have had accidental interviews with them. Elder Bell has written from Malta, to say that brother Miller, of the artillery, has come up from Gibraltar: But none of us have been able to see him. We cannot leave our camp for many minutes at a time, for we do not know what calls might be made for us before we were five minutes away.—There is a very bad spirit manifested towards the Gospel by the people among whom I live, for if anything whatever is mentioned concerning the Latter-day Saints or their doctrines, there is nothing can be heard, for some time after, but cursing and vile abusive language from almost every one in the tent.

Any information concerning the circumstances of the Latter-day Saints, or any new principles revealed, is received by us with the greatest satisfaction, particularly that contained in your letter concerning the new places appointed for the gathering of the Saints, as we all look forward with hope for the day that we leave Babylon, and are enabled to unite ourselves with the Saints of the Most High, and learn of His laws from His Prophets in His Temple. We can appreciate in some measure the manner in which the Saints in civil life in England are used and despised, but we are doubly bound, and consequently look forward with more fervency to the day when we may call ourselves free. And we have the more hope, as Cincinnati is so much easier reached than the Valley, until we can obtain means to assist us further on the way.

From the 1st to the 16th of October, we were busily engaged in throwing up batteries and entrenchments, and planting heavy guns and mortars, and getting up amunition, shot, and shell from Balaklava, while the Russians kept throwing shot and shell at us all the time that we were engaged at work. They throw up shell sometimes from the vessels in the harbour, in the centre of the town, right among our tents, but none of our regiment, and very few of our division, have been hurt by them, either in camp, at work, or on picket, except during the regular engagements which I have already mentioned.

We began the bombardment of the town on the morning of the 17th of Oct., while some of our shipping entered the harbour about the middle of the day, got at once under the range of the Russian forts, and would have swept everything before them, but the French Admiral, who was in command, apprehensive of our shipping being destroyed, gave the signal of recall, which our ships were obliged to obey, and they got very much cut up in getting out of the harbour again. Since that time the shipping have done nothing else than keep up a strict blockade. Our batteries have continued the bombardment ever since, principally upon the mud batteries thrown up by the Russians outside of their walls, and upon their shipping in the harbour. We did the most damage to them during the first two days of the bombardment. Our firing has been very slack since that time, as the nature of the harbour enables the Russian shipping to take shelter under some hills, which completely screen it from the fire of the batteries which we at first threw up. But since the action of the 5th of November, the Allied Forces have been busy throwing up batteries on the ground on which the two last actions were fought, which will give us complete command of the harbour and town, and at the same time prevent the Russians advancing as they did the two last times. We shall be ready to open fire from the new batteries and redoubts in a few days.

There are several considerations to prevent our taking the garrison by storm—mines, strong divisions ready to attack us in rear, whenever we storm, and strong divisions outside the walls on the north-west side of the town, with plenty of heavy ordnance, and an advantageous position ready to open fire upon us as soon as we are in possession of the town. We require more troops to master the divisions that are encamped outside of the town, so as to keep our present position secure at the same time.

The 62nd and 97th, 34th and 46th regiments, with several drafts for other regiments, have lately joined the army, but they do not make up our loss in killed, wounded, and those who died of cholera, fever, and bowel complaint. But many thousands of French and Turks have also joined us.

Our commanders are preparing for our wintering in our present position. We have begun to build houses, or rather huts, one for each company; and winter clothing has arrived for us, which is to be served out as soon as possible. Living in tents is rather uncomfortable in such wet, cold weather as prevails here at present, but it is more uncomfortable on picket every third night, very often without a tent or covering of any sort, except one dirty wet blanket, sometimes whitened by the snow, for snow has begun to fall here, although this enjoys a lower latitude than the south of England. Our principal deficiency at present is in baggage animals and cars to bring up our commissary, and draw stones for the building of our huts.

Since the action of the 5th of Nov., the French, and sometimes our Rifles, supported by the 1st Royals, have taken several mud batteries and entrenchments with field pieces in them, from the Russians, at different times, and the Russians have made several fierce sallies to retake them, but without success, for they are always quickly driven back, with considerable loss to them, but none to us.

Although we are making so many preparations to winter here, we would soon be all on board a ship if Sebastopol were once taken.

The brethren here desire the prayers of the Saints in England, as nothing short of the power of the Most High can bring them safely through their present trials. And if things go well with us, many of us will be home in England soon, and see our brethren there face to face.

I conclude with prayers for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God, and remain your brother in the Everlasting Covenant.—[Millennial Star.

[Extract from a Correspondence of the Republican.]

ST. LOUIS AND ITS DIFFICULTIES.

From a small town, St. Louis has grown to be a large city. Her mercantile operations, from being small and conducted by few, have grown great, and are carried on by a large number of able, wealthy and experienced men, in every department of trade. Commercial operations have required the employment of numerous steamboats, while the small mechanic of a few years back, has matured into the able, wealthy manufacturer of the present, whose hundreds of well paid and well appointed operatives, turn out from each of many establishments, more finished work than the whole place would make twelve or fifteen years ago.

I have seen St. Louis devastated by fire, which swept away in a night millions of her accumulated wealth; and I have seen her desolated by pestilence, which walked abroad in the darkness as well as the day, and bore to their long resting place thousands of her people, filling the city with mourning and woe; but from the effects of both I have seen her rise, imbued with new vigor, armed for other conquests, and marching forward to a greater glory.

When pestilence and fire and flood have apparently combined to impede her onward march, I have seen her men of vigor and her men of wealth combine to repel the destroying wave, to ward off the fatal blow, and as a band of brothers, united by a common destiny, resolve to stand by each other, promote each others' interests, and thus secure the common weal.

But, although I had witnessed fire and flood and pestilence, I never saw a day in St. Louis more ominous of evil than was last Saturday, the 13th inst.; one in which the financial hurricane which has desolated so large a portion of our land, seemed to break upon our city with all the suddenness of a clap of thunder in a clear sky.

The many-tongued messenger—the press—announced to all its multitude of readers, that one of our most eminent, and justly influential banking houses, had been dishonored. (Page & Bacon).

This announcement sent a thrill through every heart; its credit had stood so high, the wealth of its members was so great, their moral integrity was so unimpeachable, they had labored so long, so ardently, so valiantly to build up St. Louis, to extend her influence, to increase her trade by opening up new avenues for commerce and travel, had aided in embellishing her with buildings—in a word, had lived only to promote her interests with their own, both being so permanently identified, that everybody was alarmed at its suspension, and doubt and gloom hung on the countenances and hearts of the multitude.

The first apprehension was, that the storm, so long supposed to be gathering, was now about to break with all its terror upon our city, carrying desolation in its track, and sweeping away as with the besom of destruction those houses which had heretofore been regarded as the safe receptacles of the accumulated wealth or the daily earnings of our citizens. So sudden was the shock—so unexpected—all for a moment seemed paralyzed—and many were drawn within the vortex of suspicion, and flew to draw their treasure.

The attack was made upon the strongest of our private bankers—and by them and by the Boatmen's Savings Institution, most nobly sustained—every demand was met—there was strength sufficient for the day, but ere its close the great heart of the people was stirred, the vast accumulated wealth of the city was aroused, and capitalists went about to sustain those attacked, and help ward off the blow.

By Monday morning there was opportunity for concert of action—there was a determination manifested to sustain our business, and our men of business, and the same brotherhood of interest, in other times exhibited, was now again formed, and for a noble purpose.

Noble men, worthy to be reverenced and loved by a noble city; who, to impart full confidence to those having less opportunity to know, announced their willingness to pledge their private fortunes to sustain the banking houses of the city, and secure to all depositors every indebtedness.

They were a noble band, and had the opportunity been offered, there were hundreds more, possessing wealth and influence, who would have united with them and rejoiced in the opportunity.

But this stopped the current—quiet and confidence were restored, and to-day St. Louis possesses a proud eminence. A deed unparalleled performed—a city's credit sustained unimpaired—its business prosperity upheld, amid surrounding desolation and financial failure. Let our watchmen cry, all is well; and let our press proclaim with its thousand tongues, St. Louis is a brotherhood in interest, and all its business is safe.

A "Brave" English Nobleman.

Lord Forth has returned to England from the Crimea. It is said his return has created great indignation, on account of his cowardice, but cowardice is so rare a quality in the English character, that we doubt very much the truth of the story. The London correspondent of the New York Tribune writes:

"He is a very young officer, a minor, and, as it seems, not much of a hero. In the battle of Alma, he threw himself on the ground, and screamed—"I am frightened; I can't fight." Lord Raglan sent him word that in the next battle he was expected to distinguish himself by his gallantry, that his cowardice might be forgotten. But at Inkerman he again behaved as cowardly; two officers, therefore, were sent by the General-in-Chief to cast away his epauletts, to break his sword, and kick him out of the camp. He returned to England a disgraced man, his family disown him, and all the clubs are closed against him."

STATE OF THINGS BEFORE SEBASTOPOL.

Extract from the leading article of the Times, Dec. 23.

There is no use disguising the matter. We are not speaking from our own correspondence. We are not saying what we think alone. We say on the evidence of every letter that has been received in this country, and we echo the opinion of almost every experienced soldier or well-informed gentleman, when we say, that, the noblest army England ever sent from these shores has been sacraficed to the grossest mismanagement. Incompetency, lethargy, arristocratic hauteur, official indifference, fever, routine, perverseness and stupidity reign, revel and riot in the camp before Sebastopol, in the harbor of Balaklava, in the hospitals of Scutari, and how much nearer home we do not venture to say. We say it with the extremest reluctance—no one sees or hears anything of the Commander-in-Chief. Officers who landed on the 14th of September, and have been incessantly engaged in all the operations of the seige, are not acquainted with the face of their commander.

In the officer, and the private, alike we find a quiet, resigned, unimpassioned conviction, that the whole affair is bungled in the most hopeless and horrible manner. Everybody perceives it in his own state, in the fate of his comrades, in the condition of the camp, and in the progress of the siege. Young gentleman, bred in every luxury, and with an ample store of military comforts, were still at the last date wearing day and night nothing but the threadbare clothes and worn-out boots in which they landed on the 14th of September. They had no means of getting up the things left behind in the transports.—What becomes of everything sent to Balaklava nobody knows, but, while they are rotting, thousands are perishing for want of them. Everybody can point out something that should be done, but there is nobody to order it to be done; and fifty thousand men, or what now remains of them, are drifting with their eyes open, but hand-bound, and spell-bound, toward destruction. Do any of the letters, or any of the regimental officers returned from the war, give a different account? On the contrary, does it not come within everybody's knowledge, as it does in ours, that the letters handed about in private circles, and not published, lest they should prejudice the writer in the eyes of his superiors, give a far more gloomy account than any letters that we have ventured to publish?

The burden is forced upon us, and we must speak out. Good nature is a pleasant thing in its way, but if England is ever to be ruined, it will be by unseasonable good nature, by unlimited condonance, connivance, indulgence, and all the softer forms of virture. England has not become what it is by good nature, nor is good nature the one sole element of our social and commercial system. The period of good nature is over in the Crimea, and sterner qualities must now be invoked into action, unless we would throw away the last chance that remains for redeeming the character of this country, now in fearful jeopardy. Send out men who will redeem the army—not from the Russians, though they are formidable enough, but from despair, which is weighing down the spirits of every one, and an utter distrust in the arrangement of the expedition. It will be of but little use to send out re-enforcements by the thousands, unless we take steps for their better management. As it is, they march to their graves, and begin to perish by scores from the hour they land. Mistule receives them on the beach, and wearies them, worries them, drenches them, shivers them, and so destroys them, till a few spectral figures are all that remain. The soldiers of the Peninsula, when they saw the Duke of Wellington after an absence, used to exclaim that his face did them more good than the arrival of ten regiments. Such a head, or coadjutors equivalent to it, is what we want in the Crimea.

SALT LAKE LITERATURE.

The Salt Lake people have strongly marked peculiarities. Their social, domestic and political, as well as their religious institutions, differ from all others that the world has knowledge of. The circumstances which surrounded them prior to their hegira from Nauvoo, and those under which they are now placed, tend to render them in many respects a sui generis people. They think differently, speak differently, and write differently from other people. Necessity makes them practical, and has called out the most practical mind among them to take the lead in their affairs. Brigham Young is a remarkable man.—He proves equal to every emergency. There is in him a fertility of resource that never fails an energy that carries him triumphantly through all his undertakings, and a resolution that moves on undaunted by misfortune or seemingly insurmountable obstacles. Some of his coadjutors are wonderfully like him in these respects, but he is the moving and controlling spirit of Utah.

But that to which we designed making reference now is the peculiarity of Mormon literature. It is adapted to the people and their circumstances. Bold, impetuous, confident, strong in its provincialism, it takes hold upon the minds of those to whom it is addressed, and each man is made a host. There is no waste of words, no seeking after ornament, no attempt at polish, small regard for rhetorical or even gramatical rules, but every sentence means something, has pith, nerve, and a strong back-bone in it. We gave our readers recently a long extract from Brigham Young's recent proclamation in view of the threatened hostilities of the Utah Indians. Every one who reads it, and who knows anything about the people that look to Young as their head, will say it is just the thing. Just the thing to Inspire confidence in themselves, and their Governor, and hatred toward the Indians. Just the thing to arrouse a rude people to action, and make of each man a hero.—[Chicago "Democratic Press."

Napoleon and the Protestants of France.

By advices from Paris, we learn that the Emperor has replied to the memorial addressed to him on behalf of the persecuted Protestant churches. The answer of His Majesty is not altogether satisfactory, since, whilst professing virtually to grant the prayer of the petitioners, his assent is clogged by conditions by which it may be impaired, or rendered nugatory, at the discretion of local and subordinate authorities. The Emperor, it seems, recognizes the right of liberty of conscience, but not that of liberty of worship! His subjects may believe what they please, but they cannot, if belonging to the unacknowledged sects, legally claim the free outward exercise of their religion. To justify this assertion, it is even pretended that, in England, Dissenting congregations cannot erect places of worship without permission of the bishop of the diocese! What, however, the Emperor refuses as a right, he is disposed to concede as a favor, provided only he be satisfied that the Nonconformity for which this liberty is sought, is not political in its character and aims. This provision nullifies the favor, if that can be so styled which may be demanded as a moral, if not a legal right. It is obvious that the Perfects, Mayors, and other functionaries, by branding all Dissent within their jurisdiction as political, will still be at liberty to close places of worship, and continue, as before, a system of organized legal persecution.—[London Christian Times.

PAROWAN, IRON COUNTY.

The following is an extract of a letter from John Steele to Elder G. A. Smith:

Nov. 7th and 8th, 1854.

A few evenings ago I had a talk with the old Piede Captain and gave him the suit of clothes you sent him. I told the old captain he must talk to his men and tell them they must not steal, nor kill our cattle, nor molest anything that belonged to us. He said he would talk good to his men, and had told them not to steal from us, and with a few exceptions they would hear; but some had no pockets in their heads. I told him when any misunderstanding took place between his men and ours, they tell him about it, and he must come to our captains and tell them about it. He said they would do so. I also told him not to trade squaws nor children to the Spaniards to be taken into Mexico, or pretty soon they would have no wives, and of course no children, and there would soon be no Piedes. He said he understood it. I also brought your little Indian girl, and showed him how nice and clean were the Indian children who lived with the Mormons, and he seemed pleased, and told us that she was his brother's daughter, and her mother is living over on Ash creek, and her father is dead; that he was a great captain. Sister Smith gave him some tobacco, and he said he would have a good smoke with his men, and talk good to them as I had talked to him. He told us that Walker was coming here as soon as snow fell, to stay all winter at his house, and that he wanted to be very friendly, and had told his men not to kill the Mormons, but some of them would not hear.

We are now completely surrounded with a wall; some of it is five feet high, some ten, about one half is up twelve feet, the full hight. It is six feet wide at the bottom, and two feet and a half at the top.

Nov. 8.—Capt. Walker has arrived with about 23 men, 25 squaws, 420 head of horses, 20 head of oxen, some sheep, cows and goats. From the looks of the equipage they are going to be our neighbors this winter. They look friendly, and feel so, for I ought to know.

The settlement at Harmony is doing well. I was there a short time ago with President J. C. L. Smith; they are the same warm-hearted Saints they always were; they treated us very kindly indeed. We examined the works, and found they had nearly enough adobies made to complete the wall ten feet high, and by this time they have commenced their wall. They have been leveling the ground, and expect to have the wall completed before any hard frost.

Cedar city is growing rapidly, and generally speaking the people feel well, and try to keep the commandments of the Lord. Br. Joel H. Johnson has his place nearly fortified with a good stone wall, and good gates, so that as a general thing we are getting pretty well prepared for defense.

Peace and plenty crown the labors of the Saints in this part of the Lord's vineyard. All our potatoes are stored, and nearly all the wheat is in bins. We expect to have our new grist mill running in a week or two, and I believe it has as good works as I ever saw in this country.

A WILD MAN IN WALDOBORO'

The following communication relative to the discovery of a wild man in Waldoboro', was handed to the editor of the Thomaston Journal by Mr. J. W. McHenri. The Journal says there are several persons who can vouch for the truth of the statement which it contains:

Mr. Editor: On the morning of January 2nd, while engaging in chopping wood a short distance from my house in Waldoboro', I was startled by the most terrific scream that ever greeted my ears; it seemed to proceed from the woods near by. I immediately searched around for this unearthly noise, but after a half hour's fruitless search I resumed my labors, but had scarcely struck a blow with my axe when the sharp shriek burst out upon the air.—Looking up quickly, I discovered an object about ten rods from me, standing between two trees, which had the appearance of a miniature human being. I advanced towards it, but the little creature fled as I neared it. I gave chase and a short run succeded in catching it.

The little fellow turned a most imploring look upon me, and uttered a sharp shrill shriek, resembling the whistle of an engine. I took him to my house and tried to induce him to eat some meat, but failed in the attempt; I then offered him some water, of which he drank a small quantity. I next gave him some dried beach nuts, which he cracked and ate readily. He is of the male species, about eighteen inches in height, and his limbs are perfect in proportion. With the exception of his face, hands and feet, he is covered with hair of a jet black hue. Whoever may wish to see this strange specimen of human nature, can gratify their curiosity by calling at my house in the eastern part of Waldoboro', near the Trobridge tavern. I give these facts to the public, to see if there is any one who can account for this wonderful phenomenon.

SELECTIONS FOR A NEWSPAPER.

Most people think the selection of suitable matter for a newspaper the easiest part of the business. How great an error. It is by all means the most difficult. To look over and over hundreds of exchange papers every week from which to select enough for one, especially when the question is not what shall, but what shall not be selected, is no easy task. If every person who read a newspaper could have edited it, we should hear less complaints. Not unfrequently is it the case that an editor looks over all his exchange papers for something interesting, and can absolutely find nothing. Every paper is drier than a contribution box; and yet something must be had—his paper must come out with something in it, and he does the best he can. To an editor who has the least care about what he selects, the writing he has to do is the least part of the labor.

Every subscriber thinks the paper is printed for his own benefit; if there is nothing in it that suits them it must be stopped—it is good for nothing. Just as many subscribers as an editor may have, so many tastes has he to consult.

One wants something smart; another something sound. One likes anecdotes, fun and frolic, and the next-door neighbor wonders that a man of sense will put such stuff in his paper. Something argumentative, or the editor is a dull fool. And so between them all, you see the poor fellow gets roughly handled. And yet to ninety-nine out of a hundred these things do occur. They never reflect that what does not please them, may please the next man, but they insist that if the paper does not please them it is good for nothing.

COL. STEPTOE AND COMPANY.

Col. Steptoe, Lieuts. Mowry, Allston, and Tyler, U. S. A., Chief Justice Kinney, U. S. District Attorney Holman, with a part of Lieut. Allston's company of dragoons, and part of Lieut. Mowry's company of Rifles, left this city, Oct. 12, on a tour South. They went by way of Manti to Fillmore city, and returned by the usual traveled route to this city on the 3d inst. During his trip Judge Kinney held the regular sessions of court in the second judicial district, and we hear his charges to the jury much commended as evincing a high order of official intelligence, marked by a gentlemanly bearing, and a pacific spirit entirely opposed to litigation. We have been informed by one of the party that several of them purchased lots in Fillmore City, very highly appreciating its material advantages for the seat of Government; that all were pleased with the condition and appearance of the different settlements, remarking that they were never more kindly received, nor courteously treated, nor did they wish to be.—[Deseret News, Nov. 9.

SHUT UP YOUR LIQUOR AND BEER SHOPS.

Much to the gratification of all lovers of good conduct and good order, the Mayor and City Council of this city, at their last session, repealed all licenses for selling beer and intoxicating liquors, and there is an ordinance making such sales finable without a license, we begin to think there is a prospect for inebriates to put their time and means to better use than to loaf about slop shops, or be seen drunk in our streets, or found prowling at nights where they have no business.

Should taking away licenses, fines for breach of ordinance, and lopping dead branches from the church, fail in stopping traffic, we hope the Bishops, and citizens in each ward, co-operating with the Mayor and City Council, will take effectual measures to abate all nuisances.—[Des. News, Nov. 30.

HOPE ON.

BY MRS. R. T. ELDREDGE.

There are some mortals in this world of ours
That fain would rob each rose of every charm;
They see no beauty in the fairest flowers,
And every cloud portends a fearful storm.

True, there are hours so raught with tearless woe
The stoutest heart will sink and faint a while
But there's a fount whose living waters flow,
Free, pure and full, for every sorrowing child.

There is no path in life, however drear,
Void of all hope—life has its joy and care;
Full soft I know a smile foretells a tear,
This earthly home cannot be always fair.

There is a spirit joy that all may feel,
A joy that makes this life seem doubly blest;
Mortal, hope on, hope on, thro' woe and and weal,
And heaven at last will be thy home of rest.

THE PEOPLE'S ANTHEM.

BY EBENEZER ELLIOT.

When wilt thou save the People!
Oh God of mercy when?
Not kings and lords, but nations!
Not thrones and crowns, but men!
Flowers of thy heart, oh God, are they,
Let them not pass like weeds away,
Their heritage a Winter's day.
God save the People!

Shall crime breed crime forever,
Strength aiding still the wrongs?
Is it Thy will, oh Father,
That man shall toil for wrong?
"No!" say thy mountains, "No!" thy skies!
"Man's clouded sun shall brightly rise,
And songs ascend instead of sighs."
God save the People!

When wilt thou save the People!
Oh God, of mercy, when?
The People, Lord, the People!
Not thrones and crowns, but men!
God save the People! thine they are,
Thy children, as the angels fair;
Save them from bondage and despair.
God save the People!

Remarks by President J. M. Grant, Tabernacle, Oct. 7, 1854.

This afternoon I have very little disposition to detain you long. My health is such I would prefer hearing others rather than speak myself.

We have received much good instruction, and I feel that our spirits are refreshed, and cheered up. We have been edified during the Conference.

I like the remarks of Elder Orson Pratt this afternoon. I hope they will be listened to, and obeyed.

I regret very much that our immigration this season are so few; though I rejoice on the other hand that the elders abroad, and the general instructions of the church have been able to gather so many. We believe we have brethren here from different settlements, and lots of persons in this city who are on hand to take into their employment three or four times as many people as have come in this season from the nations of the earth.

The first year we were located in the valley we wanted a few teams sent out to help the emigration, and we had to use considerable exertion to get those few teams; but this year, all the servants of the Lord had to do was to make a call upon the people through their bishops, and all the teams we wanted were forthcoming, with flour, and all necessary food, to send forth, to help in our emigration.

I have seen the time in Kirtland, Ohio, the first gathering place I went to, when you could have crowded the whole congregation into one room sixteen feet by eighteen; and those comprised all the Saints that were there. If we had sent up to Jackson county, and brought them all down, and had a house like this, there would have been just a little belt of people in front of the stand, and reaching part way up towards the opposite side of the room.

In the mountains, though it is difficult to gather the people here; though they come from the nations, and have the Atlantic to cross, and have to come from the different parts of the United States, we have got together a considerable body of people. However, there are as yet but few, comparatively. We are looked upon as feeble in the world; of but small height; but it is a very easy thing to bring in an emigration of four or five thousand; and we can bring wagons from different settlements, and the people who have come in are swallowed right up, as it were, so that in three or four weeks we cannot tell what has become of our immigration. They can come by thousands, and be dispersed throughout the Territory among the Saints, and find comfortable homes, and it is scarcely known, and felt.

As to the Perpetual Emigrating Fund, to make it perpetual, you must replenish it, and not take from it—that would make it a short lived thing. If you are aided by that Fund, throw the aid you have received back into the treasury, that it may be full; that we may be able to send for others. I have heard the President speaking that he designed to call upon individuals who are pretty well off here, who have friends in England, Scotland, Wales, Denmark, Germany, Italy, and I don't know where, to operate with the Fund, and become a stay, and a staff to it, and associate with it. For instance here is such a man as father Russell, that has given his thousands; perhaps he knows of some family there, he would like to bring here. He can send through the P. E. Fund for that family; and they shall be brought on this condition, that they labor for him, and assist him until they pay for their being brought here.

In Yankee land they make the boys pay for their bringing up; so they can pay for their bringing here, if I have spent the money for them. Some of you who want a gardener, or a farmer, launch out your gold, your cattle, your horses, your food, and your raiment, and deposit the means, and we will send over, and get the family, and that family will aid and assist you in your financial operations, and pay up the debt. I reckon that six or eight thousand in Utah could act upon this principle.

You who have been brought in here, labor, and throw back into the great purse what you have received, that we may bring double the number another year.

Our brethren in Potawatomie county, four or five years ago, had a notion that they were going to get up a machine that would bring fifteen thousand at a load.

The idea of becoming a State in two or three years, when we have only got four or five thousand of an emigration! I do not wonder that the Latter-day Saints believe in the plurality of wives. Launch out your means to help us bring the poor; if you do not; we will raise up the mountain boys ourselves. This piecemeal business of gathering saints! we want it upon the wholesale principle. That's the doctrine. I tell you, a few more boys breaking the crust of nations like Bro. Carns, after awhile, by driving their little wedges, will bring them over by nations.

A great many people who come here, when they do not find everything right handy—plenty of food, houses, and all other conveniences, they are discouraged, and lose their energies. If you want to know something about the Mormon grit, remember what Bro. Carns said this morning; if he is whipped, he don't stay whipped. You cannot discourage a real Mormon. It is necessary to raise up a certain stripe in the Valley of the real Mormon grit, that those who come over here, and who have the whines and the grunts, may have the Mormon leaven among them to leaven the whole lump.

I do not know but the President will be calling for volunteers to operate with the Fund to bring more families here.

There are one or two more little items I wanted to speak about.

I have had one or two cases reported to me. For instance, some of our brethren who cross the plains, when they get here, are a little peevish, snappish, vexed, and quarrelsome. When the wind blowed the other day, a man got the servant girl to hold the tent pole to keep it from falling, but, she not being strong enough, down went the tent. The man then made a scourge out of a rope and began to beat the girl, and beat her most unmercifully. I do not know whether that man is converted or not; but it makes me think of an old Baptist preacher in Virginia. He came and preached in a certain place; the next time he came round, a drunken man came staggering up to him and said, "Bro. Jones, when you was last in our settlement, you converted my soul." "Well," said Bro. Jones, "I should think I did, for I do not believe the Lord had anything to do with it." I am rather inclined to think it is possible that the girl whipper is yet unconverted. We like men here to learn how to treat their families, their cattle, and their horses, etc.

I am entirely of a lively disposition: I know not how to be low-spirited; I never knew what it was to be lonesome in my life. Some talk about being lonesome when they are alone; I know nothing about it. I never misuse a beast, and I am not inclined to misuse people; but when they are right mean, I like to work them up with my tongue once in a while. But the iden of people going to work to beat, and kick, and pound their cattle, horses, children, and everything around them, is nonsense. Good natured feelings, and good natured conduct are worth a thousand of the opposite character. Do right; be kind and gentle. You have come in the midst of the people of God; you have come to unite with us in serving the mighty God of Jacob, and endeavor to do right.

When brethren start to come here they are anxious to be in this place, but many of them, when they get here, see no charms in Zion. You can learn their spirits directly, for they are known by their associates. We have some high priests, etc., who have been among us for years, and others who have come in lately, who like to associate with our enemies, those who have a sneering and malicious spirit. Talk about such persons having the Mormon spirit in them, and the light of the Holy Ghost, and yet love the world and the things of the world, and the spirit of the world, and the glory of the world, and the wickedness of the world. Some people can associate with those who laugh at the institutions of heaven, at the principles of eternity, and laugh to scorn the ministry of the people of God; they like to converse with them, and they love to be in their society; they love to have them around them. I would rather dig thistle roots, and sego roots to live upon, and eat boiled hides, and drink the broth from them than, to take such enemies into my house, and board them, and rather than rent my house to such persons to live in, I would burn it up if they had lived in it, and have a new one. That is my grit. The filthy old building should never hold my family. I wish all the Mormons felt as I do, there would be a flame in Zion, and a fire in Jerusalem. I say, if all the Mormons felt as I do about those who laugh at our distresses, and when calamities come upon us, wag their heads, and say "Ha, ha! so would we have it," they would think there was a furnace in Zion, and a flame in Jerusalem.

I want Mormons to feel like Mormons; to feel like saints. I want a man of God to feel fired up with the Holy Ghost, and not place his affections upon the world, and the things of the world; but love your God and your brethren that are poor and in distress, and who love God. Those highminded hypocrites, who love and scrape to get your dimes, let them go to where they belong, they and their dimes; that is the way I feel about them. I like to see the saints of God fired up to help the poor, and bring them in here to strengthen the reins of Israel. I like to see them exert themselves to send forth the gospel, and bring from the nations those who are humble, contrite, pure, and holy, and who are uncontaminated by the vices of the world. Go into the circles of high life, if you please; I know about the high and the low in the United States. Talk about high life! about converting many of that class and bringing them here! What will you bring? Those who believe the truth with difficulty. But the poor and needy, who are looked upon as the dross and offscouring of all things, are the best of all creation, and we want the best, the purest, and those that are the most holy, brought to Zion. But the breath of that person who rejects my God is like the upas tree to me—it is poisonous; I do not like it. I admit that I occasionally find some who have not been baptized, in whom there is a stripe of honor and good will which I like; but I speak generally of those who knowingly persecute the people of God, who reject the truth; I do not love them. I am like the old Indian, "Though I will forgive and forget, I always remember." It is bred in my bones; I was raised up in the Mormon Church from my childhood; it is sweet to me, sweeter than the honey or the honeycomb; it is life and breath to me; it is eternal life, and I love it.

I do not like the person who sneers at Mormonism, and I do not like those who associate with such; they are no brothers, no sisters, nor friends to me. I fellowship those who love the institutions of God—who love the servants of God, and the truth of God, and the principles of righteousness. But that class that sneer at the principles of the gospel, and the institutions of the kingdom of God, who like to associate with the wicked and ungodly are not my brothers, they are not my sisters, nor friends, nor the friends of God. But the person who seeks to convert the sinner, and bring him to the truth; I like that disposition. What I am at is this; not that I feel any different towards those out of the church than the rest of you; there are a great many of the brethren and sisters who are poor devils. All gentiles, in their eyes, are so good, so kind, so loving, so gentle, and so full of sympathy, that they cannot tell that there is any difference between them and the Latter Day Saints. Give me the man and the woman that can tell the difference between the devil and a saint. Says one, "Most all of us can." I tell you, you cannot. I see people on my right and on my left who can dwell and associate with the ungodly, drink into their spirit, and fall into the same condemnation as they do. Take a man who is pure, he sees the corruption of the ungodly. I do not like it; it has no spirit of Zion in it.

New comers, you will find men called saints who are "land sharks of Utah." We have all kind of men here, and we expect to have them; and if some of you who have been brought here by the Fund this year, are no better than many of those who were brought last season, you will whine, but for God's sake, when you feel like whining bite your tongue; and if you do not like to do that, use Bro. H. Kimball's remedy, chew a piece of India rubber, and keep chewing it until you get the grunt out of you.

I do not wish to detain you. May the God of heaven bless you, and bless the saints in every land and nation, that Israel may be gathered, and the saints saved, which may God grant: Amen.

The Professor and the Spiritualists.

There appears to be a sort of rivalry between Prof. Spencer, the Psychologist, and the Spirit Rappers of this city. Both parties produce about the same effects by their conjurations, manipulations and manifestations—the one operating on wooden tables and the other on wooden heads—but they disagree as to the causes that bring about such wonderful effects—the rappers contending that they are aided by the spirits of the dead, which the Professor denies, abjuring all "dead-heads."

Last Saturday night, while the Professor was experimenting with his "subjects," before a large audience, one of the young men "caved in" under the operation—sinking down exhausted for a while, and then rising and pitching into the crowd that gathered around him at a terrible rate. He had in some way gotten out of the Professor's control, and was going it on his own hook—knocking men and chairs around, smashing tables, and roaring like a young horse on a general training. The rappers saw this, and were delighted—the magician had found his match—the man, they said was an "independent clairvoyant," and might play hob and destruction before he could be tamed. Some of them rushed towards him, made "the passes," and finally succeeded in reducing him to a state of physical exhaustion. The ladies looked on in alarm—some of them climbed benches to look at the proceedings and others tucked up their shawls and vamosed. The Professor ascribed the conduct of his "subject" to the gas—the rappers said it was the Professor's "gas"—the outsiders said it was whiskey, and the old ladies thought it was the devil. No harm was done, however, and the young fellow after blowing off steam, got up and walked home.

The Professor continues his lectures and experiments to-night, all who are fond of a bit of fun, or desire to see something of the wonders of Pyschology, should go to Wyman's Hall.—[Morning Herald.

ASTRONOMICAL DISCOVERY.

The universally accredited theory, that the Moon is uninhabitable because she has no atmosphere, has received, from a recent discovery, a blow that will unsettle it, at least. That the Moon, as far as we have yet been able to examine, has no atmosphere, or at least none of sufficient density to conform to our optical laws and the demands of any animal life known to us, is unquestionable. But this can be positively affirmed of only one side of our satelite; for, as will be remembered, although she revolves upon her axis, she constantly presents but one side to the earth. Now it has been discovered by calculation, and demonstrated as geometrical fact, that the Moon's centre of form is eight miles nearer to us than her centre of gravity, through which, of course, her axis of revolution must pass; or in other words, this side of the Moon is sixteen miles higher than the other side. If, therefore, we suppose that the Moon has an atmosphere such as ours, it would be of such extreme rarity on the only side exposed to our observation, that for optical effect and animal life it might as well not exist. For mountains upon the Earth, none of which are over five miles above the level of the sea, have been ascended to a height at which life could not be supported for any length of time, and still mountains have stretched above the panting traveler. What then must be the atmosphere at four times such an elevation? The conclusion seems inevitable that although the hither side of the Moon is uninhabitable for want of an atmosphere, the remote side may be perfectly adapted to animal life. It is at least certain that the mere want of an atmosphere perceptible to us, is no longer conclusive as to the uninhabitableness of the planet that rules the night. We announce this discovery on the authority of one of the most eminent mathematicians and astronomers in the world. It will soon be formally declared in a scientific quarter.—[Courier and Enquirer.

IT IS PROPOSED to send ex-Presidents Tyler, Van Buren, and Fillmore to Europe, to offer a mediation between the Allies and Russia. These three men are the only surviving Presidents.

A church has been recently built in Davenport, Iowa. The following notice was appended to the advertisement of the opening of the edifice. "The chewers of tobacco are earnestly requested to avoid the use of the aisle in the church, or else spit in their hats." A fellow who indulges in the filthy practice of chewing ought not to be allowed to spit in any other place than his hat.

A farm was purchased, some years since, for the home of lunatics, not far from Cincinnati, Ohio, in Hamilton county, and suitable buildings erected thereon. From the report, the whole establishment appears to be in a satisfactory condition. It was first opened in 1853, and the whole number of patients received since is 77 males and 76 females.

The Tribune says that New York now contains 700,000 inhabitants, and is increasing at the rate of from eight to ten per cent. per annum.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!
Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours,
MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the

The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

CORINTHIAN MELODY.
Music—"HARK!"
The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

MILTON ON POLYGAMY.

From the First Book on "Christian Doctrine," Translated from the Latin, by Charles R. Sumner, D. D., Lord Bishop of Winchester.

In the definition which I have given of marriage, I have not said, in compliance with the common opinion, of one man with one woman, lest I should, by implication, charge the holy patriarchs and pillars of our faith, Abraham, and the others who had more than one wife at the same time, with habitual fornication and adultery; and lest I should be forced to exclude from the sanctuary of God, as spurious, the holy offspring which sprang from them, yea, the whole of the sons of Israel, for whom the sanctuary itself was made. For it is said, Dieut. xxiii, 2, "A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of Jehovah, even to his tenth generation." Either, therefore, polygamy is true marriage, or all the children born in that state are spurious; which would include the whole race of Jacob, the twelve holy tribes chosen by God.

But as such an assertion would be absurd in the extreme, not to say impious, and as it is the height of injustice, as well as an example of most dangerous tendency in religion, to account as sin what is not such in reality; it appears to me that, so far from the question respecting the lawfulness of polygamy being trivial, it is of the highest importance that it should be decided.

Those who deny its lawfulness attempt to prove their position from Gen. ii, 24: "A man shall cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh," compared with Matt xxix, 5, "they twain shall be one flesh." A man shall cleave, they say, to his wife, not to his wives, and they twain, and no more, shall be one flesh. This is certainly ingenious; and I therefore subjoin the passage in Exodus xx, 17, "thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass;" whence it would follow that no one had more than a single house, a single man-servant, a single maid-servant, a single ox or ass. It would be ridiculous to argue that it is not said houses, but house; not man-servants, but man-servant; not even neighbors, but neighbor; as if it were not the general custom, in laying down commandments of this kind, to use the singular number, not in a numerical sense, but as designating the species of the thing intended.

With regard to the phrase, they twain, and not more, shall be one flesh, it is to be observed, first, that the context refers to the husband and that wife only whom he was seeking to divorce, without intending any allusion to the number of his wives, whether one or more. Secondly, marriage is in the nature of a relation; and to one relation there can be no more than two parties. In the same sense, therefore, as if a man has many sons, his parental relation towards them all is manifold, but towards each individually is single and complete in itself; by parity of reasoning, if a man has many wives, the relation which he bears to each will not be less perfect in itself, nor will the husband be less one flesh with each of them, than if he had only one wife. Thus it might be properly said of Abraham, with regard to Sarah and Hager respectively, these twain were one flesh; and with good reason, for whoever consorts with harlots, however many in number, is still said to be one flesh with each: I Cor. vi, 16. "What, know ye not that he which is joined to an harlot is one body? for two, saith he, shall be one flesh." The expression may, therefore, be applied as properly to the husband, who has many wives, as to him who has only one.

Hence it follows that the commandment in question (though in fact it is no commandment at all, as has been shown) contains nothing against polygamy, either in the way of direct prohibition or implied censure; unless we are to suppose that the law of God as delivered by Moses, was at variance with his former declarations; or that, though the passage in question had been frequently looked into by a multitude of Priests, and Levites, and Prophets, men of all ranks, of holiest lives and most acceptable to God, the fury of their passions was such as to hurry them by a blind impulse into habitual fornication; for to this supposition are we reduced, if there be anything in the present precept which renders polygamy incompatible with lawful marriage.

Another text from which the unlawfulness of polygamy is maintained, is Lev. xviii, 18, "neither shalt thou take a wife to her sister, to vex her, to uncover her nakedness, beside the other in her life time." Here Junius translates the passage, mulierem unam ad alteram, (one woman to another,) instead of mulierem ad sororem suam, (a woman to her sister,) in order that from this forced and inadmissible interpretation he may elicit an argument against polygamy.

In drawing up a law, as in composing a definition, it is necessary that the most exact and appropriate words should be used, and that they should be interpreted not in their metaphorical, but in their proper signification. He says, indeed, that the same words are found in the same sense in other passages. This is true; but it is only where the context precludes the possibility of any ambiguity, as in Gen. xxvi, 31, juraverunt vir fratri suo, that is alteri, they swore one to another. No one would infer from this passage that Isaac was the brother of Abimelech; nor would any, on the other hand, entertain a doubt that the passage in Leviticus was intended as a prohibition against taking a wife to her sister; particularly as the preceding verses of this chapter treat of the degrees of affinity to which intermarriage is forbidden. Moreover, this would be to uncover her nakedness, the evil against which the law in question was intended to guard; whereas the caution would be unnecessary in the case of taking another wife not related or allied to the former; for no nakedness would be thereby uncovered. Lastly, why is the clause in her life time added? For there could be no doubt of its being lawful after her death to marry another who was neither related nor allied to her, though it might be questionable whether it were lawful to marry a wife's sister.

It is objected, that marriage with a wife's sister is forbidden by analogy in the sixteenth verse, and that therefore a second prohibition was unnecessary. I answer, first, that there is in reality no analogy between the two passages; for that by marrying a brother's wife, the brother's nakedness is uncovered; whereas by marrying a wife's sister, it is not a sister's nakedness, but only that of a kinswoman by marriage which is uncovered. Besides, if nothing were to be prohibited which had been before prohibited by analogy, why is a marriage with a mother forbidden, when marriage with a father had been already declared unlawful? or why marriage with a mother's sister, when marriage with a father's sister had been prohibited?

If this reasoning be allowed, it follows that more than half the laws relating to incest are unnecessary. Lastly, considering that the prevention of enmity is alleged as a principal motive for the law before us, it is obvious that if the intention had been to condemn polygamy, reasons of a much stronger kind might have been urged from the nature of the original institution, as was done in the ordinances of the Sabbath.

A third passage which is advanced, Dieut. xvii, 17, is so far from condemning polygamy, either in a king or any one else, that it expressly allows it; and only imposes the same restraints upon this condition which are laid upon the multiplication of horses, or the accumulation of treasure; as will appear from the seventeenth and eighteenth verses.

Except the three passages which are thus irrelevantly adduced, not a trace appears of the interdiction of polygamy throughout the whole law; nor even in any of the prophets, who were at once the rigid interpreters of the law, and the habitual reprovers of the vices of the people. The only shadow of an exception occurs in a passage of Malachi, the last of the prophets, which some consider as decisive against polygamy. It would be indeed a late and postliminous enactment, if that were for the first time prohibited after the Babylonish captivity, which ought to have been prohibited many ages before. For if it had been really a sin, how could it have escaped the reprehension of so many prophets who preceded him? We may safely conclude that if polygamy be not forbidden in the law, neither is it forbidden here; for Malichi was not the author of a new law.

Let us, however, see the words themselves, as translated by Junius ii, 15, Nonne unum effecit? quamvis reliqui spiritis ipsi essent; quid autem unum? (Malachi, chap. ii, verse 15, three first lines.) It would be rash and unreasonable indeed, if on the authority of so obscure a passage, which has been tortured and twisted by different interpreters into such a variety of meanings, we were to form a conclusion on so momentous a subject, and to impose it on others as an article of faith.

But whatever be the signification of the words, nonne unum effecit, what do they prove? Are we, for the sake of drawing an inference against polygamy, to understand the phrase thus---did he not make one woman? But the gender and even the case are at variance with this interpretation; for nearly all the other commentators render the words as follows: annon unus fecit? et residuam spiritus ipsi? et quid ille unus? We ought not, therefore, to draw any conclusion from a passage like the present, in behalf of a doctrine which is either not mentioned elsewhere, or only in doubtful terms; but rather to conclude that the prophets design was to reprove a practice that the whole of Scripture concurs in reproving, and which forms the principal subject of the very chapter in question, ii, 11, 16, viz: marriage with the daughter of a strange God---a corruption very prevalent among the Jews of that time, as we learn from Ezra and Nehemiah.

With regard to the words of Christ, Matt. v, 32, and xix, 5, the passage from Genesis ii, 24, is repeated, not for the purpose of condemning polygamy, but of reproving the unrestrained liberty of divorce, which is a very different thing; nor can the words be made to apply to any other subject without evident violence to their meaning. For the argument which is deduced from Matt. v, 32, that if a man who marries another after putting away his first wife, committeth adultery, much more must he commit adultery who retains the first and marries another, ought itself to be repudiated as an illegitimate conclusion. For, in the first place, it is the divine precepts themselves that are obligatory, not the consequences deduced from them by human reasoning; for what appears a reasonable inference to one individual, may not be equally obvious to another of not inferior discernment.

Secondly, he who puts away his wife and marries another, is not said to commit adultery because he marries another, but because in consequence of his marriage with another he does not retain his former wife, to whom also he owed the performance of conjugal duties; whence it is expressly said, Mark x, 11, "he committeth adultery against her." That he is in a condition to perform conjugal duties to the one after having taken another to her, is shewn by God himself, Exod. xxi, 10, "if he take him another wife, her food, her raiment, and her duty of marriage shall he not diminish." It cannot be supposed that the divine forethought intended to provide for adultery.

Nor is it allowable to argue, from I Cor. vii, 2, "let every man have his own wife," that therefore none should have no more than one wife, is explicitly enjoined, I Tim. iii, 2, and Tit. i, 6, "he must be the husband of one wife;" in order, probably, that they may discharge with greater diligence the ecclesiastical duties which they have undertaken. The command itself, however, is a sufficient proof that polygamy was not forbidden to the rest, and that it was common in the church at that time.

[He must be the husband of one wife," does not in the least imply that he was not at liberty to have more wives.—ED.]

Lastly, in answer to what is urged from I Cor. vii, 4, "likewise, also, the husband hath no power of his own body, but the wife, it is easy to reply, as was done above, that the word wife in this passage is used with reference to the species, and not to the number. Nor can the power of the wife over the body of her husband be different now, from what it was under the law, Exodus xxi, which signifies "her stated times," expressed by St. Paul in the present phrase, "her due benevolence." With regard to what is due, the Hebrew word is sufficiently explicit.

On the other hand, the following passages clearly admit the lawfulness of polygamy, Exod. xxi, 10, "if he take him another wife, her food, her raiment, and her duty of marriage shall he not diminish." Dieut. xvii, 17, "neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that he turn not away." Would the law have been so closely worded if it had not been allowable to take more wives than one at the same time? Who would venture to subjoin as an inference from this language, therefore let him have one only? In such case, since it is said in the preceding verse, "he shall not multiply horses to himself," it would be necessary to subjoin there also, therefore he shall have one horse only.

Nor do we want any proof to assure us that the first institution of marriage was intended to join the prince equally with the people; if, therefore, it permits only one wife, it permits no more even to the prince. But the reason given for the law is this, that his heart turn not away; a danger which would arise if he were to marry many, especially strange women, as Solomon afterwards did. Now if the present law had been intended merely as a confirmation and vindication of the primary institution of marriage, nothing could have been more appropriate than to have recited the institution itself in this place, and not to have advanced that reason alone which has been mentioned.

Let us hear the words of God himself, the author of the law, and the best interpreter of his own will: II Sam. xii, 8, "I gave thee thy master's wives into thy bosom, * * * and if that had been too little, I would moreover have given unto thee such and such things." Here there can be no subterfuge; God gave him wives; he gave them to a man whom he loved, as one among a number of great benefits; he would have given him more if these had not been enough. Besides, the very argument which God uses towards David is of more force when applied to the gift of wives, than to any other---thou oughtest at least to have abstained from the wife of another person, not so much because I had given thee thy master's house, or thy master's kingdom, as because I had given thee the wives of the king.

Bexa indeed objects, that David herein committed incest, namely, with the wives of his father-in-law. But he had forgotten what was indicated by Esther ii, 12, 13, that the kings of Israel had two houses for the women, one appointed for the virgins, the other for the concubines, and that it was the former and not the latter which were given to David. This appears also from I Kings i, 4, "the king knew her not." Cantic. vi. 8, "there are four-score concubines and virgins without number." At the same time, it might be said with perfect propriety that God had given him his master's wives, even supposing that he had only given him as many in number and of the same description, though not the very same; even as he gave him, not indeed the identical house and retinue of his master, but one equally magnificent and royal.

It is not wonderful, therefore, that what the authority of the law, and the voice of God himself has sanctioned, should be alluded to by the holy prophets in their inspired hymns as a thing lawful and honorable. Psal. xiv. 9, (which is entitled a song of loves,) "kings' daughters were among thy honorable women," v. 15, "the virgins, her companions that follow her, shall be brought unto thee." Nay, the words of the very song are quoted by the Apostle to the Hebrews, i, 8: "Unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God," etc., as the words wherein God the Father himself addresses the Son, and in which his divinity is asserted more clearly than in any other passage. Would it have been proper for God the Father to speak by the mouth of harlots, and to manifest his holy Son to mankind as God in the amatory songs of adulteresses?

Nor must we omit II Chron. xxiv, 2, 3: "Joash did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all the days of Jehoiada, the priest; and Jehoiada took for him two wives." For the two clauses are not placed in contrast, or disjoined from each other, but it said in one and the same connection that under the guidance of Jehoiada he did that which was right, and that by the authority of the same individual he married two wives. This is contrary to the usual practice in the eulogies of the kings, where, if anything be blameable be subjoined, it is expressly excepted from the present character: I Kings xv, 5, "save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite." V. 11, 14, "And Aza did that which was right, * * * but the high places were not removed; nevertheless Aza's heart was perfect."

Since, therefore, the right conduct of Joash is mentioned in unqualified terms, in conjunction with his double marriage, it is evident that the latter was not considered matter of censure; for the sacred historian would not have neglected so suitable an opportunity of making the customary exception, if there had really been anything which deserved disapprobation.

Moreover, God himself, in an allegorical fiction, Ezek. xxiii, 4, represents himself as having espoused two wives, Aholah and Aholibah, a mode of speaking which he would by no means have employed, especially at such length, even in a parable, nor indeed have taken on himself such a character at all, if the practice which it implied had been intrinsically dishonorable or shameful.

On what grounds, however, can a practice be considered dishonorable or shameful which is prohibited to no one even under the gospel? for that dispensation annuls none of the merely civil regulations which existed previous to its introduction. It is only enjoined that elders and deacons should be chosen from such as were husbands of one wife, I Tim. iii, 2, and Tit. i, 6. This implies, not that to be the husband of more than one wife would be a sin, for then the restriction would have been equally imposed upon all, but that, in proportion as they were less entangled in domestic affairs, they would be more at leisure for the business of the church. * * *

[It implies they must have at least one.—ED.]

Lastly, I argue as follows from Heb. xiii, 4, polygamy is either marriage, or fornication, or adultery, the Apostle recognizes no fourth state. Reverence, for so many patriarchs who were polygamists will, I trust, deter any one from considering it as fornication or adultery; for "whoremongers and adulterers God will judge;" whereas the patriarchs were the objects of his special favor, as he himself testifies. If then, polygamy be marriage properly so called, it is also lawful and honorable according to the same apostle: "marriage is honorable in all, and the bed undefiled."

It appears to me sufficiently established by the above arguments, that polygamy is allowed by the law of God. Lest, however, any doubt should remain, I will subjoin abundant examples of men whose holiness renders them fit patterns for imitation, and who are among the lights of our faith.

Foremost I place Abraham, the father of all the faithful, and of the holy seed, Gen. xvi, 1, etc.; Jacob, chap. xxx, and, if I mistake not, Moses, Numbers xii, 1, "for he had married (a Cushite, marginal translation, or) an Ethiopian woman." It is not likely that the wife of Moses, who had been so often spoken of before by her proper name of Zipporah, should now be called by the new title of the Cushite; or that the anger of Aaron and Miriam should at this time be suddenly kindled, because Moses forty years before had married Zipporah; nor would they have acted thus scornfully towards one whom the whole house of Israel had gone out to meet on her arrival with her father Jethro. If, then, he married the Cushite during the lifetime of Zipporah, his conduct in this particular received the express approbation of God himself, who moreover punished with severity the unnatural opposition of Aaron and his sister.

Next I place Gideon, that signal example of faith and piety, Judges vii, 30, 31, and Elkanah, a rigid Levite, the father of Samuel; who was so far from believing himself less acceptable to God on account of his double marriage, that he took with him his two wives every year to the sacrifices and annual worship, into the immediate presence of God. Nor was he therefore reproved, but went home with Samuel, a child of excellent promise; I Sam. ii, 10.

Passing over several other examples, though illustrious, such as Caleb, I Chron. ii, 46, 48; vii, 1, 4; the sons of Issacher, in number "six and thirty thousand men, for they had many wives and sons," contrary to the modern European practice, where in many places the land is suffered to remain uncultivated for the want of population; and also Manasseh, the son of Joseph, I Chron. vii, 14; I come to the prophet David, whom God loved beyond all men, and who took two wives, besides Michal; and this not in a time of pride and prosperity, but when he was almost bowed down by adversity, and when, as we learn from many of the Psalms, he was entirely occupied in the study of the work of God and in the regulation of his conduct; I Sam. xxv, 42, 43, and afterwards II Sam. v. 12, 13, "David perceived that Jehovah had established him king over Israel, and that he had exalted his kingdom for his people Israel's sake; and David took him more concubines and wives out of Jerusalem."

Such were the motives, such the honorable and holy thoughts whereby he was influenced; namely, by the consideration of God's kindness towards him for his people's sake. His heavenly and prophetic understanding saw not in that primitive institution what we in our blindness fancy we discern so clearly; nor did he hesitate to proclaim in the supreme council of the nation the pure and honorable motives to which, as he trusted, his children born in polygamy owed their existence. I Chron. xxviii, 5: "Of all my sons, for Jehovah hath given me many sons, he hath chosen," &c.

I say nothing of Solomon, notwithstanding his wisdom, because he seems to have exceeded due bounds; although it is not objected to him that that he had taken many wives, but that he had married strange women; I Kings xi, 1, Nehem. xiii, 26. His son Rehoboam desired many wives, not in the time of his iniquity, but during the three years in which he is said to have walked in the ways of David; II Chron. xi, 17, 21, 23.

Of Joash, mention has already been made; who was induced to take two wives, not by licentious passion, or the wanton desire incident to uncontrolled power, but by the sanction and advice of a most wise and holy man, Jehoiada, the priest.

Who can believe, either that so many men of the highest character should have sinned through ignorance for so many ages; or that that their hearts should be so hardened; or that God should have tolerated such conduct in his people? Let, therefore, the rule received among theologians have the same weight here as in other cases. "The practice of the Saints is the best interpretation of the commandments."

PADDY AND THE OYSTERS.

One evening a red-headed Connaught swell, of no small aristocratic pretensions in his own eyes, sent his servant, whom he had just imported, to purchase a hundred oysters at the city-quay, Dublin. Paddy staid so long away that Squire Trigger got quite impatient and unhappy lest his "body man" might have slipped into the Liffey; however, to his infinite relief, Paddy at length made his appearance, puffing and blowing like a disabled bellows, but carrying his load seemingly in great triumph. "Well, Pat," said the master, "what the deuce kept you so long?" "Long! ah, thin, may be its you'd have me come home with half my arrant?" says Pat. "Half the oysters?" says the master.—"No, but too much of the fish," says Pat.—"What fish," says he.—"The oysters, to be sure," says Pat.—"What do you mean, blockhead?" says he.—"I mean," says Pat, "that there was no use loading myself more nor was useful."—"Will you explain yourself?" says he.—"I will," says Pat, laying down his load. "Well, then, you see, plaise your honour, as I was coming home along the quay, mighty pleasable, who should I meet but Shamus Maginnus; 'Good-morrow, Shameen,' sis I; 'Good-morrow, kindly, Padeen,' sis he; 'What is it you have in the sack?' sis he; 'A hundred of oysters,' says I; 'Let us look at them,' sis he; 'I will, and welcome,' sis I; 'Orrah, thunder and pratees,' sis he, opening the sack, and examinin' them, 'who sowld you them?' 'One Tom Kinahan, that keeps a small shop there below,' sis I; 'Musha, then, bad luck to that same Tom that sowld the likes to you,' sis he: 'Arrah, why avick?' sis I; 'To make a bolsour ov you, and giv them to you without gutting them,' sis he; 'An arn't they gutted, Jim, aroon?' sis I; 'Oh, bad luck to the one o' them,' sis he; 'Musha, then,' sis I, 'what the dhoul will I do at all at all? fur the master will be mad.' 'Do!' sis he, 'why I'd rather do the thing for ye mysel, nor you should lose yer place,' sis he; so wid that he begins to gut them wid his knife, nate and clain; an' afeered ov dirtying the flags, begor, he swallowed the guts himself, from beginnin' to ind, till he had thim as dacent as you see thim here"—dashing down at his master's feet the bag of oyster-shells, to the no small amazement of the Connaught worthy.

THE FAMILY OPPOSED TO NEWSPAPERS.

The man that don't take a newspaper has been in town lately, as we learn from a cotemporary. He brought the whole family in a two-horse wagon. He still believed that General Taylor was President, and wanted to know if the "Kamschatkians" had taken Cuba, and if so, where they had taken it. He had sold his corn for twenty-five cents, the price being thirty-one---but on going to deposit the money, they told him it was mostly counterfeit. The only hard money he had was some three-cent pieces, and those some sharper had "run on him" for half-dimes! His old lady smoked a "cob pipe," and wo'd not believe that anything else could be used. One of the boys went to a blacksmith's shop to be measured for a pair of shoes, and another mistook the market-house for a church. After hanging his hat on a meathook he piously took a seat in a butcher's stall, and listened to an auctioneer whom he took to be the preacher. He left before "meetin' was out," and had no great opinion of the "sarmint."

One of the girls took a lot of seed onions to the post-office to trade for a letter. She had a baby which she carried in a "sugar-trough," stopping at times to rock it on the side-walk. When it cried, she stuffed its mouth with an old stocking, and sung "Barbara Allan." The oldest boy had sold two "coon skins" and was on a "bust." When last seen he had called for a glass of "soda and water," and stood soaking ginger-bread and making wry faces. The shop-keeper, mistaking his meaning, had given him a mixture of sal soda and water, and it tasted strongly of soap. But "he'd hearn tell of soda and water, and was bound to give it a fair trial, puke or no puke." Some "town fellow" came in and called for lemonade with a "fly in it," whereupon our "soaped" friend turned his back and quietly wiped several flies into his drink.

We approached the old gentleman and tried to get him to "subscribe," but he would not listen to it. He was opposed to "infernal improvements," and he thought "larnin' was a wicked invention, and culterwation nothin' but vanity and vexation."—None of his family had ever learned to read but one boy, and he "teached school awhile and then went a studyin' diwinity."

THE CITY OF ST. LOUIS:

Its Advantages and Disadvantages in Reference to both Saints and Sinners.

This city has become much celebrated throughout the world among the Latter-day Saints. It has been generally regarded as a sink-hole of corruption and iniquity, and the first and last advice to those emigrating to this land has been, to beware of the apostate spirit that reigns unbridled in this city, which has not been given without good reasons.

It will be admitted that a front and back side may be shown of any picture, and that there is a light and dark side to every object and subject. We think it possible to paint the devil blacker than he is, and we have thought that even this city may have received to dark a shade. And in as much as we are now residents of St. Louis, and measurably interested in its prosperity and advantages and character, we will briefly state our views on the subject, for the benefit of our readers in the eastern States and in the British Isles, and present, perchance, more interesting features than those generally disclosed to view.

St. Louis is a fine, large, and flourishing city, and has furnished employment to many hundreds and thousands of our brethren, who have here in a short time made a good outfit for the gathering places of the Saints. This city has been an asylum for our people from fifteen to twenty years. There are few public buildings of any consideration in this city that our brethren have not taken an active and prominent part in erecting and ornamenting. There are few factories, foundries, or mercantile establishments, but they have taken, or are taking an active part in establishing or sustaining, either as employers, as artisans, or as customers—there is probably more business done in this city than any other of the same magnitude in the world. It supplies the Utah markets yearly with nearly all the merchandise required; there is probably no city in the world where the Latter-day Saints are more respected, and where they may sooner obtain an outfit for Utah than in this city. The hand of the Lord is in these things; he it is who hath raised up the city, and organized therein a stake of Zion for the benefit and blessing of his people; and he has given favor with the honorable among them, which will be continued to us as long as he will.

There are thousands of men in Great Britain who toil and labor from year to year for six, seven, or at most eight shillings per week; while here the same men may obtain twenty-four, thirty, or thirty-six shillings per week—$9. Mechanics, who in the old country are working themselves old and infirm, for twelve or fifteen shillings per week, could here obtain forty-eight, sixty, and in the summer season seventy shillings per week—$18. This is a considerable advantage to the down-trodden and oppressed of the old world, who land upon our shores and seek a home in this city and nation.

The advantages of which we have spoken are not without their corresponding evils or disadvantages; which, if not carefully avoided, serve to ensnare and destroy the unwary; to rob them of their faith, integrity and virtue—leading them to doubt of mind, darkness of understanding, and complete wretchedness; and finally seals upon them the spirit of apostacy. The only way to avoid these evils is to be generous, just and liberal; as it is written, "the liberal man deviseth liberal things, and by his liberality shall he stand;" whilst those who rap up their talent in a napkin, or hide it in a stocking, or lock it up in a chest, or put it out to usury with the Gentiles, and shut up their bowels of compassion from the poor, are already despised by every true-hearted Saint, and are nigh unto cursing. There are those in this city who, when in the old country, never had so much, probably, as ten dollars to call their own, who, arriving here, have got a few dollars in their pockets, strut about with an air of pride and importance that would do credit to a parish parson or an eastern nabob, and forget that they once were poor and destitute. There are those who call themselves Mormons who had means enough to go to Zion many years ago, and have been counselled to do so time after time, but so anxious are they to accummulate a few dollars that the kingdom of God and all other things have become with them subordinate. It may be aptly said of such, that if a picayune should get into their boot heel, their soul would get down and pick it up, and wait there for the next. Such characters as we have described, if they meet an old friend or brother newly arrived won't know him, for fear he should want a night's lodging or a few dimes to obtain food. If such are not already damned, we think they ought to be, and they will shortly, unless they reform.

There is another class in this city who call themselves Mormons when it suits their purpose, of whom it may be well to speak a little. These are men who lay in wait to ensnare and destroy the innocent and unwary. They will meet you with a smile, shake you by the hand, and if no one is near, will say, I am a Mormon, and will endeavor to lead you to their haunts of iniquity. These are apostates—creatures in human form, but they imitate humanity abominably.

These are they who feel themselves oppressed by the authorities of the church. They would like to obtain a license to do openly what they are doing in secret. You may know them by their croaking. Only listen to their ejaculations, and you will hear them say—tyrants, oppressors, despots—tithing—injustice. When you hear these things, then know you are not far from an apostate's den.

These cases are exceptions, we are happy to say, to the general character of the Saints in this city, as the late emigration by the Clara Wheeler can bear us witness. The willingness, ardor and interest manifested by the Saints of this city to take their cold, careworn, comfortless, and sick brethren to warm and comfortable quarters last week, will not be easily forgotten; greater kindness, we will venture to say, was never shown to a company of immigrants than was shown by our brethren to the last emigration; such is the spirit that prevails in the bosoms of the majority of this people, which, with other noble, generous, and righteous deeds, prove them to be a good people, and worthy of the favor and blessings of the Almighty.

Thousands of good and faithful men and women have come to and gone from this city during the last ten or fifteen years, and many of them are now numbered among the nobles of Zion, who have boldly encountered every difficulty, and magnanimously overcome every danger; and who stand in holy places as God's faithful ones, firm as the pillars of heaven. There are many still in this city of the same stamp, with the same unflinching integrity, who require but the trial of adverse and distressing circumstances to show their real valor and true nobility. These are men who love truth because its true, or because of its own intrinsic merits; who love the gospel because of its righteous principles; who love God because he is good and holy; who love his servants because they are faithful and true, who would rather die than bow to the shrine of Presidents, Potentates, or Kings, at the sacrifice of honor and principle. These are men who boldly contend for the faith of apostles and saints, who are not afraid to look in a man's face and say, I'm a Latter-day Saint; these are men who are honored and blessed of the Lord, and who have gained a good report among his people; these are the men who are respected and esteemed by the inhabitants of this city. Such is the influence such men create, and confidence they inspire, that when a vessel of our emigrants from Europe arrives at this city, there is a perfect rush by respectable citizens to obtain mechanics, laborers and servants, hoping, and apparently expecting, to find all the Mormons of the same grit. As a proof of these facts, we would simply state, that of the 400 who arrived here last week, nearly all have obtained employment, whilst hundreds, and may be thousands, of the old residents are walking about unemployed, in consequence of the ice-bound weather.

We have no hesitation in saying that St. Louis is in many respects a desirable place of residence to the Latter-day Saints who are wending their way to their more distant and more permanent homes in the valleys of the west. And those who come here with the spirit of God in their hearts, with a determination to do right, and keep the commandments of God, and listen to the counsels of his spirit, and avoid the company and counsels of the ungodly, have no more to fear from the apostates of St. Louis than those of England or Utah.

THE PRESBYTERIAN FAMILY SICK.

Our notice of Dr. Rice's lectures on the signs of the times appears to have disturbed considerably the antiquated family of Presbyterians. We don't know whether it has given them the spasms or the gripes; but one thing is certain, it has given them the grumbles. One member of the family—the Cumberland Presbyterian—falsely charges us with claiming the Dr. as a Mormon. Another turbulent relative, the St. Louis Presbyterian, without stopping to inquire whether it was true or not, wildly exclaims, with more rage than reason—blasphemous wretches—Mormons—polygamy! If we were Christians we might retaliate, but as we are Mormons we will simply say to the Presbyterian family as the pious Quaker said to the boys who were cursing and blackguarding, "spit it out, boys, for you will never go to heaven whilst that's in you.

A JUST TRIBUTE TO GOV. YOUNG.

Mr. Roper of this city has forwarded to us, for publication, the following extract of a letter from J. V. Long, (a new resident of Utah,) upon the character of President Young. He says:

* * * "Instead of that meanness which I was told I should meet with, I have been treated in the most kind and liberal manner possible by Pres't Young. He seems to consider my welfare; and I have every reason to believe him one of the most free-hearted and honorable men I ever saw. A more familiar gentleman in conversation I never met. I will not bemean myself by saying he is a first-rate business man, but I will say of Pres't Young that he is decidedly the most dexterous and straight-forward business man in the world. What is most surpising, he seems familiar with the names and countenances of all whom he has once seen; he comprehends their business at once; no need to tell him, and then repeat and reiterate in his hearing your matters of business; his mind is so infinitely expansive that he appears to know your wants, to feel for you in distress, and advise and counsel for your good at all times, even when he is engaged doing business. He is indeed a prophet of the Lord, and could you have been privileged to hear his soul-enlivening sermons which I have had the honor to take down, you would have felt as I now feel, fully rewarded for the troubles and trials of the past. But I must close for the present, by advising you not to drink into the spirit of the St. Louis Saints, or rather that portion of them which I term Mormon infidels, but be firm, and prepare to come here next year, and I will do my best for you."

Deep Snow.—A correspondence of the Missouri Republican, dated Louisiana, Mo., Saturday Morning, January 27, says that snow fell in that place on the 21st inst., to the depth of twelve inches, it being the deepest snow they have had for six years; that the steamer Oakland was frozen in, seven miles above that place. She discharged her crew some three days before. The river was blocked on the night of the 25th inst. Money is rather tight, and trade very dull. The Pork trade is over.

Correspondence of the Luminary.

THE HIGH COUNCIL

To the Emigration by the Clara Wheeler.

Dear Brethren and Sisters—You have left fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, houses and lands, in obedience to the commandments of our heavenly Father. You have heard and understood the voice of the good Shepherd, when he said to you by his servants, "Gather yourselves together, Oh, my people." Through a series of changing circumstances you have at length reached the land of Zion. What have you lost by your change of circumstances? We think if you should correctly balance the profit and loss account, you would find yourselves the gainers instead of the losers in this change of circumstances, particularly if you take into account the amount credited to you for every sacrifice you have made for the Gospel's sake; for Jesus said, he that leaveth fathers, mothers, brothers, and sisters, husbands and wives, houses and lands for my sake and the Gospel's sake, shall receive a hundred fold in this world, and in the world to come, life everlasting.

You are now in one of the stakes of Zion—you have come among us recommended as Saints in good standing; as such we have received you in good faith, believing you to be faithful Saints of the Most High. Whilst in your native land you received instructions suitable to your position and circumstances, you had then a bright Millenial Star to light up your path, to teach you doctrine and principle, to make you wiser and better men and women, and better Latter-day Saints. You have now entered into a higher branch of the Millenial School, and you consequently require a correct knowledge of its rules and regulations, and authorities, that you may be well posted up in every subject pertaining to your blessing and salvation in the kingdom of our God.

We have not a Millenial Star to present you weekly, but we have what is equivalent to the Saints in this country—a Luminary—which, if you will sustain by your subscriptions, will sustain you by its doctrines, precepts and instructions, and you shall not be losers by the change of the Star.

The Luminary is devoted exclusively to the interests of the cause of Zion; and if you are interested in the building up of the kingdom of God, and your heart and treasures are concentrated therein, it is devoted to your interests individually and collectively. We therefore recommend, as one of your first duties in this stake of Zion, to subscribe for the Luminary; you will thereby acquire additional light and intelligence concerning the things of God; you will thereby be enabled to escape the spirit of apostacy and corruption for which this city has been so notorious in times past.

The Luminary contains the history of this stake of Zion; it contains many valuable and important lessons of instruction from President Snow, and from this Council, and from other sources, which your brethren who have been here from the commencement have partly learned; they are, consequently, in many things ahead of you. We therefore address you specially in this communication, to direct your attention to the history of the past contained in our weekly messenger, and to direct your minds to a consideration of some of the prominent duties devolving upon you as members of a stake of Zion.

In England you have had your branch conference and pastoral organizations—you had your branch funds, conference funds, tract funds, poor funds, P. E. funds, consecration funds, &c. Did you feel these things oppressive? No; you felt to sustain every measure, and to comply with every requisition made upon you as a duty; and your duty was a pleasure and delight, because you felt it was necessary for your well-being and salvation, and for the advancement of the kingdom of God. Your change of country has introduced you to a change of circumstances, a change of organization, and a change of discipline. New duties, responsibilities, and obligations will, therefore, henceforth devolve upon you. It is necessary, as soon as circumstances will permit, that you should renew your engagements to serve the Lord, by being rebaptised; you will thus manifest your willingness to be more fully taught of the Lord. We have submitted ourselves to this ordinance, and our spirits have been refreshed by the inspiration of the holy spirit given unto us through our obedience to this and other commandments of God; so we do not say to you simply, go, but we say come, follow us as we follow our brethren in the valleys of Utah, who are before us.

If you are Elders, you must have your names enrolled in the Elder's Quorum, and be henceforth subject to the President and counsellors of your quorum. If circumstances should call you from the city you must report yourselves to your President from time to time, that you may be sustained in your office and calling.

If you are Priests, Teachers, or Deacons, you must be subject likewise to your respective Presidents, from whom you will receive from time to time, in your quorum meetings, such teachings and instructions as your office, calling, and circumstances may require.

Whether you are officers or members, you are all subject to the Bishop and his counsellors—to this quorum we have all of us to give an account of our stewardship. One of the first calls made upon us by the Bishop is to obey the law of tithing—that is, to make a fair estimate of the cash value of all our property, and to pay to the Bishop or his agent one-tenth as soon as circumstances admit; (this is the beginning of the law of the Lord concerning tithing;) and furthermore, to pay one-tenth of all our income from this time forward.

If you ask what is done with this tithing, we answer—it is used exclusively under the directions of President Brigham Young, and is appropriated by him to the purchase of materials for the Temple, for public buildings, for machinery, &c. And in as much as these things are necessary for the blessing, exaltation and salvation of the Saints, if we would be partakers thereof we must sustain, with all our might, every measure devised for so great a consummation.

In conclusion, we exhort you as fathers in Israel, to abstain from intoxicating drinks, which drown many in perdition, bring thousands to an untimely grave, and sink their souls in hell. If you would, therefore, make your calling and election sure, keep faithfully the commandments of God, and the words of wisdom given you from time to time by the spirit of God, and by his servants; and if you will do these things you shall never be confounded or overcome, worlds without end.

MILO ANDRUS, President.

J. S. Cantwell, Clerk.

Reflections on the Past, Present, and Future.

Westmimster, Vt., Jan. 1855.

In the first place, I may safely adopt the language of one of old, that my cogitations have for some time troubled me. While engaged at my mechanical labor, my mind has been led to reflect much upon the history of governments, commencing with the reign of Nebuchadnezar, to whom the Lord revealed many things touching the future destiny of men down to the last days, or the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth, to the overthrow of all other governments. The prophet Daniel and many others have recorded many things of great importance relating to this subject. I wish to call the attention of your readers to some of their sayings, as recorded in the second and seventh chapters of the book of Daniel.

It is admitted by all commentators that Nebuchadnezar lived on the earth, and that he swayed universal dominion over the kingdoms of the world; also, that he was succeeded by other great monarchs, tracing them down until we come to those represented by the feet and toes of the great image which was shown to Nebuchadnezar, to which the prophet Daniel gave an interpretation with the assurance that the dream was certain, and the interpretation sure. I wish now to call your attention to another view of the same things, as shown in the seventh chapter of Daniel. Here we have ten horns representing the same things as the toes of the image. By deep reflection upon these things we are led to the conclusion that this period of time will be an important one in the history of the world. It is admitted that these horns or the toes allude to certain governments which should exist upon the earth. One most glorious and important event that is to take place in the days of these governments is the establishment of the government of God. Daniel says that in the days of these kingdoms (referring to the toes of the image) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall stand forever and never be destroyed. This great and universal kingdom will of course be of a heavenly nature, judging from the fact that the God of heaven is to be the organizer, giver of laws, &c. It will be nothing surprising if it shall be something different from the governments of the world which are of human origin. From a view of the world at large, we must come to the conclusion, that such a kingdom would have to meet with much opposition, and have many obstacles to overcome, but notwithstanding all this it is destined to flourish, being propelled by the Almighty. It is admitted by all commentators that the ten horns, or toes of the image, are to be found in the European governments, which are a subdivision of the Roman Empire. To this we assent; but we wish to trace the subject still further. We find in the seventh chapter of Daniel that another horn shall arise from the ten horns, and shall destroy three of the ten horns. This little horn is to be great and distinct from the other horns. It is to make war with the Saints and prevail against them for a certain time, namely, until the ancient of days or Adam shall sit, then at that period of time the scales are to be turned, and this horn is to let loose its power. The inquiring mind is at a loss to know where to find this little horn; some have contended that it alludes to the Pope, but this idea will be seen to be an absurdity by a little reflection on the subject. First we have the ten horns, and from them another horn arises, so you see this horn does not exist until the existence of the ten horns. It is well known that the Popes have existed for many generations.

We will now continue our researches for the distinct horn. In passing over Europe, Asia, the islands of the sea, we cannot hit upon any one that to us appears applicable in the least; but we will return home to our own American government. It is an undisputed fact that our governmet sprung from the European governments; such being the case it ought reasonably apply to the little horn From a careful examination of the second and seventh chapters of Daniel, we see that the ten horns and the little horn are to exist at the same time, from the fact that the little horn is to destroy three of the ten, which of the ten I am not prepared to say, but believe the time is at hand when it will be manifest to all people.

I wish now to return to the kingdom of God which is to be set up in the days of the ten kingdoms, and also in the days of the little horn, which is to make war upon it until the ancient of days or Adam shall come. Why, says the inquirer, can it be possible this nation can be the little horn? We do not say it is; but we wish to call your attention to the history of this government for the last twenty years. It is a well known fact that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has been organized under this government by the commands and revelations of Jesus Christ, as given through the prophet Joseph Smith. I am aware that a great many people look upon this as an imposture. While on the other hand there are thousands and tens of thousands who have investigated and embraced these doctrines, that will boldly testify before God, angels, and men, that they know most assuredly that God has organized his government upon the earth, as spoken of by the prophet Daniel. Which of the two parties is the most likely to be deceived, the one which has embraced it, or the one which denounces it without investigation? Every one must admit the latter. It is well known that the people of this government have made war with the Saints, and thus far have measurably prevailed against them; but notwithstanding all this the kingdom of God is still rolling on as Daniel said it would, until it fills the whole earth, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

What must the feelings of the opposers of Latter-day Saints be when they find they are opposing the great work of the Almighty. Justice will surround them with the pains of hell, and awful must be their condition. My advice to such is, to pause well before you make another attempt. You may be contracting a debt which would take you a serious length of time to cancel. If the Latter-day Saints are deceived, they are the sufferers.

I must now come to a close, by giving you my testimony from something like fifteen years experience in the matter. I was personally acquainted with Joseph Smith and many others of the authorities of this church, and from my personal acquaintance and my own experience, I boldly testify to all men, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and that this Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is founded upon ancient and modern revelations. The gospel preached by them is productive of the same effects as the gospel was in the days of the apostles, for I have been an eye-witness, time and again, of the power of God accompanying the ordinances, in signs and wonders. To God be all the praise for what I have seen and experienced. I feel to say to every Saint of God, be be frithful; endure as good soldiers, and the reward will be sure to those who to the end endure. EL. JAMES BURGESS.

We do not endorse that portion of the above communication relative to horns, &c., but we publish it that our readers may consider and reflect upon the subject of prophecy, and be led carefully to compare the prophecies of the past with the history of the present, and thus be enabled to discern their proper bearing to each other.—[Ed.

BAPTISMS—MOBBING IN LEXINGTON.

Richmond, Mo., Jan. 24, 1855.

Editor Luminary:—Since writing to you last from Jefferson, I have passed through many scenes, some pleasant and some unpleasant. The first place that I halted was at Boonville, where I stayed for two or three days. There seemed to be quite an anxiety to hear me lecture in Boonville, upon my arrival there; but when those that seemed to be the most anxious in the matter found that my lecturing depended upon their procuring a room for me, they cooled off and said no more. From Boonville I traveled in the stage to Lexington. Upon my arrival at that place, I stopped with some brethren by the names of Casper and Neal. After spending two days there, I baptised four persons on the 17th, and four on the 18th. On the night of the 18th a mob assembled around the house of Br. John Neal, consisting of ten or a dozen persons, and demanded that I should come out to them. This I, of course, did not do, as I did not have faith to believe that the Lord would protect me if I wantonly throwed myself into their hands. When they found that I would not come out to them fear took possession of their hearts, (they said the next day that they would have dragged me out, but they feared that I was armed;) and they gave me notice, in the name of the mayor, to leave before the 19th, or they would kill me. This was rather short notice as I took it, and as my business was not wound up, I did not go, but stayed quietly there until the 23d. They hunted me every night after the 19th, and I was so close on to them one night that I could hear their conversation, which was enough to disgust their master whom they serve, if Lord Byron can be taken as authority. The Lord preserved me, and thwarted them in their purposes; and they have the pleasing reflection that they brought disgrace on Lexington and done me no harm whatever. There are many persons in Lexington who are Saints at heart, but dare not express themselves to that effect. The mob in Lexington, according to the best information that I can gather, were urged on by some of the pious Christians. They were assisted by one Joseph McDowell, who spent the winter of '50 in Salt Lake and Provo cities. He says that he was baptised there, and married a wife in Provo, which he left. He has a wife and two or three children in Lexington. Among those that I baptised, there was his mother; and there are many others there who were seeking the truth; but there was no chance for public preaching. Many wished to investigate Mormonism, but when I commenced to teach them, I found that they were married men, and wished to hear of plurality, to see if it would not cover up their whoredoms and abominations.

I had a conversation with a man at the City Hotel, in Lexington, calling himself Baldwin, who proposed to make 100 men immensely rich in three months, if they would join him next spring at Leavenworth city; but one condition was that they should be opposed to slavery in toto. Every word he spoke called to my mind the two words—"Gadianton Robbers." His left arm is off just below the elbow.

The Kansas and Nebraska question runs high in this part of the country, and a move is on foot, which is a recent combination, headed by H. L. Route, of Liberty, to ride down all but southern settlers. This looks like freedom; but you could not expect but little better from mobocrats, who seek for blood to satisfy their greedy appetites. I remain, A. L. S.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE AFRICA

Halifax, January 30.—The Africa has arrived with one week later dates. She left Liverpool on the 20th. The America had arrived out.

Nothing decisive before Sebastopol. Affairs are unchanged. Negotiations are still in progress, but nothing certain is known in relation to them.

The chief interest centres in the proceedings of the Congress at Vienna. The hopes for peace and fears of war are equally balanced.

The French and English Ministers at Vienna received the necessary powers to reopen negotiations.

Gortschakoff is understood to have received written instructions from his government, which it is rumored, is anxious for peace.

The statements about Austria are conflicting, but they generally lean towards the allies.

Prussia complains of Austria's action. Efforts are being made to obtain an armistice, especially by the Prussian cabinet.

An approaching congress of nations is more talked of. The Daily News looks for good results from the congress, if the United States takes part in it.

Richard Cobden addressed his constituents at Leeds, stigmatizing the attack on Sebastopol as a colossal mistake, and questions how they will get out of it. Other speakers favored the war, and malicious rumors were spread of delay in bringing the war to a close.

Sir DeLacy Evans is offered an appointment in India, to frustrate his contemplated disclosures to Parliament.

Four hundred London dock laborers have been sent to the Crimea to unload ships.

The fate of the British ship Bernice, missing since 1852, from Shanghai, has come to light; the Europeans on board were murdered by the Lascar crew, the ship burned, and the assassins were captured and executed in France.

Baring Brothers announce they will repay English depositors to the French loan, the whole amount taken by France.

SPAIN.

The new constitution was submitted to the Chambers. The main features are, the sovereignty emanates from the nation; the religion of the nation to be Roman Catholic, but toleration allowed; the press free; confiscation of property, and penalty of death for political offences, abolished; the National Guard to be established; the Legislature to consist of two Chambers; the Senate elected for life, with property qualification, and one representative for every 5000 citizens; the Cortes to meet annually, and regulate the strength of the army; to give assent to royal marriages, and appoint a regency when occasion requires.

The Swiss conference is about to be opened to adjust the existing difficulties between Austria, Switzerland and Denmark.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Washington, January 30.—Mr. Jones of Tennessee, presented a resolution inquiring of the Committee of Post Offices and Post Roads, how much the Collins steamers had received up to the present from freight and passengers. Agreed to.

Mr. Johnson offered a resolution inquiring of the President why the funds appropriated for the United States Court of the Western District of Arkansas, had not promptly been sent to the United States Marshal of the District. He remarked that he was tired of running after the departments and should do so no more. For want of prompt transmission of the money jurors and witnesses in Arkansas have been obliged to sell their certificates at a great discount. Officers, through whose negligence this occurs, should be promptly dismissed.

Mr. Gwin said he was glad the subject had been introduced, as California was worse in this respect named than Arkansas, and wished the resolution had been broader.

Mr. Wright, of Mississippi, offered a resolution, which was adopted, requiring the President to communicate to the House, if not incompatible with the public interest, the correspondence between the diplomatic agents of the United States and Spain, touching the causes of the disturbance of friendly relations between this and that country—the instructions of the State Department relative to the same, and a call for the correspondence between this Government and France and Great Britain respecting Cuba not heretofore communicated to Congress.

The House went into committee on Territorial business.

The bill authorizing the construction of a subterranean telegraph line to the Pacific, granting right of way and two millions acres of land, was taken up.

Mr. Farley advocated the bill, and Benton, Lane and others opposed it. In the course of the discussion an angry collision occurred between Farley and Lane, and the lie having passed, personal violence was with difficulty prevented.

After some further debate, without a vote, the House adjourned.

January 31.—Senate.—A communication was received from the Secretary of War, containing an abstract of the militia returns of States and Territories. Laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Clayton asked the House bill of French Spoliation be read a second time, in order that he might call for its final passage to-morrow.

Mr. Dawson—I hope the Senator from Delaware will not thus interfere with the order of business for the morning hour.

Mr. Clayton—Then you are opposed to the bill.

Mr. Dawson—It is not so, I voted for the bill, but the Senator from Delaware shows too much haste in pressing the matter at this time.

Mr. Clayton—You have already taken up more time than would have been required for the reading of the bill, and had better back cool off, and let it be read the second time.

The House went into committee on Territorial business.

The bill for the construction of a telegraph line to the Pacific was again taken up. Mr. Richardson moved to strike out the grant of 2,000,000 acres, and said it was with the concurrence of the friends of the bill. A sharp discussion ensued between Richardson and Benton, and the bill was finally laid over.

Several bills were then considered and reported to the House.

New York, January 31.—Hon. Chas. F. Adams delivered the weekly lecture before the New York Anti-Slavery Society, in the Tabernacle, last night. He was received with considerable applause.

Strict searching on board the suspected steamer Massachusetts has thus far failed to reveal any hidden arms or amunition. Capt. Goodrich extends every facility to the officers and threatens action against the company for damages at the rate of $300 per day, for every day's delay.

A topsail schooner lying at one of our wharves, attracted the attention of the authorities, under the suspicion that she was a slaver. Orders were issued to have her examined, but the parties on board the schooner got wind of the intention, and the schooner disappeared from the wharf without any clearance.

Baltimore, January 31.—New Orleans papers of Thursday are received, they contain details of Mexican news to the 22d, and give flaming accounts of the victories of the Government troops over the insurgents. The National Mexican schooner Rosario, has been wrecked on Alvarado bar. Two female passengers were lost.

Boston, January 31.—General Wilson, Know-Nothing, elected U. S. Senator this morning by a majority of one only in the Senate.

Imprisonments.—Dissenters Law.—Baptisms.—Fined or Imprisoned for Preaching and Baptising—More Favorable Prospects.

Christiana, Norway, Zuny 30, 1854.

I arrived safely in company with Br. Hougen at the town of Osterrusoer, the 10th of May, 1853, and found there a small branch of the church, and was refreshed in finding the same spirit among them that prevails among the Saints in the mountains, but I found not the liberty which I had anticipated when I left home. The brethren who had been laboring here were put in prison for preaching and baptising people for the remission of sins.

When I arrived here I found six brethren in prison, and three had a short time before been liberated from the prison on conditions that they should cease their labors until the decision returned from the State court, and then the other six were liberated on the same conditions.

There is a law in this country called the "Dissenter law," that grants liberty to all religious parties except Jews and Jesuits, on conditions that they shall be acknowledged as a Christian society, and their priests authorized to preach, etc., by the civil authorities.

When the brethren arrived here from Denmark to open the gospel door to this nation, they petitioned the civil authorities to be acknowledged as Christians, but their petition was sent by the civil authorities to the clerical ones, who delayed answering the request so long that the brethren commenced their mission. The clergy were divided in their views, whether we should be acknowledged or not.

The civil authorities, therefore, in consequence of a section in the dissenter law, cast the brethren into prison until the case was decided by the courts, of which the lower court was against us, and fined the brethren eight dollars each. The superior tribunal confirmed the decision of the first, but acknowledged us as a Christian party in the future, but the "amtmand;' (the superior officer of jurisdiction) appealed the sentence to the Supreme Court, whose decision was as follows:

"That we were not acknowledged as a Christian church, and fined the brethren ten dollars each." This was decided on Nov. 7th, 1855.

During the discussion of the question, the church was increased to about 180 members, and since that time we have labored with much difficulty in promulgating the gospel, since the brethren are liable to be cast into prison, and fined or be punished in prison on bread and water. Besides the brethren above mentioned, there are thirteen brethren fined, some for preaching and some for baptising, from ten to twenty dollars each, and those who cannot pay the fine are imprisoned on bread and water from four to eight days.

Under these circumstances we have, according to the law of God, petitioned the judges and rulers, and at last the law-giving assembly of the nation, but hitherto all in vain. From this you can judge that we have to labor with all care, as well as faith and boldness, in order to spread this work; and the brethren who go forth in this mission must prepare themselves both for prisons and persecutions of every kind.

But thanks be to God, in spite of all the obstacles our enemies try to raise, and all their lies and publications against us, his work is still moving forward. At present we number about two hundred members, thirty-six having emigrated. The prospect is better now than it has been; the authorities are more mild to us in most places where there are branches of the church, because those that have testified against us have borne the very best testimony, that "the Mormons are a good and virtuous people," which has so good an influence that many who before were against us begin to seek our meetings, and show us more respect. I also think the priests have blown their biggest blast against us; many of them have visited our meetings, and all they can do is to advise their hearers to hold to their former doctrines, especially what they have learnt from their childhood; but when we request them to prove their doctrine from the Bible, they have never attempted in the least to show grounds for the doctrines they have taught the people for centuries, and when challenged to public discussion their excuse is, that they have not come for discussing the matter, and always leave without proving the least against our doctrine. I believe that they all have gone in at the big end of the horn, and must necessarily come out at the little end thereof.

The brethren who are laboring in the vineyard are good and faithful; they fear God and not men, and the Saints in general are glad, and rejoicing in what they have received, so that the prospect is fair and full of promise for a great and good harvest in due time. When we look at the unfavorable circumstances already mentioned, we can plainly see that the Lord has blessed our labors in opening the way for the gospel in the different places, so that we have even raised a branch of the church in Christiana, the capital of the land. This branch numbers thirty persons at present, and is increasing daily.

A word of kindness is seldom spoken in vain.—It is seed which, even when dropped by chance, springs up a flower.

NEW MEXICO AND THE PLAINS.

The telegraph has already given us the principal facts in the news brought by the Santa Fe mail. From the Independence Dispatch, of the 26th ult., we give the following particulars:

Florence W. Dever, the polite and energetic conductor of the Santa Fe mail, we gather the following items of news:

The country between San Jose and Santa Fe is infested with robbers, supposed to be Mexicans and Americans, who are disguised as Indians. The number is not known, but variously estimated at between twenty and fifty. Major Fry, the paymaster, narrowly escaped them, while returning from Fort Union, to which he had been for the purpose of paying off the soldiers. He discovered the robbers about night-fall observing his movements, and eluding them by pretending to stop for the night, where he remained until the night was dark enough to hide his escape into Santa Fe.

A number of murders and robberies have been perpetrated recently, following each other in quick succession. Dick Peno, a noted and successful gambler, was murdered at Rock Spring, seven miles from the old Pecus Church. It was supposed that he had with him about seven thousand dollars, all of which was taken by the robbers.

A Mexican was found dead on the public plaza a few days before the mail party left. His body was penetrated with five balls. No clue has been found as to the perpetrator. Such occurrences seem not to create much surprise, but are passed as matters of but little consequence.

Mr. Dever speaks of a fine lake of water near the jornado, about one mile off the road, and expresses great surprise that traders had not discovered this before this time. It is about twenty-one miles from the Arkansas river, and will afford water, the dryest season, in abundance. A great number of wild horses were seen about the lake, and at one time were prevented from running upon the mail party by the firing of a gun at them by one of the passengers.

The traders at Council Grove informed Mr. D. that a fight had occurred near the Grove between the Kaw and Camanche Indians, in which about two hundred of the latter were killed. The attack was made by the Kaws, who had lost a few men at the hands of the Camanches last fall. The Pawnee Indians had stolen thirty-five head of horses belonging to the Kaws, which was likely to beget another Indian war.

Buffalo were abundant between Pawnee Fork and Walnut Creek. The snow storm which fell Saturday night was encountered near Black Jack. The wind blew very hard and the weather was extremely cold, so much so that one mule was frozen to death before the train could reach Bull Creek, a distance of eight miles. The wind had banked the snow in such a manner that travel was extremely difficult from Bull Creek to this place, and, to use Mr. Dever's expression, "after it had snowed down one day it snowed up the next."

Mr. D. reports the weather as very cold and stormy in the mountains

FROM SANTA FE.

The Gazette of December 16, contains the following items in regard to depredations recently committed by the Indians:

The depredations have again become of almost daily occurrence, and on every side our citizens are suffering from the same cause.

The Indians, we suppose, have fairly opened the winter trade in sheep and cattle, and we may expect them to levy frequent contributions upon our farmers; their experience has made them good judges of stock, and they never fail to appropriate the best herd in the country. It is very provoking, to say the least, for our farmers and grazers to be raising cattle and sheep, with the conviction that they are providing supplies for the infernal redskins, because this is what stock raising amounts to under the present circumstances.

We look upon the loss of the sheep of Messrs. Beck and Giddings, as a real loss to the country; at a considerable expense they had purchased sheep of a fine breed in the States, and driven them across the plains to New Mexico, in order to improve the quality of the native sheep; but they had hardly got their ranch in operation when every hoof is swept off by the Indians. This is discouraging in the extreme. They had located themselves upon the Eastern frontier of the Territory, and if success had attended them, their ranch, in a short time, would have been the nucleus for a flourishing frontier settlement.

In the present state of things it is impossible for our citizens to receive protection from the savages, and there is no encouragement for enterprise in opening new settlements.

The military force stationed here do all that officers and men can do to check the incursions of the savages, but by reason of the smallness of their number, and the large scope of country they have to guard, they are powerless to do good.

We hope the government will not turn a deaf ear to us any longer, but give us that protection our necessities require. Let us be properly protected, or given up altogether to the tender mercies of the savages. When will our appeals be listened to?

The following are the cases referred to in the foregoing editorial, which we extract from same paper:

Indian Depredations—Loss of the Herd of Messrs. Beck & Giddings.—We are again under the necessity of recounting to our readers more Indian depredations committed upon our citizens. On the evening of the 5th inst. a party of Indians, supposed to be Mescalero Apaches, attacked the grazing camp of Messrs. Beck & Giddings, on the Rio Pecos, near Antohchico, and run off their whole herd, numbering some twenty-five hundred head, mostly sheep. They were in the charge of four pastors, one of whom was killed, and whose dead body was found, but no traces of the other three could be discovered, The trail was followed some ten or fifteen miles in the direction of the White Mountains, but the Indians could not be overtaken. This loss falls heavily upon Messrs. Beck & Giddings, being the third time that their flocks and herds have been attacked since they established their ranch on the Pecos, now about eighteen months. The flock of sheep this time was valuable, many of the number being American sheep which they had driven across the plains from the United States, blooded ewes and bucks introduced into this country to improve the breed of the native sheep. We expect the proper steps will be taken by the military to recover the animals stolen, and punish the Indians.

Further Depredations near Fort Union.—We learn, by a military express, that came in from Fort Union, that on the 9th inst., five hundred head of oxen were run off from near that post by the Indians. The cattle belonged to Messrs. Majors and Russell, which came out with one of the last trains under Major Cooper, and were being herded for the winter in the neighborhood of the Fort. The next morning, Lieut. Williams, with a company of fifty-seven dragoons, started in pursuit of the Indians, and it is to be hoped that he may be able to recover the cattle and punish the thieves.

Arrival from California.—Messrs. Dan Patterson and L. B. Dillon, arrived in this place, last Wednesday, having left San Francisco on the 16th ult. From them, we learn that stock traders, who crossed the plains last season, for the most part, met with serious losses while on the journey, especially in crossing the Alkali district. After having hitched up for a day's drive, it was no unusual thing for five or six oxen to drop dead in the yoke before starting. The disease could not be accounted for, as it most generally attacked cattle in the best order, and proved fatal in every instance. Time and money was uselessly spent in endeavoring to ascertain the nature of the disease; and several deaths resulted from examining deceased cattle.

Mr. Patterson led the van, in crossing the plains and suffered less than many others, but still his loss was severe.

Cattle were in very thin order, 700 lbs. being large average weight.

Beef cattle were worth from twelve to thirteen cents per lb. on foot, and but a slight demand. There had been no rain up to the time of their departure, and but little prospect; the miners were impatient for the commencement of the rainy season. Times were very dull, miners' wages were from $3 to $4 per day. Those who worked upon bars, where a sufficiency of water could be had, kept up their operations during the night, also, giving laborers $5 per night.

Of those who were from this place and vicinity, we learn that Messrs. Herefords were at Live Oak City, disposing of their cattle preparatory to their departure for the States. Monroe McClanahan, Dr. Richard Johnson, Dr. Joseph R. Henry and George Kritter, were at same place. John F. McCanly had been suffering from diseased eyes, for several months. His cattle were being sold. Sims, also from this place, was selling his cattle at French Camp. Joseph H. Reynolds, John Wear, Edward Perking, D. T. Day, and others were at Los Angelos. John S. Webb mining at Musquito Canon.

Mr. Alfred French, who published a paper in this city some years ago, was murdered in the mountains near Shasta City, by Indians a few months since.

CHOLERA IN GREECE.

The following is an extract of a letter from Rev. Jonas King, D. D., dated Athens, November 25:

"The hand of the destroying angel is stretched out over this city, and the people fall. About forty a day, for several days past, have been hurried into eternity; and yet you see but very few mourners in the streets. The shops are nearly all shut, and a mourful silence everywhere prevails. The dead are hurried away to their graves as fast as possible, soon after the breath leaves their nostrils; and lime is thrown on them to hasten the work of decomposition.

"The number of deaths here in proportion to the present population, is as great as twelve or fifteen hundred a day would be in New York. Night before last, two women were watching my little daughter, Aspasia, and when I retired to rest, they were to all appearance in usual health. Aboui half-past three o'clock in the morning a cry was made, and from the complaints I heard, I understood that cholera had seized one of them as its victim. Physicians were called, and efforts were made to rescue her, but at eleven o'clock A. M., she was a corpse, and in two or three hours afterwards, on her way to the place of the dead, without a priest, and without any ceremony.

AN UNFORTUNATE WIDOW.

Sol Smith, the celebrated South-western theatrical manager, in his recently published "Theatrical Journeywork," relates the following odd occurrence during his peregrinations in Georgia:

Between Caleba Swamp and Lime Creek, in the "Nation," we saw a considerable crowd gathered near a drinking house, most of them seated and smoking. We stopped to see what was the matter. It was Sunday, and there had been a quarter race for a gallon of whisky. The first thing I noticed on alighting, was the singular position of one of the horses of the party. He was kneeling down and standing on his hinder feet, his head wedged in between the ends of two logs of the grocery, and he was stone dead, having evidently run directly against the building at full speed, causing the house partly to fall. About five paces from the horse lay the rider, quite senseless, with a gash in his throat which might have let out a thousand lives. As I said, most of the crowd were seated and smoking.

"What is all this?" I enquired. "What is the matter here?"

"Matter!" after a while answered one in a drawling voice, giving a good spit, and refilling his mouth with a new cud. "Matter enough; there's been a quarter race."

"But how came this man and horse killed?" I asked.

"Well," answered the chewing and spitting gentleman, "the man was considerably in liquor, I reckon, and he run his hoss chuck agin the house, and that's the whole on it."

"Has a doctor been sent for?" inquired one of our party.

"I reckon there aint much use of doctors here," replied another gentleman in the crowd. "Burnt brandy couldn't save either of 'em, man or hoss."

"Has this man a wife and children?" inquired I.

"No children that I know on," answered a female, who was sitting upon the ground, a short distance from the dead man, smoking composedly.

"He has a wife, then?" I remarked. "What will be her feelings when she learns the fatal termination of this unfortunate race?"

"Yes," sighed the female; "it was an unfortunate race. Poor man, he lost the whisky."

"Do you happen to know his wife?—has she been informed of the untimely death of her husband?" were my next inquiries.

"Do I know her? Has she been informed of his death?" said the woman. "Well, I reckon you aint acquainted about these parts. I am the unfortunate widder."

You, madam! You the wife of this man who has been so untimely cut off?" I exclaimed, in astonishment.

"Yes, and what about it?" said she. "Untimely cut off. His throat's cut, that's all, by that tarnal sharp end of a log; and as for its being untimely, I don't know but it's as well now as any time—he warn't of much account, no how?"

She resumed her smoking, and we resumed our journey.

MOVEMENTS ON THE RIVER.

The river and levee presented a more stirring scene yesterday than for some days previous. The weather had moderated considerably, and the ice above began to loosen in large masses and float down, making it probable that the whole mass of ice might break away at once and come down with irresistable force against the boats. Actuated by this fear, and wishing to be prepared for the worst, several of the boats at the upper end of the landing got up steam and put out for more secure quarters near the lower dyke. The Brunette made this move on Wednesday evening, and was placed out of danger. The Winchester was busy yesterday in moving boats which would be in danger in case of the anticipated flood of ice, to the safer harbor below. The old St. Louis and Mayflower were thus towed down, as well as the Alton Packet Wharfboat, and then the Winchester put into a place reserved for herself, to await the breaking up of the ice.

The ferryboats widened their path by playing into the ice on the opposite shore, and succeeded in almost clearing the river at this point, so that when the gorge above breaks away it will have a clear sweep past the city. We learn that it did loosen yesterday morning, and moved a considerable distance down in a mass, and again lodged—by this move crushing one or two canal boats.

The boatmen are preparing, as fast as circumstances will permit, for the danger that threatens, and will doubtless have their property in readiness as far as possible.—[Republican.

A WISE MAN'S ADVICE.

If there be those among us, misled by a mistaken sympathy, or by sudden excitement on any subject, are forgetting their obligations to the whole country, to the Constitution and the Union, let us use every effort of persuasion and example to awaken them to a sense of their dangerous error. If these, who, for the sake of private interest, personal ambition, or momentary political success, are willing to experiment upon the public passions, to treat lightly the constitutional obligations, to foment sectional jealousies and raise up geographical distinctions within the Union. let the absence of our countenance convince such, that the personal gratification of public service of any living man are not objects of sufficient magnitude to be gained at the expense of the harmony of the country, the peace of the Union, or a single letter in the list of our constitutional duties. If any there be among us, which heaven forbid, who are prepared for any earthly object to dismember our confederacy and destroy our constitution which binds us together, let the fate of Arnold be theirs, and let the detestation and scorn of every American be their constant companions, until, like him, they shall abandon a country whose rich blessings they are no longer worthy to enjoy.—[Silas Wright.

MAKING A DEVIL.

The Boston Post tells the following: "Rev. Mr. Foster, of Salem, Mass., was a facetious man, and usually ready at joke and repartee. He had a parishioner, a carpenter by trade, pretty well stocked with ready wit, and, withal, somewhat given to boasting. One day, while at work for his minister, hewing a stick of timber, the carpenter was boasting in his usual style of marvels he could perform. The pastor, to put an extinguisher upon him, said, 'Governor, (his nick-name,) do you think you could make a devil?' 'Make a devil!' (his broad-axe moving a little more rapidly,) 'here, put up your foot—you want the least alteration of any man I ever saw!' It was rare that the minister came off second best in such encounters, but he did this time."

GEN. SCOTT ON THE CRIMEAN WAR.

A correspondent of the Charleston Mercury, writing under date of Washington, January 8, 1855, writes as follows:

"I recently had the pleasure of hearing the criticism of Gen. Scott on the war in the Crimea. I look upon Scott as one of the great captains of the age, and I listened with great interest to his ideas. He says the Allies committed a great blunder in delaying the attack upon Sebastopol as long as they did; that immediately after the raising of the siege of Silistria, they should have attacked Sebastopol, at which time there was a comparatively small force in the Crimea; that the Allies cannot take Sebastopol unless they receive reinforcements, giving them a superiority of force to the extent of from thirty to fifty per cent.; that the Russian regular soldiers are the best troops in the world for defence; they never fly, but perish, unless ordered to retreat. He thinks that the Allies labor under a great disadvantage in having two commanding generals; that the road to victory is through unity of design. The inference I would draw from Gen. Scott's ideas is, that Sebastopol will not be taken; for I doubt whether the Allies can throw such a preponderance of force there as is necessary. The General further said that the Allies could not reembark now without immense loss of men, and all the materials of war in camp, except the weapons in their hands."

MRS. SWISSHELM ON POLYGAMY.

A new question is likely to arise in politics.—"Shall the Mormons, with their polygamy, be admitted into the Union?" We wish to commit ourselves in advance, and say yes, certainly, to be sure, why not? We have thirteen states now, in which polygamy is practised and provided for by law. We have an administration whose chief business it is to defend, spread, and perpetuate the institution. Now, we like variety; and as these thirteen States have all one kind of polygamy, and the Mormons another, we want the Salt Lake folks to make up a collection. We have long been in national communion with a set of men who keep concubines, and sell their children. We should like a specimen of those who educate and support all their offspring.

To our minds a plurality of wives is decent and proper, compared to purchasing mistresses like sheep, as do our brethren of the South, or yet to licensing brothels and gaming and drinking houses, as do the "fathers" of our eastern cities.

While men are sole legislators they will always provide for their own vices; and we think the Mormons have taken by far the most decent course.—The present members of this confederacy have not been and are not so very circumspect in their own morals that they need be very prudish about their company.—[American Saturday Visitor.

PAY YOUR BILLS—AN INCENTIVE.

Some years ago, a farmer in Frederick county, Md., owed a neighbor of his $50, and as soon as he could realize the sum he promptly paid it over. The morning he called to pay it, his friend appeared to be very thankful, remarking that he was also in debt to another person who needed the money, and he would at once take it to him. This remark started a train of thought in the mind of the first person, who said to himself—why, here is $100 paid with $50. I will at once follow up this matter and see where it will end. He then followed up the payments of debts by this one note of $50, until he traced it to the large amount of $3,000! when it got out of his reach.

Now, here is the moral: A owes B a bill, which, if he pays promptly, will be paid by B to C, and so on through the whole alphabet, and, it will be surprising to every one, what a small amount is necessary to pay off hundreds of thousands by keeping the "eagles on the wing." Now, when the money market is so tight, and the banks are unable to discount all the paper offered, let persons begin to pay their bills, and, by doing this, they themselves, will be paid back in turn. It is a machine which feeds itself, and propels, by its own offal, the execution of great exploits. As a word to the wise is sufficient, we think it only necessary to give this hint to our business men, who will be able, at once, to see the vast amount of good the payment of even a small bill will accomplish in the community.

The Sad Result of Ignorance.—The Detroit Advertiser relates an instance of an ox being killed and a sled broken to pieces by a railroad car, and all because the ox could not understand French. The facts of the case were these. The team, consisting of one English and one French ox, drawing a heavy load of wood and driven by a French driver, was crossing the track when the express train of cars made its appearance. The driver, in great excitement, immediately ordered his oxen to chuck (the French for "haw.") The French ox understood him, and turning off the track, saved himself from injury; but the English ox, having never studied the languages, pressed further on, and was instantly killed. This case should be a warning to farmers to have oxen properly educated.

Mobbing a Know-Nothing Lodge.—The Eastern (Pa.) Argus, Democratic, publishes an exciting account of a mob, which collected at Mooresburg, in that county, and broke up a meeting of a Know-Nothing Lodge. The members of the secret organization assembled quietly in an upper story of a public house, and while transacting their business, the mob of opposing politicians gathered around the exterior of the house, armed with a fifty-six pound cannon, which they fired off until it broke all the window glass in the house. Every man in the mob, not engaged in loading and firing the cannon, was armed with some noisy musical instrument, such as a horn, bugle, trumpet, bass drum, with which they all kept up such a deafening noise that the lodge was obliged to disperse.

One of the Dignitaries.—It is related—we do not affirm the truth of the story—of one of the country members of the Great and General Court, that, arriving in that city by one of the late trains on the day of the opening of the session, he rushed immediately to the State House, and, after some trouble in finding the Representatives' Hall, hurried to the Speaker's desk, and saluted that august presence as follows: "Mr. Speaker, good morning; how d'ye do? Rather late, missed the cars. I wish you would show me to my room right off!" That Representative has got a good deal to learn before spring.—[Boston Journal.

BONNETS—A THEORY.

Our noble young foreign friend, Count Oysters, has been directing his aristocratic eye-glass at the bonnets of our St. Louis ladies, and has arrived at the following philosophical conclusions, which he desires us to publish:

"Show us a lady's bonnet and we will tell you what sort of a woman she is. If it is full of ribbons, cupids, bows, etc., she is as full of love and poety, as a country inn of politicians and loafers. If it is decked with simple, plain colors and a couple of modest knots, she is a perfect jewel; sweet, sunny, mild, but as affectionate as a fresh nursed kitten. If stuck all over with a paradise of clover, three story ostrich feathers, wax holyhocks, and juniper berries, put it square down that she will always remain single, and will never see her fortieth birth-day. Bonnets are a true index of women."—[Republican.

WORDS OF KINDNESS.

BY HENRY E. PHELPS.

Oh, how sweet are words of kindness,
Flowing from a loving heart;
What on earth can we find sweeter
Than the joy which they impart?

In our sorrow—in our sadness,
Kind words prove a healing balm,
And in life's most adverse tempest
They around us breath a calm.

Let us never speak unkindly,
Lest a word should pierce too deep;
Hearts made up of kindly feelings
Never cause a heart to weep.

Sweet are words when fitly spoken,
Oft they give the spirit cheer;
Sweet is whispered consolation
To the child of sorrow's ear.

Melody, the sweetest, purest,
Is with every tone inwove,
Like harps tuned by seraphs' fingers,
In the realms of light and love.

Oh, without one word of kindness,
Poor, indeed, our hearts would be;
For kind words, like angels' whispers,
Fill the soul with holy glee.

Joy would ever spring around us,
If our love was unconfined;
Earth would soon have less of sorrow,
If our words were only kind.

DOESTICKS SEES THE MILLERITES.

New York Nov. 13, 1854.
Seventy hundred and one Narrow st.

My friend Damphool lately became convinced that, according to the comfortable prediction of Mr. Miller, the 'end of the earth' would become speedily visible to the naked eye, as that amiable gentleman had advertised the world to burn on the fifteenth. According to the programme, the entertainment was to commence with a trumpet solo by Gabriel, (not the one of City Hall celebrity,) to be followed by a general "gitting up stairs," and grand mass meeting of the illustrious defunct—after which 'the elect' were to start for Paradise in special conveyance provided for their accommodation—the whole to conclude with a splendid display of fire works in the evening. Damphool had done nothing but sing songs for a week. Bull Dogge, who was also a convert, had packed up his wardrobe in a hat box, and left the city; saying that he owned forty shares in a Kentucky coal mine, and was going to take possession of his property; and he offered to bet us the drinks that if he stood on a vein of that coal, he would be the last man scorched.

Damphool squared off his board bill and paid his washerwoman, who left him dead broke; sold his watch to a blaspheming Jew, to raise money with which to procure an ascension robe, in order to do honor to the occasion; he got one made of linen cambrick; it was a trifle too long, and cut him malignantly under the arms, but he bore it like a martyr; he got shaved, took a bath, put on his robe, bid me farewell, and got ready to go up. I discovered the place from which they were going to start, and went up myself to see the operation—in a vacant lot, where there were no trees to catch their skirts in their anticipated flight—large crowd on the ground; one maiden lady in a long white gown, and also dressed her lap dog in a similar manner; a man with a family Bible in his hand, had forgotten his robe, and came in his shirt-sleeves; ancient wench in a white night-gown, with red-shoes, and a yellow handkerchief around her head, knelt down in a small puddle of rain water, and prayed to take her up easy, and not hurt her sore ancle, lady from East Broadway, came in a robe cut low in the neck, and trimmed with five flounces; red-haired woman made her appearance with a crying baby, to the consternation of the company, who expected to go to Heaven, and had no relish for a preliminary taste of the other place, careful old lady brought her over-shoes in her work-basket, to wear home in case the performance should be postponed; little girl had her doll, and her three year old brother had a hoop, a tin whistle, and a painted kite, poor washerwoman came, but she had only a cotton robe and a scant pattern of that, the more aristocratic ladies moved farther away, and smelt their cologne, while the poor woman knelt down in the corner, with her face to the fence; Sixth Avenue lady came in a white satin robe; and a boy to hold up her train, and she had her own hands full of visiting cards; an African brunette carried a cushion for her mistress to kneel upon, and a man followed behind with her basket containing her certificate of church membership, a gilt-edged prayer book, two mince pies and some ham sandwiches; old cripple hobbled up, and as he was devoutly saying his prayers, a bad boy (who had not made any preparation for aerial travelling) stole his crutch to make a ball club. Crowd began to separate into knots, according to their different creed and beliefs; Unitarians, Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists, clustering round their respective preachers. I noticed that one old lady, evidently believing in the perfect sanctity of her darling minister, and desiring to insure her own passage, had tied herself to his left leg with a fish line. Baptist man preaching close communion. Presbyterian man was descanting on the accountability of infants, and asserting that a child three years old can commit sufficient sin to doom it to the lowest hell.

Sunrise—all knelt down to pray; east wind blew, and it began to rain. I noticed that Damphool had found a dry place on the lee side of a cider barrel. Methodist man took off his coat, and made a stump prayer, while all his congregation yelled 'Glory.' Baptist man inserted a special clause in his supplication, that he and his crowd might go up in a seperate boat. Ministers all prayed at each other, and for nobody. Know-Nothing clergyman addressed a long-winded political prayer to the Almighty, detailing the latest election returns; deploring the choice of the opposite candidate, imploring his blessing on the next Governor, (if the world should stand,) insinuated that he expected the nomination himself; and concluded by advising Him to exclude from heaven all foreigners, or they would refuse to live up to regulations, and would certainly kick up another row among the celestials. Down-town man, on hand, ready to go up; tried to pray, but, from want of practice, could only utter some disjointed sentences about 'uncurrent funds,' 'money market,' 'Erie down to 36;' (Damphool whispered that if that man ever got to heaven he would melt down the golden harp into coin, and let it out at two per cent, a month,) began to rain harder; wind decidedly chilly; their teeth chattered with cold, and they began to throw stones—promiscuous praying on every side. Methodist man stopped in the midst of a long, touching supplication to cuff the ears of a little boy who hit him with a brick; hours slipped away; began to think the entertainment was 'postponed on account of the weather.' Noon came; folks were not half so sacred as they were in the morning; ministers had got too hoarse to talk, and were passing the time kissing the sisters. Damphool looked so chilly that I got him a glass of hot whiskey punch; he looked at me with a holy horror, and went on with his prayer, but before he got to 'amen,' the punch had disappeared; husband of red-haired woman came and ordered her to go home and wash the breakfast dishes and then mend his Sunday pantaloons.

One o'clock, zeal began to cool off; at two, the enthusiasm was below par; at three rain poured so that I thought an alteration in the Litany would be necessary to make it read, 'Have mercy upon us poor miserable swimmers.' Small boy threw a handful of gravel at a long Methodist man, which hit him in the face, and made him look like a mulatto with the small pox. Long Methodist man hunched small boy with a fence rail. Four o'clock; Gabriel hadn't come yet. Damphool, much disappointed, muttered something about being 'sold'; people evidently getting hungry; no loaves or fishes on the ground; woman with two children said she was going home to put them in the trundle-bed; long man looked round to see, no one was looking, then tucked his robe under his arm got over the fence, and started for home on a dog trot. Dark; no signs of fire works yet; pyrotechnic exhibition not likely to commence for some time. Crowd impatient. (I here missed Damphool, and found him an hour afterwards paying his devotions to an eighteen penny oyster stew and a mug of ale.) Staid an hour longer, when the crowd began to disperse, with their ascension robes so badly draggled that if they had received a second summons to go, would have taken an extra quantity of soap suds to make them presentable among descent angels.

Appointed myself a committee of five to look into the matter; offered the following resolution, which I unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That putting on a clean shirt to go to heaven in, don't always result in getting there, even though the tails be of extra length; and that the creed that teaches such a mode of procedure is a farcical theology, fully worthy to be ranked among the many other excellent 'sells' of that veteran joker of world-wide celebrity—Jo Miller.

Dampily yours,
Q. K. Philander Doesticks, P. B.

BRAIN AND THOUGHT.

Richmond mentions the case of a woman whose brains were exposed in consequence of the removal of a considerable portion of the bony covering by disease.

He says he repeatedly made pressure on the brain, and each time suspended all feeling and intellect, which were instantly restored on the removal of the pressure.

The same writer also relates another case, that of a man who had been trepanned, and who perceived his intellect failing, and his existence drawing to a close, every time the effused blood collected upon the brain so as to produce pressure.

Professor Chapman, of Philadelphia, mentions, in his lectures, that he saw an individual with his skull perforated and the brain exposed, who was accustomed to submit himself to the same experiment of pressure as the above and who was exhibited by the late Professor Westar to his class. His intellectual and moral faculties disappeared on the application of the pressure, and restored at pleasure to their full activity by discontinuing the pressure. But the most extraordinary case of this kind within my knowledge, and one peculiarly interesting to the physiologist and metaphysician, is related by Sir Astley Cooper in his surgical lectures.

A man by the name of Jones received an injury on the head, while on board a vessel in the Mediterranean, which rendered him insensible. The vessel soon after this made Gibralter, where Jones was placed in the hospital, and remained in the same insensible state several months. He was then carried on board the Dolphin frigate to Deptford, and from thence was sent to St. Thomas Hospital, London. He lay constantly upon his back and breathed with difficulty. His pulse was regular, and each time it beat he moved his fingers. When hungry or thirsty he moved his lips and tongue. Mr. Clyne, the surgeon, found a portion of the skull depressed, trepanned him and removed the depressed portion. Immediately after this operation the motion of his fingers ceased, and at 4 o'clock in the afternoon (the operation having been performed at one) he sat up in bed; sensation and volition returned, and in four days he got out of bed and conversed. The last thing he remembered was the taking of a prize in the Mediterranean. From the moment of the accident, thirteen months and a few days, oblivion had come over him, and all recollection ceased. He had for more than one year drank of the cup of Lethe, and lived wholly unconscious of existence; yet on removing a small portion of bone which pressed upon the brain, he was restored to the full possession of the powers of his mind and body.—[Dr. Brigham.

"Punch" on Bonnets.—The last number of Punch contains a pictorial guess at the distance at which ladies' bonnets will be worn from their heads at the next remove. The tendency has been further and further rearward, and the next change, it thinks, will carry them off the head entirely; he represents the next fashion by two ladies in full dress and bareheaded, sailing along the streets, with a footman walking some ten feet behind, carrying the bonnets on a waiter.

Editorial Stampede.—Messrs. Scott, Burke and Christian, three editors in Georgia, have lately become Methodist Episcopal clergymen.

MEN WITH TAILS.

Authentic details, translated from the October number of the Gazette Hebdomaire, by John W. Green, M. D.

Dr. Hubsch, Hospital physician at Constantinople, has addressed a letter on the subject of "Men with Tails," which adds many interesting details to those already received from travelers. We will briefly lay before our readers the information, more or less positive, which we possess of this curious variety of the human species, and of which the earliest indications date back as far as 1677.

Mr. Editor: At this time, when attention seems to be concentrated on the subject of a tail-bearing race, called Niam-Niams, it gives me much pleasure to add some observations which I have had occasion to make at the city of Constantinople.

In 1852, I saw for the first time one of this race, a negress; struck by the phenomenon, I interrogated her master, a slave merchant. I was informed by him that there existed in Nigratia, Africa, a tribe called Niam-Niams; that all the members of this tribe bear the caudal appendix; and as exaggeration is a necesity of the Oriental imagination, he assured me that he had seen tails two feet in length. The one observed by me was smooth, without hair, was two inches long and terminated in a point. The negress was black as ebony; her hair was crisped; the teeth were white, thick, and inserted upon the alveolar process, strongly inclined outwards. The four canines were filed; her eyes were injected with blood. She ate raw meat with much relish; clothes were disagreeable to her; "son intelligence etait au niveau de celle des gens de son espece."

Her master had offered her for sale for six months, at an exceedingly low price; but was unable to sell her. The horror which she inspired not residing in her tail, but in her taste (which she took no pains to conceal) for human flesh.

Her tribe eat the flesh of prisoners taken in battles, with the neigboring nations, with whom they are constantly at war.

When any of them die, the relatives, instead of interring the body, eat it; from this cause there are no cemeteries in the country.

They do not all lead a wandering life, many of them construct huts with the branches of trees; they manufacture the implements of war and of agriculture, cultivating maize, grain, &c. Cattle are also bred by them.

The Niam-Niams have a language that is altogether perimitive; it contains many Arabic words. They go entirely naked and wish for nothing but to satisfy their sensual appetites. "Les fils couchant avec leurs meres, les freres avec leurs, sœurs," etc.; there is a frightful pellmell. The strongest among them becomes their chief; he it is who leads them to battle, and it is he who divides the booty. It is not known whether they have a religion; but it is probably that they have not, from the very great facility with which they embrace any that is taught them. It is very difficult to civilize them, their instinct leading them always to search for human flesh; there are instances of slaves who have killed and then devoured the children of their masters, who had been confided to their care.

I saw last year a man of this same race, having a tail one inch and a half long, covered with a few hairs. He seemed to be about thirty-five years of age, was robust, of good constitution, ebony black, and had the same particular conformation of the lower jaw spoken of above, i. e., the alveolus inclined outwards. Their canines are filed in order to diminish their masticatory force.

The Niam-Niams are endowed with Herculean strength. The merchants reject them, as they are so very difficult to subjugate, and the people fear to confide to them the guard of their houses.

I knew at Constantinople, the son of an Apothecary, ten years of age, who was born with a tail one inch in length; he belongs to the white Caucassian race. One of his ancestors presented the same anomaly. These phenomena are generally regarded in the East as a sign of brute force.

The Turks have known for a long time, this race of men, and are very much astonished that scientific Europe ignore their existence at this late day.

HUBSCH.

To sum up by a scientific view of the case, the existence of "men with tails," appears incontestible; and if travelers raise doubts on the subject, it is probably because they confound the Niam-Niams with a tail, with other Niams, neighbors of the first, anthropophagi like them, but deprived of the appendage.

To Prevent Flour and Meal from Souring.

A patent has been secured by Mr. Thomas Pearsall, of Tioga county, New York, for an invention to prevent flour, meal, &c., from becoming sour in the barrel from heating. The invention consists in introducing a tube of thin sheet iron three inches in diameter and open at both ends, through the entire length of the barrel, thus admitting a thorough ventilation of the contents. The Louisville Journal says that the invention has been thoroughly tested and its usefulness established. L. T. Thuston, of that place, on the first of August last, put up several barrels of meal in this form, which were shipped at New Orleans. A part of that shipment has recently been returned to Louisville for examination, and neither before nor after it had been converted into bread could any one detect the least appearance of change in the quality, and in every respect it appeared as free and sweet as when taken from the mill.

A Wholesome Thought.

"Bring hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind," if you would have them healed of their many infirmities. We boldly and fearlessly assert that the Mustang Liniment will positively cure Rheumatism. Let any who are afflicted with that most painful complaint try it thoroughly according to the directions, and if they are not cured, we will give them their money back. What more can we say? It will also cure the Piles. Thousands have tried it—and all were cured. Bruises, Sprains, Sores, or Eruptions, fade away as if touched by the magician's wand. Its application to a Burn or Scald acts like "oil upon the troubled waters," The tempest of pain and agony is soon spilled, and the patient is hushed to quiet and peaceful slumbers. "There is a balm for every wound," and that balm is the Mustang Liniment. Everybody that sells medicines keeps it for sale. "Hold your Horses," and if they are crippled, galled, or sprained, use the Mustang Liniment.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of

MAN OR ANIMALS,

Requiring an External Application.

Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. Westbrook:—

Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,

J. T. WHITNEY.

Elizabethtown, Tenn., May 25, 1855.

Mr. G. W. Westbrook:—

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,

JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

Philadelphia, June 11, 1854.

Mr. G. W. Westbrook:

Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.

I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.

I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

Port au Prince, Hayti, Jan. 16th, 1854.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Groton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.

GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.

Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.

The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLean—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, palns, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.

Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

THE TIMES WE LIVE IN.

The Saints know, and many of the world are waking up to a belief, that we are living in a day big with some of the most important events pertaining to this lower world. An almost unbroken European peace of forty years, the vast advancement of science and the colossal strides of commerce during this period, with the apparently wide prevalence and increasing powerful influence of the "peace" principles, had, until recently, led many to believe that the days of general war were past, that the great powers of Europe were too civilized, too refined, and, perhaps, a little too philanthropic, to reintroduce, for the settlement of their misunderstandings or disputes, the barbarous policy of past ages—fire and sword. Many were fondly dreaming, that although in the progress of civilization it might possibly be necessary to resort to arms against the untutored savage, yet it surely would not be the lot of the mighty nations of enlightened Europe to assemble their troops and ships and munitions of war, and soak the earth and crimson the ocean with human gore in the settlement of controversy. Physical war was considered the dernier resort of the rude barbarian, international arbitration was now to be the end of controversy with the polished Christian. Blows were the rude arguments of primitive times; words alone suited the refined advancement of the middle of the nineteenth century. The torch, the spear, and the sword were weapons of the past; the tongue and the pen were now to be the grand arbiters of the destinies of nations.

But alas! for these benevolent dreamers, it so happened that the Lord's ways were as high above man's ways as the heavens are above the earth; they forgot that Paul said that certain characters would be vociferating, "Peace, Peace," when sudden destruction was nigh at hand; they forgot that the Almighty had a controversy with the nations for transgressing His laws, changing His ordinances, and breaking His everlasting covenant; they forgot that he had decreed that wars more grievous than ever should ravage the earth, and utterly waste the proud strength of the nations that had forgotten him; they forgot that he had promised to plead with all flesh, and give the wicked to the sword, so that they would arise and slay each other; they forgot that nation would rise up against nation, and family against family, until every man's hand was so against his neighbor, that the Saints would be the only people not at war, and in Zion alone would be peace and safety; they forgot that the old prophets declared these things again and again; they rejected the corroborative testimony of the modern prophet Joseph on these matters, and ridiculed and despised his disciples; and consequently they found themselves stupendously mistaken.

For what do we see at the present time? The three most powerful and influential nations on the eastern hemisphere engaged in the most deadly conflict, either as allies or enemies of a fourth, while two or three others waver most tremulously in the balance, and scarcely dare decide for any party. The skill and science of the age are employed in devising and using means and instruments for the more and more rapid and effectual destruction of life and demolition of property. Preparing for the Baltic in the spring are squadrons of light draft gun boats, with forty floating steam batteries (English and French) of 2,000 tons each, 180 feet long, 56 wide and 20 deep, with horizontal engines of 200 horse power, the top deck bomb proof, the batteries perfectly encased with 700 tons of wrought iron slabs, four inches thick, and capable of resisting the heaviest shot in use. These gunboats are each to be armed with two, and the floating batteries each with twelve, of the largest Lancaster guns, and are expected to batter down the mighty walls of Constradt and St. Petersburg, and make them reverberate with the thunder of death, and the groans and shrieks of despair, next year. Mr. Perkins, son of the inventor of the steam-gun that throws several hundred balls per minute, says that he is prepared to enable Government to destroy Sebastopol without the loss of a single man, by supplying a steam-gun capable of throwing a ball of a ton weight a distance of five miles. From 1,000 to 1,200 Minie rifles are being sent into the ordnance stores every week, and it is strongly advocated that all the infantry be armed with these formidable weapons—in fact, it is urged that they should have the still more fearful repeating or revolving rifles, whilst many boldly say that every man, whether in the cavalry or the infantry, should have one or two of Colt's revolving pistols included in his equipment. Only think of it—a dense mass of footmen, each armed with a revolving rifle, one or two revolving pistols, and a bayonet! Here are twelve or eighteen swift and unerring messengers from each man, flying in rapid succession on their errand of death, ere the fierce hand to hand struggle with the cold steel of the bayonet is thought of! What could resist such murderous paraphernalia! Messrs. Peto, Brassey, Betts, & Co. are to construct a railroad for the more facile and rapid conveyance of munitions of war upon land, whilst steam already almost defies the boisterous waves, and rides triumphantly on its course, when the old sailors are either becalmed, driven astray, grounded, or dashed to fragments. And furthermore, when we think of the Thames tunnel, a work of immense labor and expense, yet of little practical use at present, we shall not be surprised if Mr. Brunel, or some other genius, proposes to shatter Sebastopol by a scientific earthquake, even as Mr. Dean, with his diving apparatus, powder cylinders, and galvanic battery, expects to batter the nine sunken ships with which Prince Menschikoff has blocked up the harbor of that famous city.

On examining closely the present condition of Europe, the reflection arises in the mind—how effectually, upon natural and obvious principles, can the Lord accomplish his mighty purposes. Does he see proper to chastise the nations, swallow up in destruction their property or riches, lay their mighty ones low in death's cold embrace, and send the voice of mourning through the earth? How thoroughly this can be done, and yet how naturally. The Czar's 600,000 troops and 1,200 guns available for a European war; the about equal number of Austria and Prussia; the 500 war ships, and 100,000 soldiers of England; the nearly as formidable navy, and far more numerous soldiery of France, seconded by the greatly increasing powers of war apparatus, and the facilities which steam affords for the rapid concentration of vast numbers of men and immense stores of material, indicate most clearly how quickly and easily, if we may be allowed the term, the Lord can assemble and cut off the strength of the nations, and spread the untold horrors of war through the land. And then how thoroughly the war spirit animates the bosom of the people. The determined maintenance of Kalafat, and the obstinate defence of Silistria, by the Turks; the extermination of the Turkish soldiers, transports, and convoy at Sinope; the deliberate advance of the British infantry across the river and up the hills of Alma in the very teeth of the Russian cannon; the reckless charge of the British cavalry into the very jaws of death at Balaklava; the unwearing renewal of attack by the Russian army; the unyielding defense of the hights of Inkermann by the allies; the doubling of the number of the allied armies before Sebastopol in a few weeks; the speedy dispatch of a sufficiency of winter houses for the English expeditionary army—all testify that it requires little to lead the nations to destruction. They appear to be fast ripening for the consummation that is desired. Then look at the resolution throughout the country to continue and support the war. Recruits turn up at the rate of 1,000 per week. Applications for commissions were not a tenth part as numerous before the war as since its commencement. The militia must be embodied, and at least one fourth of their numbers are called upon to volunteer into the line, and an ensigncy is promised gratis to one of every 75 volunteers; and in response to the call many regiments spontaneously pass the number named. Recruiting and volunteer bounties are raised that a greater number may be induced to enter the army, and standards are lowered that a greater number may have the privilege of volunteering into it. Five hundred navies, etc., each with a certificate from his last employer, are obtained in three hours, for the construction of the Balaklava and Sebastopol railway, and then the doors are closed and numerous applications refused. This railway, when completed, is to be sold to government at prime cost. Miss Florence Nightingale and her compeers volunteer to nurse the sick and wounded. All the country contributes to swell the "Patriotic Fund" for soldiers widows and orphans. Everybody sends bundles of old linen and lint for bandages for the wounded at Scutari, and Messrs. Cuthbert and other firms pack up the bundles gratis and forward them for shipment. The Oxford and Cambridge students hunt up their old boating jackets, cricketing trowsers, and reading gowns for the comfort of the soldiers. Mr. Henry Kingscote and others institute a "Crimean Army Fund," and speedily gentlemen's swift sailing yachts are freighted with numberless creature comforts for the army, selling them at cost price, and active measures are at once in operation. Messrs. Hudson & Co. send off £250 worth of the finest Havana cigars for the comfort of the officers. Messrs. Gamble supply 1,000 pints of preserved soups and broths for the sick and invalids. The ladies of Warrington send for the army a box of plum-puddings "well boiled and the cloths left on." Messrs. Routledge & Co. offer 100, and Messrs. Clarke & Beeton 1,000, volumes of books for the army's recreation and edification.

But if it is necessary for the "dogs of war" to be kenneled, or at any rate checked in their mad career, in order to provide for the deliverance of a body of Saints, or for the publication of the Gospel in any particular nation, how very simple a matter it appears, even to us, for the Lord, by means of a little "official mismanagement" or "obstinacy," "party connivance" or "diplomatic maneuvering," to pull in the reins, and bring the car of destruction to a stand, or to say to the angry billows of human strife, "Peace, be still," and immediately the hurricane subsides, the storm is lulled, the clouds retire, the sun shines forth, and behold a great calm ensues, and the whole face of nature smiles again. Truly is it apparent that our God is the Lord of the whole earth, and acts his good pleasure among the inhabitants thereof. And in doing this he often fulfills most remarkably the predictions of his servants. One case in particular appears quite to the point at the present time—"The present year (1851) has been one of unusual peace and prosperity in this nation; probably never since Britain was a nation has it experienced at once the liberty, peace, and universal prosperity upon all its interests, together with such general good will from the whole family of nations which inhabit our globe, as during the expiring year; and much the same may be said of the Western States of Europe, indeed, the world seems to have almost ceased active hostilities, to come up to the great metropolis of Babylon and pay their devotions at the shrine of human invention in the Crystal Temple. Like the distressed consumptive patient, the human family has reasons of respite from convulsive pains, and bystanders are flattered by the apparent tranquility into hopes of recovery, while disease is silently acquiring a more potent hold upon the vitals, and in an unexpected moment active dissolution commences. God has decreed a consumption upon the whole earth, and by the shedding of the blood of the prophets and apostles, Joseph, Hyrum, David, and others, that consumption has become immovably seated." See Millenial Star, vol. XIII, page 373.

Looking at the face of society in the old world, considering the sickening abominations which appear on every hand, from the cottage of the peasant to the palace of the prince, and reflecting upon the all but ineffectual endeavors of the servants of the Lord to publish the glad tidings of salvation to the nations on the Continent, we cannot come to any other conclusion than that the people have mellowed in corruption, and are becoming every day more and more fit for the burning. We cannot but say within ourselves, truly the people require chastisement from the Lord, that in the midst of their affliction and mourning their hearts may be softened, like Pharaoh's, so that the Elders may have the privilege of hunting more freely for scattered Israel, and, like Moses, leading them out to the promised land. And if the Almighty now pour out freely the vials of his wrath on this half of the globe, though our hearts sicken at the sight, we can but say Amen, for it is very evident that the bulk of mankind are too far sunk in degradation to be ever materially benefitted by the Gospel in their mortality. Many, too, are so thoroughly and hopelessly enslaved and oppressed by their rulers, that to escape to the spirit world cannot be other than a welcome release from the dark phases of their life in this.

Nor does it appear, so far, that either of the belligerent nations has positively gained anything by the fierce strife in which they are engaged. Which nation has won? The Turk has lost, the Russ has lost, the Frank has lost, and the Anglo-Saxon has lost. All seems to be loss, quick, great, and grievous—loss of valuable treasure, and loss of still more precious blood. Destruction and the grave appear to be the only gainers at present. The question seems not to be who will win most, but who will lose most.

Not only by man's fierce passion is the Lord thrashing the nations, but disease and the elements rise up in terrible majesty, and administer his judgments. Look at the ravages of cholera and pestilence throughout the globe, not forgetting their severe visitations of the hostile armies—of the Russians and the allies in the Drobrudscha; of the Austrians in the Danubian principalities, who have had 20,000 men on the sick list since the army entered there; of the allies in the Crimea, of whom the Medical Circular says: "In point of sickness and mortality, this has been one of the most disastrous campaigns on record. Ten thousand men have disappeared from the ranks since the army landed in the Crimea. Many of them are only sick it is true, and will soon again appear on the scene. The Russians, the poor soldiers say universally, are nothing to the cholera and diarrhea."

And who can stay to enumerate the fearful conflagrations and the awful shipwrecks which crowd the journals of the day, in spite of skill and science. Listen to the strain in which the New York Herald of Oct. 14, discourses upon the loss of the Arctic, ocean mail steamer:

"It has never devolved upon this journal to record so awful a catastrophe as that which has appeared in our columns. In the whole history of shipwrecks, the loss of the steamer Arctic stands without a parallel. There have no doubt been cases where the loss of life was greater, or where scenes of horror were more thickly crowded together; but these we can only picture in the imagination; we can only dream, as in a frightful nightmare, of the awful hour which saw the last survivors of the President and the City of Glasgow sink beneath the wave. Among the narratives of maritime disasters which have reached us in authentic form, none can harrow the feelings like the one we publish this morning. In every point of view it is unprecedented. The collision took place at mid-day, in calm weather, in the broad Atlantic, forty miles from land: a thousand years might elapse and no two vessels pass over that fatal spot. The Arctic was, all things considered, as noble and perfect vessel as floats. So high had naval architecture and skill been developed in her construction and management that she might almost have been considered storm proof. Science had raised her beyond the reach of harm from the sea, or the wind, or fire. Even a collision with nineteen out of twenty sea-going vessels would not have endangered her; it needed a large heavy steamship to tell upon the extraordinary strength of her hull. The large heavy steamship was there. After the collision, in nine cases out of ten, a sail passed forward over the bows, and mattresses forced into the leak, would have enabled her to sail the short distance of forty miles, which separated her from Cape Race. The leak could not be stopped; she did not sail one mile before the end came. Altogether, the hand of fate overpowering the effort of man, and setting at naught the most careful calculations and the strongest probabilities, was never more apparent. So unexpected was the shock as to paralyze the whole city on Wednesday. Business was stopped. Such was the anxiety to learn particulars of the disaster, that 72,000 copies of our edition of yesterday were sold without exhausting the demand. Men had no thought but for the unfortunate, who in the midst of their pleasures, and on the eve of a return to their home, were suddenly thrust into the jaws of death. No steamer had arrived here for months, freighted with so many of our leading citizens. Names familiar to us all from childhood follow each other in sad succession in the list of passengers. So goodly a company is seldom offered to the hungry wave." Scarcely a leading family in New York had not a member or a relative on that ill-fated vessel.

On Nov. 13th a tempest, one of the most terrible known in that part of the world, broke over Constantinople and swept the Bosphorus and the Black Sea, overthrowing three of the minarets of Sultan Achmet's mosque in Constantinople, driving large vessels from their moorings before that city, blowing down and greatly injuring the tents of the allied armies in the Crimea, and, worst of all, wrecking some forty or fifty English, French, Turkish and Egyptian vessels in the Black Sea, besides seriously damaging many more. The Times of Dec, 5, thus dolefully comments upon the matter:

"The total loss of men at the various stations on the coast of the Crimea on the disastrous 13th cannot be less than a thousand, besides those that have fallen into the hands of the Cossacks. The loss of vessels was thirty British and French wrecked, and half as many dismasted at Balaklava, and eighteen wrecked or dismasted at the mouth of the Katcha. Our men-of-war, thanks to the precaution of frequently trying their cables, have come off with no further damage than the loss of guns, or of masts, or of rigging, the twisting of their rudders, or the springing some leaks. The French have lost the Henri IV., a noble [84 gun] three-decker, and a favorite war steamer. Thus far we have sustained no loss beyond the ordinary drain of war; but the greatest calamity is that of which we hardly now know the full. The Prince, a magnificent new screw steamer of 2,700 tons, carried out, the other day, to Balaklava the 46th regiment, all the winter clothing for the troops engaged in the siege, including 40,000 great coats, flannel suits, under clothing, socks and gloves; beef, pork, and other provisions; hospital stores for Scrutari; and a vast quantity of shot and shell to carry on the siege. These are wholly lost, and nothing remains of the Prince but half-a-dozen of her numerous crew, who managed to get on the cliffs when she was broken to powder against them. The Resolute, with 900 tons of gunpowder (and shot and shell) also went to the bottom. Thus, it seems, all the materials for carrying on the siege and providing against the severity of the winter have been carried off at one fell swoop; and even if we think to content ourselves with maintaining our position on the hights before Sebastopol, it is evident that we are not in a condition to stand our worst foe—the coming winter. Everything seems to have conspired, under a mysterious dispensation of heaven, to make the loss of the Prince the greatest possible disaster. She could not stop at Scutari to land the hospital stores so greatly wanted there. When she arrived at Balaklava it was blowing fresh, and she did not venture within the narrow, torturous channel of the harbor. All she did was to land the 46th, though it is said that, besides a very large crew, some Sappers, and some medical and other officers were still on board. On attempting to anchor the whole of the cable ran out, not being properly clinched. A second cable shared the same fate. The Prince then steamed out, while a third cable was got up from the hold, and with this she was brought to, though with a smaller anchor than those she had lost. This answered for a while. On the dreadful morning of the 13th, however, it proved utterly inadequate. The Prince cut her masts and put on her steam; but the wreck of the mizenmast fouled the screw, and the noble vessel becoming helpless, immediately drifted against the rocks. Figures are but feeble language for the description of such a catastrophe, but the value of the Prince, as she floated, is put at £150,000, and her cargo at half a million. There must have been nearly two hundred souls on board. The thirty transports utterly lost, with most of their crews, at Balaklava, are put down at £15,000 each. So here at once a million of money went to the bottom, in a form of which money conveys but a faint idea. The other losses enumerated above, the French ship of the line and war steamer, the transports lost on the western coast, the many vessels of all kinds disabled, make up another million to be added to the naked pecuniary estimate of the loss. But the true way of stating it is, that the army is utterly disabled for the present, and left to no other protection than heaven, and that valor which the British soldier is ever sure to display in the face of the greatest difficulties, the direst privations, and the most overwhelming numbers."

Among the vessels lost was a Turkish-line-of-battle-ship. On the steppes of Taurida, south of Perekop, this same storm, with snow, annihilated several hundred wagons laden with corn, provisions, and munitions for the Russian army, many of whom had been hurried, without baggage, to Sebastopol, to drive the allies into the sea at the battle of Inkermann. If to further the designs of the Almighty, He had seen fit to send this fearful storm when five hundred ships were transporting 100,000 men from Varna to the Crimea, who would have dared to tell the awful tale!

If the signs are dark and portentous in Europe, so they are in America. If it is manifest that the Lord is working among the people of the eastern hemisphere, his workings are no less obvious among the people of the western. No people could be ripening faster for the consummation than are the people of the United States. Having greater liberty and freedom than many of them are capable of appreciating, or worthy of enjoying, they give free play to their passions, and brook no manner of restraint. Consequently we see the American papers filled with reports of all manner of violent excesses. In the halls of Congress hard words and harder blows are passed, and it would scarcely be surprising if we heard of still harder shots being exchanged. The boiling cauldron of "Hards" and "Softs," "Nebraska," and "Anti-Nebraska" politics rages in the United States beyond comparison with anything in the old world—beyond comparison, because the emperor, the king, and the law wield the power in this half of the globe, while everybody thinks he has a right to wield it in the new world. On the rivers and the railroads recklessness and carelessness ever and anon tell their direful tale. In the streets the deadly revolver and the reeking bowie-knife of the rowdy and the mobocrat appear to be seldom idle in all parts of the land. Throughout the country the Gadianton order of Know-Nothings are gaining in numbers and influence, undermining the constitution by nullifying one of its first and noblest principles—freedom to men of every clime and creed. On the prairie and in the wilderness the roving Indian seems to be waking up to a more bitter and active hostility to the white man, and to be seeking revenge for a thousand wrongs. And to cap the climax, the Spiritualists increase in number and influence, and in the importance and startling character of their revelations. We hear of spiritually dictated literature, spiritually directed banking and other ordinary business, and spiritual marriages. Truly, when we look at the temperature of American society, we are led to think that if the people of the old world die off with cramp and paralysis, the people of the new world would run stark mad with the brain fever.

In no nation upon the wide earth do existing circumstances portend so fierce and deadly a hand-to-hand struggle in the perilous times to come, as in the United States. That part of the earth is called the Lord's thrashing floor, and most thoroughly is it fitting for its destiny. Elements of discord and strife abound, and opportunities and circumstances for their ample development are as accommodating as can well be conceived. That nation professes to be the most liberal and tolerant of all nations upon the face of the earth. The constitution of the Union, and many of the laws of the States are truly liberal, but often in the carrying out of them there is a most woful defection. Liberty, instead of being used for the freedom and protection of all, in the enjoyment of their rights, is too often abused by the strong in the scope which it gives them to bear down upon the weak, and is also too often prostituted to party spirit for the advancement of party purposes. Clear and undeniable instances of this abuse and prostitution are given in the persecutions and drivings of the Latter-day Saints. The prophet Joseph foresaw that the American continent would consequently be drenched in blood. Liberty, law, order, and justice were slighted, violated, trampled under foot, and ridiculed in the mobbings and drivings of the Latter-day Saints, and the proceedings were winked at by the rulers of the nation, until the blood of prophets and saints stained the land. These were but the beginnings of sorrow, for it is written that judgment must commence first at the house of God. The stream which then forced a breach in the embankment of the law, continues to steadily increase, and by and by will swell to a foaming, raging torrent, defying all obstacles to its course, sweeping the land with irresistible fury, and spreading devastation on every hand. Those whose duty it was to fill up the breach, neglected it on the onset, and if not now, it very soon will have grown to dimensions far beyond their skill and ability to repair. The Saints were first wasted by the outbreak, but ere the fury of the surging, boiling flood is spent, the proudest and mightiest of the land must bow before it.

BEARDS IN THE OLDEN TIME.

By the Council of Carthage, held in the year of our Lord 252, it was decreed that the clergy should not shave.

St. Augustine wore a beard; but the monks soon after began to shave. The beard was cut off and dedicated with prayers to God, as it had been once to Apollo! The military orders wore beards, and even with one order of Christians it was tolerated. The great source of dispute between the Greek and Roman churches has been on the subject of the beard; the latter admitted a shaved saint into their Pantheon. In the reign of Francis I. of France, his chancellor, Duprat, imposed a tax on the beards of the clergy. When the chancellor's son attempted to take possession of the Bishoprick of Clermont, he found the gates of the nave closed, and, looking within saw the monks armed with razors, brushes, and soap. They refused to induct him until he himself had shaved, and he retired to his castle to die of spleen and vexation. After the Norman conquest of England the clergy preached against long hair; and Pope Paschal II. issued a bill against beards.

A hollow head is like a bell, it is very noisy,

SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Many great and illustrious men who have governed societies, armies, and nations, have at last confessed that they could rule and govern others, but themselves they could not govern. It was probably a similar feeling that passed through the poet's brain, when he said—

"Man know thyself—presume not God to scan;
The proper study of mankind is man."

The study of human nature is one of the most interesting and important of all sciences, and is probably the least studied, and is, consequently, the least understood. It is not at all uncommon to meet with persons apparently well acquainted with chemistry, geography, agriculture, mechanism, and many branches of philosophy, but totally ignorant of themselves, and the tendency of their actions, because of the darkness of their minds and the deceitfulness of their hearts.

We consider the principles of self-government of the greatest importance to every individual, and particularly the Latter-day Saints; for without a thorough and complete control of ourselves we cannot be saved in the kingdom of God. It was the principle of self-government that exalted our Father to a glorious throne; and it was by the same principle that Jesus laid the foundation for our salvation and glory, and by which he obtained all power in heaven and on earth.

We have entered, dear brethren and sisters, the same practical school of experience. We have the same difficulties to grapple with—a similar nature, but worse to overcome; a portion of the same spirit and priesthood to sustain us, and the same glorious prize to contend for—even eternal life.

If you would obtain this inestimable gift you must learn well every lesson that is given you, and above all, you must learn to govern yourselves. Some of you are husbands and fathers, and have wives and children under your government, and are, perhaps, called to preside over a branch or district or section of the church of Christ; you may be Elders, Seventies and High Priests, and yet be ignorant of the very first principles of government.

We have known Elders and High Priests who have not had wisdom enough to drive a yoke of oxen across the Plains, who, when their cattle were restive and awkward, instead of coaxing and blessing them, would beat and curse them, and make them more awkward still.

The Bible furnishes us with an instance of a prophet who had not wisdom enough to govern an ass, but was rebuked by the mouth of his beast for his ignorance, stupidity and folly. There are some men who talk a great deal about governing kingdoms and worlds, who cannot govern one solitary wife, nor even their children, nor themselves. There are men and women in this city who have heard the law of tithing explained a hundred times, who do not know how to govern fifteen, ten, or six dollars per week. We do not say these things with an upbraiding spirit, nor with intent to discourage or shame you; but we write thus plainly, that you may ponder and reflect upon some of the elementary principles of government.

In learning the arts and sciences, or languages, living or dead, we begin with first principles. If we pass by the elementary principles, and only obtain a smattering of more advanced rules, although we may be considered smart by the vulgar and illiterate, yet when we come into the company of the philosopher, or linguist, or professor, the veil of our ignorance is drawn aside, and we are exposed as ignorant fools.

You are students in the Lord's theological school; you are now in one of the lower branches; you will soon, if faithful, be wending your way to Zion. There are there philosophers and professors of the highest grade, who will know your capacity and proficiency before you have spoken two sentences to them. Then it is necessary that you should begin again from the beginning and learn every lesson perfectly. You must learn to govern your thoughts and feelings and passions according to the laws of God and the spirit of righteousness.

There is no faculty that we possess but may be perverted and corrupted, whether it be the seeing of the eye, the hearing of the ear, or the articulation of the mouth, they all may become ministers of evil. They are of themselves mere instrument of the spirit that dwelleth in us. If your heart be evil your eyes will be evil also; you will delight in nothing that is lovely, pure, and virtuous, but your eye will be ever straining to see something that is evil, sensuous and devilish, according to the depraved desires of a wicked heart.

If your heart is evil your ear will ever be on the alert to listen to some of the works of iniquity; you will delight to hear of the weaknesses of men, or to hear the foul mouthed slanderer abuse, vilify, and calumniate the righteous.

If your heart is evil, your mouth will be filled with words of vanity, deceit and profanity; you will try to justify your own wicked and licentious conduct by expatiating upon the weaknesses of others; you will justify the wicked and condemn the just; you will call bitter sweet, and sweet bitter; and darkness you will call light, and light darkness; but, on the contrary, if your heart be pure, your eyes will be pure also; your ear will delight only in hearing of the noble and righteous deeds of your brethren, and your mouth will be full of blessing instead of cursing. If the heart be pure the mouth will send forth words of righteousness and purity, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth good things, but an evil man out of the evil treasures of his heart bringeth forth evil things, therefore blessed is the man who shutteth his eyes from seeing of evil, and closeth his ears from hearing of iniquity, and in whose mouth there is no guile.

It will be seen by the foregoing that the heart is the seat of government. It is there the spirit has erected its throne, and from thence eminate the laws to govern the hand, the foot, the eye, and ear, and indeed every organ and faculty we possess.

If the ruling spirit or monarch be an evil one, your feet will be led into the haunts of vice and wickedness, and you will delight in visiting dram and whisky shops, or in drinking these accursed drugs in secret, and in smoking and chewing tobacco, and other nasty, dirty habits. You will be found reveling in the way of sinners, and sitting in the seat of the scorner; your eye will be open to that which is evil: your ears filled with words of treachery and lies; your mouths will be full of cursing and bitterness, and your passions heated to shed blood.

But if the ruling spirit is generous, noble, and pure, your heart and all its ministers will be pure also. Let every Saint under our jurisdiction rigorously examine his own heart, that he may learn who holds supremacy therein. If your silver, gold, merchandise, business, cattle, land, or any earthly thing is uppermost in your heart, and the predominant ruler of your actions, you must repent, and reinstate the rightful governor, or the treacherous usurper will lead you down to hell. If your wife occupies the throne, and is the governess of your actions, she is a usurper, and must be dethroned, for you cannot obtain salvation and eternal life unless you do it; but let it be done in meekness and in the fear of the Lord, remembering that he will be your ruler and governor world's without end, and whatever measure you meet it shall be measured unto you again.

Some have thought that because we believe in the plurality of wives we have no government of our feelings or passions, and that our affections are lavished, unconstrained, upon every sympathetic object. We are charged, consequently, by the ignorant and evil-minded, as being corrupt, licentious, and adulterous; but we say unto all who have imagined in their hearts this evil concerning us, that the corrupt, licentious, and adulterous, cannot stand among the Latter-day Saints, but shall be cut off. So strict is the law of God upon this subject, that if a man looketh upon a woman to lust after her he hath committed adultery in his heart, and shall deny the faith. Are not these things true? They are. Can an Elder or other officer of this church violate the laws of virtue with impunity? No. Can a man or woman commit adultery and not be found out? No; 'tis impossible. Go ask apostates who are scattered through this country how long they were able to conceal their corruptions and iniquities from the Lord and his servants. If they have any honesty of soul left in them, they will tell you that no sooner had they fallen into the transgression than the spirit of God departed from them, and the ministers of our God were ready to administer justice commmensurate with their deeds, according to the laws of God. If you believe not this testimony, go and ask the spirit of Munroe and others of the damned why they left this world so suddenly; you will then learn that the Saints in Utah both know how to govern themselves, and how to teach and control others, so that if those chosing to dwell among them will not do any good, they are effectually prevented from doing much evil. Then who will dare to say the Latter-day Saints are corrupt and adulterous? If any one has the hardihood, let him prove his charge, or he stands branded as a slanderer, a calumniator, and a liar; and let him know that his refuge of vituperations and lies shall not screen him from everlasting indignation, shame and contempt.

STARTLING EXPOSURE OF MORMONISM.

A letter which originally appeared in the Boston Times, has been going the rounds under the above title, dated Chicago, Jan. 16th, 1855, and purporting to have been written by a Mrs. Sarah Young and a Miss Eliza Williams, who are represented as the rescued victims of Mormonism, and the first named as an escaped wife of Gov. Young.

The Chicago Tribune, in alluding to the matter, says: "The letter of Mrs. Brigham Young—twelfth or fortieth wife of the Governor—and Miss Williams to the Boston Times is "a sell."

May be; but if so, we think the price of the sale is a heavy stock of gullibility, of which, however, any quantity is kept constantly on hand, by a certain class, who are the patrons of all such impositions that appear in the American market.

If any such women have an existence on this little planet, or ever did, in connection with Mormonism we don't know it, and we think we have as good a right to know as any outsiders down about Boston.

AN INDIAN BATTLE.

The Independence Agrarian learns from the conductor of the Sante Fe Mail, that about two months since, a battle was fought on Crooked Creek, south of the Arkansas, between the Osages and Camaches, in which the whole Camache party, consisting of about two hundred men, women and children, were killed. The loss of the Osages is not stated.

THE MAILS.

As yet no mails have arrived here from the east. For upwards of two weeks they have been accumulating in Northern Illinois. Railway companies have been making the most desperate efforts to clear the line of the drifted snow, to relieve their passenger prisoners, and renew their suspended locomotive operations.

The surrounding country has been completely besieged for all surplus spades, shovels, picks and laborers, who have been receiving $2.25 per day. Agents have been sent from this city to facilitate, if possible, the arrival of the mails, and from their recent reports it is confidently hoped that we shall receive the long looked for mails to-day, or, at latest, to-morrow.

Preaching and Baptising in Tennessee.

WILLIAMSPORT, TENN., Jan. 22, 1855.

DEAR BR. SNOW—Supposing that a short account of my labors and ministry will not be uninteresting to you, I gladly avail myself of the present opportunity of writing.

I left the city of St. Louis on Thursday, the 10th of July, 1854, and soon arrived at this place in safety, and found my mother and all the family in the enjoyment of good health.

I left on Wednesday, the 26th day of July, on my way to South Alabama, to transact some business pertaining to the estate of Mrs. Berry, dec'd, in favor of Hamill Carter. I had some considerable trouble to get the business arranged, yet through perseverance and diligence I succeeded. Owing to its being so extremely hot and sultry in that country, I thought it best for me to return back again to Tennessee, which I accordingly did by the same conveyance that I came by, and arrived on Monday, the 14th of August. Soon after my return I commenced laboring in the vineyard, and as soon as I began preaching and baptising it made both priest and people angry; yet that did not hinder or impede the onward progress of truth, as it is mighty and will prevail.

By reference to my journal I find, previous to my falling in company with Elder Corbitt, I have traveled 20,409 miles, preached eleven discourses, and baptised two persons. This brings me to Tuesday, the 11th of October. In continuation of the narrative of my labors, Elder Corbitt's name will be associated with mine as an assistant laborer. I went to the city of Nashville in company with brother Robert B. Church, for the purpose of preaching the gospel in that city. On our arrival we learned that Elder Corbitt was there, and had been preaching about six weeks, and had come to the conclusion that he would go to work at his trade, he being a carpenter, and preach on Sunday's; but upon more mature reflection he come to the conclusion that it was best for him to travel and preach in company with me, as I had no traveling companion. Brother Robert Church proposed to take care of his family, consisting of a wife and child, while he was preaching. In the fore part of our labors they were chiefly confined to Hickman and Maury counties, but not meeting with that encouragement that we would have liked, we concluded to search out a new field of labor, and so we determined that we would go to the south, in the State of Alabama. On our arrival in that country we recommenced our labors; and by reference to our journal we find that we have traveled 534 miles, preached thirty-four discourses each, and baptised five persons, and rebaptised eight more, and obtained nine subscribers for the Luminary.

Though we did not succeed in baptising a great many at the south, yet we are happy to inform you that the Almighty blessed us abundantly with his holy spirit in preaching the word unto the people in that country. Prejudice seemed to be considerably allayed, and many doors were opened for preaching that we did not have the opportunity of filling, owing to our short stay there.

In conclusion, we pray that the great work of Jehovah may continue to roll on, until every honest person may be gathered out from every nation, kindred, tongue and people under the whole heavens. Even so; amen.

H. W. CHURCH,
W. B. CORBITT.

Scraps from the Diary of Mrs. Letitia Jane Lockheart.

Genesis i, 26, 27: "And God said, let us make man in our image, after our own likeness. So God created man in his own image; in the image of God created He him."

Man, lovely man; Lord of creation! I no longer am astonished, since reading the above account of the creation of man, that all things flee before thy face or tamely submit to thy will. He who created thee created all things for thy dominion. He enstamped on thy creation His own sacred image; He impressed thy form with His holy likeness; then gave to thee rule over all things—a prince, indeed, of heavenly origin. Fresh from his maker's hands, he proudly went forth with mien erect, the admired of all admirers, giving laws and regulating the vast creation placed beneath his rule. Did his presence cheer, his voice comfort? Was his every act approved, his examples imitated, his precepts revered. 'Twas then God our Father thought to crown man with eternal felicity, and give unto him "an help-meet." Created from the mould formed in the express image and likeness of God, sprang forth lovely woman, to cheer the presence and to add to the honor and dignity of man; and having been created from him, she became "bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh"—ever and ever subject to his rule. How natural, as well as pleasing, to woman, to have so near her a protector, counsellor, and ruler, commissioned of high heaven's King to govern all things created on the earth; and who could or would object to such a prince, when we have the pleasing reflection that he who now stands before us is in the express image of God, and through the laws of creation we may become a joint ruler in his vast domain, a partner of his cares, a companion of his joys, and heir of his blessings. Truly great and glorious, then, heavenly Father, is the privilege of woman, the last of thy creation, whom thou chose to make a blessing unto man for his faithfulness, and permitting him to exercise a part of thy sovereignty, has given him power to exalt woman by his side, giving unto her honor as the second in creation. Then, indeed, blessed are we to become the wives of man, in whom we behold the express image of God, empowered and authorized through the holy order established in the kingdom of God—matrimony—to go forth and multiply, that the sons of men may be increased to be partakers of the increased blessings of the creations placed under his control; and thus joy is increased and men and women are one. Blessed was the woman who lived in the day of primeval man, before he lost confidence in himself, before the bane of society was introduced to his lips, before the engulphing cup was (like woman's apple) tasted, ere the frenzied imagination was heated, or fury of his power was dealt out by the murderous knife, or party cliques were formed to enslave his fellow-man, or equal rights were trampled under foot, or the voice of mercy lost in the cry of justice, or legislators were called to intervene in behalf of injured and oppressed woman; before his agency over the creations given him in the beginning was placed in the feeble "help-meet"—created from his own side—by the executive and legislative counsel of such imbecile creatures as they have chosen in the low and degraded scale of fallen intellect. I beg my female friends to bear with me a moment. Was not man our designed lord, created first? Yes. Has not he, by the laws of the State, placed woman first, who was created last, and by him exalted? Then where shall that man be placed who places himself below woman's creation, (the after birth of creation,) making her the first by his own act, thus reversing the design and order of creation. These reflections have been produced from opening a copy of Mr. Hartly's digest of Texas laws, during my short sojourn in Galveston, Texas, from which I learned the alarming fact, that the men of Texas were of so reckless a character that they could not be entrusted with the property of their wives, which is secured unto them by the laws of the State. It was then my mind was called to retrace the early impressions taught me by my good old mother, gleaned from the Bible, of the origin of man, and to contrast him and woman as they exist in the day I live. Ye heavens, weep over poor and fallen woman! Ye angels pray for us! Consistency thou art a jewel! Will woman entrust her person to him whom her father, mother, brother, friends, nor herself would entrust with a dime to pay for a little Godfrey's cordial for the baby? Woman, thy folly is a sin; and man, without repentance, will drag woman to hell, instead of exalting her to again dwell in the presence of their heavenly Father. Man is the head of the woman as Christ is of man.

CONGRESSIONAL.

WASHINGTON, February 6.—SENATE—The bill appropriating $200,000 to opening the mouth of the Mississippi, was amended by making the amount $300,000, and as amended, passed.

The Senate then took up the French spoilation bill.

Mr. Wells argued at some length against it, examining in detail the circumstances under which spoilations were committed, and arguing that the claims were not founded on right and ought not to be paid.

HOUSE.—The House tabled the resolutions to expel Mr. Chase from his seat as reporter, in consequence of his refusal to testify before the Special Committee in relation to Colt's patent, which was pending at adjournment yesterday.

February 7.—SENATE—Mr. Sumner presented a memorial from certain citizens of Pawtucket, Mass., praying for the repeal of the Fugitive Slave Law, and the abolition of Slavery in the District of Columbia, and its prohibition in the Territories.

Mr. Brown—"Is that all they want?"

Mr. Sumner replied: "That is the beginning."

Mr. Sumner introduced a bill to continue certain public works in Massachusetts. Read twice and placed on the calender.

Mr. Chase presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of a law prohibiting slavery in the Territories, and said he should call up the bill introduced by him at the earliest opportunity.

The following is the debate on Territorial business and Polygamy in Utah, in the House, on the 1st inst.

Two trifling territorial bills were passed.

The bill establishing the office of a Surveyor General at Utah, and granting lands to actual settlers therein, was taken up. This occasioned a long debate last session, involving the question of polygamy, when Mr. Bernhisel said the more wives a man has, the more necessity for homesteads. Yesterday, while in committee, the enacting clause was stricken out, which prevented the resumption of the debate. This morning the question was started on concurring in this action of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Jones, (dem) of Tenn., expressed a hope that the House would pass the bill, meting out the same justice to Utah as to the other Territories.

Mr. Peckham, (dem,) of N. Y—Is not the bill to encourage polygamy? (Cries of "Yes," "No," "No," and much confusion.)

Mr. Keitts, (dem) of S. O.—Is it not designed to put the people of Utah on the same footing as those of other Territories?

Mr. Benson, (whig) of Mo.—Is polygamy recognized in any other Territory? (Cries of "No.")

Mr. McMullen, (dem.) of Va., moved to lay the bill on the table.

The House struck out the enacting clause, by a vote of 109 against 74, which is equivalent to the loss of the bill.

Mr. Phelps, (dem.) of Mo., moved the reconsideration of the vote, intending, if the motion prevailed, to propose striking out from the bill the provisions donating the lands. Recently, the Executive has appointed another Governor, entertaining different religious opinions from Brigham Young. The people of Utah have the right to complain if Congress does not make provisions for the survey of the lands. If you do not donate the lands, give them the privilege to buy. He was willing to make the grants.

Mr. Benson wished to know whether the friends of the bill approved of the course suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. Phelps replied, he made the suggestion without consultation.

Mr. Bernhisel, (dem.) of Utah, preferred Mr. Phelps' motion should not prevail. We only, he said, ask to be placed on an equal footing with the people of other Territories.

Mr. Disney, (dem.) of Ohio, said the public interests were paramount to the consideration mentioned by the delegate from Utah. Provision should at once be made for a survey of the lands in that Territory.

Mr. Haven, (whig,) of New York, concurred in the views of Mr. Disney. The House objected to the bill, because of the domestic institution in Utah, which tolerates bigamy. He thought the House ought to meet the question now. He desired to move an additional section, disapproving and declaring null and void all the laws in the Territory, allowing a man to have more than one wife at a time.

Voices—"That's right." "Move it," &c.

Mr. McMullen was willing to give the people of Utah all they are entitled to, but would not grant lands until they enact a code of good morals.

Mr. Phelps' motion was agreed to.

Mr. Disney proposed a substitute for the bill, merely retaining the provisions relative to the establishment of the office of a Surveyor General in Utah, and granting lands for school and University purposes. He moved the previous question.

Mr. Haven appealed to him to withdraw his motion, so that he might substitute an amendment of the character he had indicated.

Mr. Disney fully appreciated the commendable zeal of the gentleman to place on record his opinion of Mormonism, but this was not the time. He (Mr. Disney) wished to exclude all extraneous matters.

Mr. Disney's amendment was adopted, and the bill passed.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

Arrival of the Daniel Webster and Crescent City.

The steamships Daniel Webster, from San Juan, and the Crescent City, from Aspinwall, arrived last night, the former bringing dates from San Francisco to the 9th, and the latter to the 1st inst.

The Sixth Legislature of California assembled at Sacramento on Tuesday, and organized on the following day, the Assembly making choice of Mr. Stowe (Whig) for Speaker. The Senatorial bill has been put in motion, and gives fair promise of "crushing out" all legitimate subjects of legislation.

From the territory acquired under the Gadsden treaty, reports come in various shapes of the discovery of rich mines of gold and copper. A company of twenty men, from this city, have already commenced the washing of a copper mine about a hundred miles from the Colorado. Specimens assayed in this city yielded 75 per cent, of pure copper, and a very nice per centage of gold. Emigration is tending towards the "new purchase," and it will soon be filled with an active population.

A majority of the prisoners who escaped from the State Prison a couple of weeks ago have been recaptured. Five of the convicts, however, took advantage of the defective condition of the San Jose jail, where they were temporarily confined, and made good their escape.

The "Pioneers' Ball", last evening, wound up the holidays. All the fashion and beauty of the city were in attendance, and all went "merry as the marriage bell."

The Emigrant Road movement finds favor with all classes, and after the Senatorial question is settled the Legislature is expected to take the matter in hand.

The San Francisco Sun has the following account of a bloody fight between three miners and a band of robbers.

PLACERVILLE, December 23, 2 P. M.—The Mountain Democrat extra, says: "We received the following startling intelligence last night after our paper had been worked off. Rocky Canon, the place of the tragedy, is a deep and almost inaccessible canon, about forty miles North of this place, near Todd's Valley, and uninhabited.

"ROCKY CANON, December 20.—No officer having been within a convenient distance to attend to a case of emergency that has just happened near our isolated camp here, the undersigned constituted themselves a coroner's jury, and held an inquest over the deceased bodies of twelve men that were killed within a mile of our camp on the 10th inst., a full account of which we deem it our duty to publish. Three of the undersigned were eye-witnesses to the whole scene, though too far off to give aid in any way.—On yesterday, 19th inst., three men, who afterwards proved to be a Mr. Jas. C. McDonald, of Alabama, now deceased; Dr. Bolivar A. Sparks, of Mississippi, and Capt. Jonathan R. Davis, of South Carolina, were traveling on foot on a trail within a mile of our camp, to prospect a vein of gold-bearing quartz, some twenty or thirty miles north of this place.

As they were passing the base of a mountain, three of the undersigned being out on a hunting expedition on its side, saw a party of men who were concealed in the bushes near the trail, spring up and commence firing at them. Mr. McDonald fell dead. He was shot before he was even aware of his danger. He and his party had nothing but their revolvers.—Thomas Sparks shot twice at the banditti, and then fell severely wounded. In the meantime Capt. Davis, who was the first to commence shooting in defence of himself and party, in an instant after the first volley of the robbers, being still under, kept up an incessant fire upon them with his revolver, every ball forcing its victim to bite the dust until all the loads of both parties seemed to have been discharged. The surviving robbers made an attack upon Capt. Davis with bowie knives, and one with a short sword or sabre. Capt. Davis stood his ground firmly until they rushed up abreast of him, within about four steps. He then made a spring upon them. with a large bowie knife; gave three of them wounds that proved fatal. Having wounded the other one very slightly, and disarmed him by throwing his knife in the air in warding off a blow, as this last man expressed in a tone of gratitude before his death, Capt. D. went to work at once tearing up his own shirt and binding up all the wounds of the living, of both his friends and his enemies. On an examination of the persons of the deceased, of those that commenced the attack on Capt. D. and party, we discovered papers, carefully concealed in their pockets, purporting to be a copy of laws and by-laws by which they were governed.

The last of this band has just died. His wounds, he thought himself, were but slight, and seemed in a fair way of recovery until the last hour, and corroborated all the evidence proven by the papers in his pocket. Signed by W. C. Thompson and fifteen others.

Another letter, dated Rocky Canon, December 29, to Wm. Henderson, Esq., Placerville:

"Quite an exciting scene happened yesterday, within a mile of our tent. While two of my partners and myself were hunting over the hills, we heard the report of guns below us, and saw two small parties shooting at each other. Being satisfied that they were all strangers, we hesitated for a moment before we ventured to go down. A feeling of duty, however, prompted us to hasten down to them. On approaching we saw two persons fall—(these persons were of a little party of three, whom we had observed half an hour previous quietly following the trail)—and the remaining one of the party, a man somewhat above the medium height, whom we could readily distinguish by his white hat from all the rest, fighting bravely for his life. Approaching still nearer, we were surprised at the sight of eleven men lying stretched on the ground, seven of them dead, (belonging, as they afterwards proved to a party of robbers) and one of the party of three so suddenly fired upon from the bushes by the robbers.

Three of the wounded robbers having died last night, we had ten of them to bury. One survives, who will probably recover; he is, however, marked for life, having lost his nose in toto, and the fore-finger of his right hand. The surviving one, who seems to be but little hurt, says that their band was composed of two Americans, five Sidney men, and four Mexicans; and had just commenced operations, having killed six Chinamen three days ago, and four Americans on the day before yesterday. Although we counted twenty-eight bullet holes through Capt. Davis' hat and clothes, (seventeen through his hat, and eleven through his coat and shirt,) he receives two very slight flesh wounds.

Yours, truly, JOHN WEBSTER.

PARLEY P. PRATT.

We clip the following from the Alta California:

Mr. Parley P. Pratt, for whom we have considerable respect as a man and as a teacher, coupled with as much admiration of his talent as the doctrines which he employs it to defend will admit of—Mr. Parley P. Pratt appears to have walked into the temples of our money changes in this city and fairly put to flight all reason and philosophy by the boldness of his attack upon the Christian Church. Our readers will remember Mr. Pratt as the self-compossed apostle of Polygamic Mormonism in California, and his last exploit was to draw upon him the fire of a room full of debaters in the S. F. Mercantile Library Association and then with words that would have shocked Mr. Walker, and grammar that would have forever destroyed Mr. Lindley Murray's peace of mind, commenced a bombardment of the citiadel of their reason and silenced or rendered useless every gun! For several weeks Mr. Pratt has been wheeling and charging his squadron of Polygamic arguments in full sight of all our Church doors and Lecture rooms, and even advanced in person to the foot of our pulpits to proclaim himself the defender of a new faith, flinging the glove even into the Minister's desk. Up to the present time, we believe, no David has gone forth against this Philistine to meet him on either point of law, morality or religion, which he declares himself ready to engage an enemy upon.

From Tahiti—Arrival of the Henry Meiggs.

By the arrival of the French corvette Mozelle, from Tahiti, we have received a file of the Massager de Tahiti to the 19th November.

The Massager gives an account of a disturbance at Raiatea, an island adjacent to Tahiti. One of the chiefs had revolted against the King of the Island, and a battle ensued, which lasted five hours. Four of the King's people were killed. Eight of the rebels were killed, and the survivors took to flight, and escaped to the schooner Josephine. The captain of the Josephine, acting under the advice of the British Consul, refused to give up the refugees to the King, unless his promise was given to spare their lives.

Sandwich Islands—Death of the King.

By the arrival of the British frigate Pique, Capt. Nicholson, the San Francisco papers have advices from Honolulu to the 20th of December. The San Francisco Herald, in its summary, says:

King Kamehameha III, died on the 13th of December, after an illness of five days, of hemorrhage of the lungs. He was born on the 13th of March, 1813, and was, therefore, 41 years and 9 months old at the time of his death.

His Majesty, and also the Queen, were at the parade and review of the military on the 28th of November, which is a national holyday, and it was remarked by every one that the King never appeared in better health; but on the afternoon of that day he was taken ill, (probably from excess of drinking,) and did not appear at the levee at the palace on that evening, nor did he recover his health afterwards.

His death was immediately made known by hoisting the large royal standard over the palace at half-mast. At half-past 12 o'clock, the battery on Punch Bowl commenced firing forty-one guns, corresponding with the King's age, which was followed in succession by the United States sloop St. Mary, and British ships Trincomalee and Pique, and by the French frigate Artemise, and corvette Eurydice. The minute guns continued from 12 1-2 to 6 o'clock, P. M., while all the war vessels wore Hawaiian ensigns at half mast.

On the afternoon, and also on the day following his death, the corpse was laid out in state at the palace, and was visited by some 10,000 persons, at least 3000 of whom were foreigners. The Queen and high chiefs sat in the rooms adjoining, and were evidently much affected.

His Majesty was the warm friend of foreigners, and they have lost one whom they at all times found willing to listen to them.

The wailing of the natives, who were gathered by thousands in the palace grounds, was truly mournful. It was a relic of their ancient customs, which is only repeated on the death of their highest chiefs.

On the second night after his death, the corpse was enclosed in a lead coffin, to await the funeral, which was to take place on Saturday, the 30th of December. Great preparations were being made for the occasion, and it was thought that it would be the grandest display ever witnessed at the Islands. No expense was to be spared. The palace, Government officers, court-house and church, where the King attended, had all been draped with crape, at an expense of about $4000.

At half-past 12 o'clock, December 15, the Governor of Oahu, caused the official proclamation to be read in Hawaiian and English, at the corners of the principal streets of Honolulu. The proclamation of His Majesty Kamehameha IV. was received with shouts from the people and evident satisfaction wherever it was made known.

The young King, Kamehameha IV., will be twenty-one years old on the 9th of February, 1855. He is a man of fair ability, having had a good English education, and has traveled through the United States, England and France. Hitherto he has given himself up to pleasure to a great extent, for want probably of better occupation, but it is reported now that he has determined to abandon his billiard and card associates and turn over a new leaf. He is much more under the English influence than the late King, and is most decidedly opposed to annexation, except to avert foreign domination.

By the death of the King, the annexation question is definately settled for the present. The Islands will not be annexed, and the whole subject will probably be dropped. This was the opinion current at the Islands.

The former King's Ministers, of course, go out of office, though they may all be recalled by the present King. Wm. L. Lee had tendered his resignation before the King's death. The new King has declined to accept the resignation, and Judge Lee will continue to hold the office of Chief Justice for the present.

THE TIMES WE LIVE IN.

Our greatest blessings, when perverted, become invariably our greatest curses. America will not present an exception in the working of this rule. The very liberty which is her boast, is but the cord to strangle her, and the more ample its extent the more numerous will be its folds around her neck, and the more fatal will be the consequences. Every man in the United States fancies himself a sovereign—one of the sovereign people. So far so good. But as discord worms itself more and more into the American society, every man will still, perhaps all the more, fancy himself a sovereign, and suppose that he has as much to gain, as much to lose, and as many wrongs to avenge as anybody else. Then every one there is accustomed to the use of arms. And rifles, revolving pistols, bowie knives, &c., are far more widely distributed among the people of the United States than among the people of any other nation. These things will give to a struggle in the States a thoroughness, a personality, and an individuality unknown elsewhere. Among no other people does it appear possible for every man's hand to be against his neighbor so completely and universally. Look at the go-aheaditiveness and energy of the Americans; look at their versatile inventive genius in devising, and their unequalled promptitude in seizing and acting upon, means and machinery that will most quickly and effectually produce the result required; look at their mixed descent from representatives of every nation on earth, bringing into juxtaposition the virtues and the vices of every tribe of the family of Adam, not forgetting the stoical fortitude and stern morality of the pilgrim fathers, nor the subtle hypocrisy and ferocious villainy of the thousands who have fled to the New World, to escape justice in the Old—all these vices and virtues, subject only to circumstantial, and often intensifying, modifications, descending as heir-looms from father to son; look at the overwhelming retribution which the Almighty invariably brings upon the nations that are guilty of shedding the innocent blood of Prophets and of Saints; and then say, whether, in all the wide world there exist a field more ample, circumstances more inviting and favorable, and signs more ominous, for a fierce, general, exterminating struggle, than the United States. Who can say that the famous story of the battle of the Kilkenny cats will not be re-enacted on the American continent?

It is comforting to turn from the dark and cheerless prospects of Babylon to the more hopeful signs of the rising power and glory of Zion. Never was it more manifest that the Lord stands at the helm, than at the present time, and never was the work more onward. For the Saints in Zion there happens just sufficient disturbance, through apostates, mobs, U. S. Officials, or Indians, to prevent them from being lulled asleep, and to keep them alive to their privileges. Led by the voice of revelation, the people in Zion can grow in knowledge that is hidden from the world, and foresee the calamities and machinations of the wicked in time to make every preparation to escape the evils and avoid the snares; gathered, through obedience to the gospel, from every nation under heaven, they have every opportunity to bring together and improve upon the knowledge and wisdom and virtues, and cast from them the ignorance and folly and vices, of every people upon earth; and dwelling in the midst of the mountains, they have every natural help to life and vigor, every circumstantial incentive to bravery and heroism and fortitude, and every inducement to careful and perservering industry; whilst their issolated position—a thousand miles from the fashions and the follies of christendom, gives them ample room to grow and expand into a free, great, mighty, courageous and generous people, untramelled by the narrow Gentile notions of Babylon, uncorrupted by the abominations of a degenerated world.

The organisation of a stake of Zion at St. Louis, and another at Cincinnati, and the establishment of three weekly periodicals at St. Louis, New York and Cincinnati, indicate that a new epoch is opening in the history of the church on the American continent. Then the present mission to the Lamanites shows that the Lord is working amongst the remnants of His people for their salvation and exaltation, and we may indulge the bright anticipation that the time is hastening on when they will become again a white and a delightsome people, amalgamating with their brethren of the house of Isael, sharing in the blessings of the gospel, and receiving of and administering in the ordinances, keys, powers, privileges, responsibilities, and glories of the Holy Priesthood.

And the nations, unconsciously, in their movements, help to roll on the great work. Simultaneously, with the bursting of the war-storm over Europe, counsel was given for the Saints to emigrate as fast as they consistently could, to America, whether they could go all the way to the Valley or not, while the commotions of Europe will but impell them and others to act in accordance with this counsel without unnecessary delay. And when they get to the U. States, no doubt circumstances will conspire to open up their way to Zion, and also urge them to pursue it the first opportunity. Then in regard to the Lamanites, the past and present conduct of the whites to them, in consolidating them further and further in the wilderness, in opposition to past treaties not to molest them more, tends to make them forget their own clanish feuds, and look anxiously arround for, and when found, appreciate friends that can be relied upon, with whom alliances can be formed and intercourse established, which will be honored in in righteousness and good faith, and not be hypocritically or treacherously violated.

Respecting the Jews, we will not say more; but we cannot say less, than the prospects are brightening for their return to the land of their fathers. The interest which many, both in Europe and America, are taking in Jerusalem and her children, the movement now on foot in Germany for emigration to that city, the recent partial restoration of the "latter rains" in Palestine, all token that God has not forgotton His promises, but that He is stirring up the hearts of men to prepare the way for the restoration of Judah and the rebuilding of their long desecrated temple and cities, previous to the re-investing of the Holy Pristhood in the hands of that peculiar people who were so long His oracle on the Eastern Hemisphere.

Taking all things into consideration, though to the nations the signs of the times appear to bode little good, they could not be more cheering to the sons and daughters of Israel.—[Millennial Star.

THE WAGON ROUTE.

Adjourned Meeting at Musical Hall.

Mr. Pixley said that it might be proper to state that the committee of twenty-five could not report very satisfactorily at that time to a public meeting. Some of the committee had not attended, and did not appear to take much interest in the project, but the other portion met frequently together to deliberate on the subject before the notice of the last public meeting. The prevailing and only idea the committee had in view was the building of an emigrant road to facilitate the travel of the people who usually pass over such routes. They kept aloof entirely from anything having relation to the great Pacific Railroad project. That is the great project of the age, and must take time, years, and millions of money to complete it. In the meantime the State of California languishes for a population of working men and women. The only difficulty is to provide for them a speedy and cheap transit from the States, and the only manner of doing this was considered by the committee to be the establishment of a wagon road along some of the most feasible of the emigrant trails. The committee have collected a large amount of statistical information on the subject, but are not yet prepared to report it. A sub-committee was also appointed for the purpose of visiting Sacramento and the interior cities, and they have conversed with the proprietors and owners of the great California stage lines, and have elicited from them facts and information in regard to the route by the Great Salt Lake City. The chairman of the committee was also authorized to send letters of invitation to the various cities of the State, asking the co-operation of the people.

The people throughout the State seem to have taken hold of the idea, and the Governor is warmly enlisted in favor of the project, and will do all in his power, at the present existing session of the legislature, to promote these objects and procure an appropriation for the purpose. [Applause.] He might also say that all the members of the Legislature, both of the Senate and Assembly, and many of the high officers of the government, are supporters of the measure. [Applause.] The committee have gathered together many facts during the last three or four weeks, and among others, the fact was brought to their attention of the existence of a law, passed in 1846, which allows the President power to establish routes and forts to California and Oregon.

The committee have not been able to determine upon any particular route. Among other things, they are about issuing a circular, to be drawn up by some gentleman of the committee, propounding certain questions, and which will be sent to the most intelligent persons throughout the State, who have crossed on these routes, and till we get these facts and other information, we cannot of course come to an opinion in regard to the best route. This circular will be sent, in a short time, throughout the State. From them the committee expect to receive written answers. The committee was also informed of a fact that it did not before know. There is at present established from the City of Salt Lake to the frontier of Missouri—Independence—a stage line. There is a gentleman at Salt Lake who has contracted with the government, at an annual expense of $14,900, to carry a monthly mail between the City of Salt Lake and Independence, Mo. That line leaves every month. It makes its regular trips almost the year round, except when hindered by the snow. The journey is generally accomplished in about fifteen days. The expense of the passage is $100.

Mr. Pixley also spoke of a new route which had been discovered. The committee were informed that there is at present, at Salt Lake City, a detachment of the army, under the command of Major or Col. Steptoe, who, with 180 dragoons, arrived there last year, with the intention of coming on to California, and exploring a route. As soon as he was able he was to send back a party of workmen to prepare the route as much as he was able. The committee have also learned from Col. Reese, an intelligent traveler, that midway between the Carson river and the Great Salt Lake City there is a beautiful valley, beautifully adapted for the location of a route; and he also assured us that the whole route was well watered, well wooded, and an inexhaustible forage could also be obtained.

The committee speak of this route because it is the only one they have inquired into, and no one has directed their attention to any other except that further north. Having made some remarks on the southern route, Mr. Pixley read the resolutions as follows:

Resolved, That a railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific is the grand enterprise of this age and of the American people; that it is not the work of a day, but of years, requiring unanimity of public sentiment, preliminary surveys, and the adoption of a particular route, as well as the appropriation of many millions of money, and its grand results cannot be realized to meet the urgent necessities of the times.

Resolved, That an emigrant road from the valley of the Mississippi to California, so constructed as to admit of cheap and easy travel, and protected by military posts as to be safe, is the thing that the highest and best interests of California and the whole country require.

Resolved, That inasmuch a wagon-road across the country, upon which omigrants can travel in safety, will be a work of great public utility, and cannot be considered as a local undertaking, we invite all members of Congress, members of Legislatures of the several States of this Union, and all other persons favorable to the enterprise, to give it their influence and support.

Resolved, That we will use all proper means within our power for the accomplishment of this work, so necessary to the welfare of the State, and pledge ourselves to its support, firmly believing that we may rely upon important aid from our State Legislature, and that we shall receive the hearty co-operation of our fellow-citizens throughout the State of California.

Mr. Doyle moved to continue the committee, with power to add to their numbers.

Mr. Tingley—I would state that the committee of twenty-five are preparing a report based on statistical information, gathered together with a view of being published, not only for the people of California, but for our Atlantic friends, believing, as we do, that all the evils under which California labors can be expressed, as it were, in the words, "want of emigration;" and by giving correct information on the various subjects to our Atlantic friends, we can, perhaps, do something towards inducing emigration to California.

Mr. Caserly moved to adjourn, subject to the call of the committee, which was carried, and the meeting accordingly adjourned.

TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION.

The Paris correspondent of the New York Herald, writing on the 2d of December, thus speaks of what three years have wrought in the life of one of the most remarkable men of the age:

This is the third anniversary of that famous coup d'etat from which so many results have flown, and are still in embryo. It seems but yesterday when the deed was done, and Paris looked on in stupified amazement. I saw, on that day, Napoleon ride through the large masses of cavalry, which lining the great avenue of the Champs Elysees, were drawn up to receive him. His flushed cheek and fevered eye were witnesses of the fiery commotion which burned within that silent soul; and, as boldly and right martially, he galloped up the lines. I saw, too, in my mind's eye, some of those tracks of blood which are since visible on the map of Europe. Lord Palmerston was the first to applaud the deed, and thereby lose his place. And on Monday last, within four short days of this anniversary, Lord Palmerston—the hope of England, and once more in powerful place—was witness to a similar scene in the Champs Elysees. But how changed the circumstances. Then the burning volcano was limited to the breast of him who had taken alike his pledged oath and public opinion by the beard, and flinging himself on the magic charm of his name, had perilled body and soul on the cast of a die. Now, the fiery element is everywhere but with him; the world is in flames, while he, calm as a philosopher in his studio, paces his war horse through the ranks of that splendid Imperial Guard, which, in richness of caparison, in brilliancy of discipline, is unequalled in Europe, and is the work of his own hand. From palace windows the eye of his beautiful Empress watches the chivalrous array, and Napoleon, the adventurer, the oath-breaker, the gentlest, but most resolute of despots, strides his handsome charger, and receives the salutations of his legions, like some hereditary prince, the elected of God, and the ordained controller of his creatures.

Verily romance is bereft of its wand in the presence of the realities of the latter half of the nineteenth century.

GEN. JACKSON A GENTLEMAN.

Instead of being a rude and unpolished man, as many have erroneously supposed, Gen. Jackson was considered by all who knew him intimately as the very perfection of a gentleman. His manners were courteous in the extreme, and to illustrate this fact Mr. Buchanan related a striking incident. He said, on one occasion, he received a letter from an American lady, just returned from England, who had a daughter married to an individual of high rank among the English nobility. In her note to Mr. Buchanan, she informed him she bore a message to the President of the United States, from William IV, and she desired him to accompany her to the White House, in order that she might present it in person. Mr. B. obeyed her request, and they went to the President's mansion. He excused himself for a few moments and went to the private room of the President, where he found him in the most wretched dithabille. He was clad in an old gray surtout coat, a dirty shirt, his beard long, and, to crown all, was smoking an old blackened pipe. Mr. B. acquainted him with the fact that Mrs.——was in another part of the mansion, with a message to him from the King of England. He was fearful the old General might walk down stairs to receive his visitor in that sorry plight, and therefore suggested to him whether he had not better arrange his dress and shave. His reply was, "Buchanan, I once knew a man who made a fortune by minding his own business—go down stairs and say to Mrs. ——, I shall be happy to wait on her presently." He left the apartment, and in a very short time the old gentleman gracefully entered the room, dressed in a suit of rich black cloth, clean shaved, with his fine head of white hair, carefully brushed, and received the lady with the greatest ease and polish of manners. She bore to him the kind salutations of the King, with the request that he would, after the expiration of his Presidential term, visit England. On their return from the White House, the lady expressed her high gratification, and the pleasure she had derived from the interview, and said that she had visited every principal court in Europe, and mingled with those of the highest rank, but that Gen. Jackson, in all the attributes of gentlemanly courtesy, and highly refined manners, excelled every other man she had ever met.—[Arthur's Magazine.

A LESSON FOR SCOLDING WIVES.—"I dare say you have scolded your wife very often, Newman," said I once. Old Newman looked down, and his wife took up the reply: "Never to signify—and if he has, I deserved it." "Nay," said the old woman, with a beauty of kindness which all the poetry in the world cannot excel, "how can a wife scold her good man, who has been working for her, and her little ones all the day long? It may do for a man to be peevish, for it is he who bears the crosses of the world; but who should make him forget them but his own wife? And she had better for her own sake—for nobody can scold much when the scolding is all on one side."

THE PREACHING MONKEY.

There is a curious animal, a native of South America, which is called the preaching monkey. The appearance of this animal is at once grotesque and forbidding. It has a dark thick beard, three inches long, hanging down from the chin. This gives it the mock air of a Capuchin friar, from which it has acquired the name of the preaching monkey. They are generally found in groups of twenty or thirty, except in their morning and evening meetings when they assemble in vast multitudes. At these times, one of them, who appears by common consent, to be leader or president, mounts to the highest tree which is near, and the rest take their places below. Having by a sign commanded silence, the orator commences his harrangue, consisting of various modulated howls, sometimes sharp and quick, then again slow and deep, but always so loud as to be heard several miles.

The mingled sounds at a distance are said to resemble the rolling of drums, and rumbling and creaking of cart wheels, ungreased. Now and then the chief gives a signal with his hand, when the whole company begin the most frightful chorus imaginable, and with another sign, silence is restored. The whole scene is described as the most ludicrous, and yet the most hideous, that the imagination can conceive.—[Republican.

A NEW DISCOVERY.

A very interesting historical discovers has just been made in the Museum of Arms, in the Palace of Hohenzollern, in Germany. Mr. D. Mayenfish, observed in the Museum what appeared to be a door, covered with plaster. He had the plaster removed, and found a wooden door; and behind that door was one of iron, fastened with enormous locks. Mr. Mayenfish had the locks opend—an operation of great difficulty. The door being then flung open, a subterranean passage was discovered. This passage between three and four hundred yards long, was blocked up at the end with rubbish. The rubbish was removed, and a large chamber was exposed. On the wall, at certain intervals, were crucifixes, and figures of the Virgin and St. John the Baptist, all in wood, clumsily executed; also, iron caps, with sharp spikes inside, heavy chains, pincers, a rack, and other instruments of torture. In the centre of the room was a huge stone table, and ten seats surrounding it. On the table was a hammar, a plate with figures of the Virgin and St. John the Baptist, five wooden balls, quite black with age, and an iron seal of the famous Vehemic tribunal. This seal, with the other things, makes it clear that the cavern was employed for the sittings of one of those secret courts of justice whose mysterious and terrible proceedings created profound terror in the middle ages, but served to keep in check the brutality of the oppressors of the people. No other actual remains of any Vehemic tribunal have yet been discovered in Germany, though savans have spent many weary years in making all manner of researches respecting them.

A BIT OF HUMOR.

The following extract from the report of a committee on hogs, read before an Agricultural Society "down East," contains some excellent hits:—Some folks accuse pigs of being filthy in their habits, and negligent in their personal appearance. But whether food is best eaten off the ground or from china plates, is it seems to me, merely a matter of taste and convenience, about which pigs and men may honestly differ. They ought to be judged then charitably. At any rate, pigs are not filthy enough to chew tobacco, nor to poison their breath by drinking whisky. And as to their personal appearace, you don't catch a pig playing the dandy, nor the females among them picking their way up the streets of a muddy village after a rain, in kid slippers. Notwithstanding their heterodox notions, hogs have some excellent traits of character. If one chances to wallow a little deeper in some mire-hole than his fellows, and so carries off and comes in possession of more of this earth than his brethren, he never assumes an extra importance on that account, neither are his brethren stupid enough to worship him for it. Their only question seems to be, is he still a hog? If he is, they treat him as such. When a hog has no merit of his own he never puts on aristocratic airs, nor claims any particular respect on account of his family connections; and yet some Hogs have descended from very ancient families.—[Galt Rep'ter.

"DEAR ME!" exclaimed Mrs. Partington, sorrowfully, "how much a man will bear, and how far he will go, to get this soddered dross, as Parson Martin called it, when he refused the beggar a sixpence for fear it might lead him to extravagance! all are going to California and Chagrin arter gold. Cousin Jones and the three Smiths have gone, and Mr. Chip, the carpenter, has left his wife and seven children, and a blessed old mother-in-law, to seek a fortin too. This is the strangest yet, I don't see how he could have done it; it looks so ongrateful to treat heaven's blessings so lightly. But there, we are told that the love of money is the root of all evil, and how true it is, for they are now rooting arter it like pigs arter ground nuts! Why, it is a perfect money-mania among everybody!" and she shook her head doubtingly as she pensively watched a small mug of cider with an apple in it simmering by the winter fire; she was somewhat fond of drink made in this way.

FATHER FELIX'S SERMON.—An Irish priest, by the name of Felix Macabe, author of a grammar of the English language, was expatiating from the pulpit, on the reciprocal duties of the pastor and his flock, and on the account to be given on the subject, at the day of final retribution, he observed: "Well, Father Felix,—the great judge will say,—how have you fulfilled the duties of your office? Have you neglected the charge you undertook, or supplied the wants of your paishioners? and I shall reply, Holy Father, I preached to them, and I preached to them, I prayed for their souls, and I gave them my blessings. Well, Father Felix, and how did your flock trate you? Did they pay their dues, and bring you their offerings? And then, you villains, what am I to say?" added he, apostrophising the congregation, "you know you do nothing but chate me."

LOVE LABOR; if you do not want it for food, you may for physic.

FORGIVENESS.

Man hath two attendant angels,
Ever waiting by his side,
With him whereso'er he wanders,
Whereso'er his feet abide;
One to warn him if he walketh,
And rebuke him if he stray;
One to leave him to his nature,
And so let him go his way.

Two recording spirits, reading
All his life's minutest part,
Looking in his soul, and listening
To the beatings of his heart;
Each with pen of fire electric,
Writes the good or evil wrought—
Writes with truth that adds not, errs not,
Purpose—action—word—and thought.

One the Teacher and Reprover,
Marks each heaven-deserving deed;
Graves it with the lightning's vigor,
Seals it with the lightning's speed;
For the good that men achieveth—
Good beyond an angel's doubt—
Such remains for aye and ever,
And cannot be blotted out.

One—severe and silent Watcher!
Noteth every crime and guile,
Writes it with a holy duty,
Seals it not, but waits awhile:
If the evil doer cry not—
"God forgive me!" ere he sleeps,
Then the sad stern spirit seals it,
And the gentler spirit weeps.

To the sinner, if Repentance
Come in soon with healing wings,
Then the dark account is cancelled,
And each joyful angel sings;
Whilst the erring one perceiveth—
Now his troublous hour is o'er—
Music, fragrance wafted to him,
From a yet untrodden shore!

Mild and mighty is Forgiveness,
Meekly worn, if meekly won;
Let our hearts go forth to seek it,
Ere the setting of the sun!
Angels wait and long to hear us
Ask it, ere the time is flown;
Let us give it, and receive it,
Ere the midnight cometh down!

AN IRISHMAN'S REVENGE.

During the fall of 1798, a great number of the inhabitants of Wexford county revolted against the English. This riot, however, had no bad consequences, as the actors were soon checked and forced to submit to the iron rod of the English laws. Soldiers were sent in the different parts of the country to arrest the leaders, and do prompt justice to the guilty.

One of these detachments was stationed at the Isle of the Virgin. One morning a sergeant entered the room of the Captain:

"What is it, Dennis?" enquired the officer.

"Patrick O'Darcy has been arrested; as I commanded the platoon, I come to take your orders for his execution."

"Have we the law on our side?" enquired the captain.

"If you allow me, I will say that it is always lawful to get rid of a rebel and papist. But he was not at home last night, and that is sufficient to condemn him. Shall I pass him off?"

"Is it known whither he went and what he did last night?"

"I have heard that he went to see his brother, the sailor who came to Wexford last night. But this is not well proved, and O'Darcy has a bad name anyhow."

"Upon my faith, Dennis, I do not think it will be wrong to get rid of the man since we have him in our power,"

"This will do," said the Sergeant, and he went out.

Left by himself, the Captain, reflecting on what had occurred, thought that he had too hastily condemned a man, who might have been innocent. He quickly arose and went out to stay the execution, but had not gone far ere he heard a discharge of musketry. In a minute more, he was by the corpse of his ill-fated victim, who was a young man of high stature and manly face. His dress was that of the poorer classes in Ireland. After contemplating that fine face awhile, the officer retired. His heart was a prey to grief and regret.

Among the witnesses to this scene, was the brother of O'Darcy. As soon as the victim fell, he left the spot, and uttering an oath of revenge, he went to see the bereaved widow. There he commenced to clean an old rusty pistol, and the two eldest boys melted lead to mould bullets. They had not been long at work when a rap was heard at the door. "It is the priest," said the little boy who had gone to open it. Upon this the ecclesiastic stepped in, and seeing the occupation of the inmates, he asked in a stern voice:

"Is it a murder you are going to commit?"

"They have knowingly killed my brother. I must be revenged," said the man.

"What!" said the Priest, "are those the thoughts of a Christian? Does not God forbid the shedding of blood? Let him have the care of punishing the guilty. His revenge will be terrible; remorse here below, and eternal torments hereafter."

He continued in this strain for awhile, but to no effect. However, after the brother had nodded his head and urged several objections, he paused awhile, and at length said:

"I believe you are right; his conscience must revenge me."

In the evening of the same day, whilst the captain was reflecting on the unfortunate occurrence of the morning, the sergeant, pale as a corpse, entered the room and handed the captain a letter, which contained the following words:

"Patrick O'Darcy died on the 1st of October, 1798.
Captain O'Gunnell will die on the 1st of October, 1799."

"Twelve months."

"Who gave you this letter?" asked the Captain.

"Patrick O'Darcy," answered the servant in a faltering voice.

"Patrick O'Darcy is dead—you fool!"

"I assisted at his execution. I was present when his body was thrown in the lake," said the sergeant, "and yet, should the words I am about to utter be the last I ever pronounce, I swear it was O'Darcy who gave me that letter."

O'Gunnell was not superstitious; this letter caused him however some anxiety; but fifteen days later all was forgotten. On the first of November he was in Dublin. In the evening of that day his landlord gave him a letter which, he said, had been brought by a young Irishman. This letter was similar to the first one he received, only the months were reduced to eleven. When O'Gunnell read this second missive his fears were renewed. Remorse gnawned at his heart, and his guilty conscience became persuaded that something supernatural was connected with the occurrence. No one knew that he had gone to Dublin, where he arrived the evening previous. What being could thus guess his intentions and meet him on that particular day. His mind became a prey to anxiety, and sleep and rest forsook him. He endeavored to soothe his tortured mind by giving himself to pleasures, but nothing could distract his dark thoughts.

On the first of December, whilst at table with a number of friends, and on the point of proposing a toast, a servant gave him a letter. He turned pale, and sank on his chair. It announced he had one month less to live. He took for pretext a sudden indisposition, and left the room. The next morning he started, accompanied by one servant only, to take a hunt on the hills of Wicklow.

No thoughts of pleasure brought O'Gunnell in those wild regions. He began to consider pleasure and happiness as a dream of the past, which would never be realized. All he could hope for was a temporary relief—a momentary forgetfulness. He seeks them in mental exercises, but the souvenier of the Isle of the Virgin is ever fresh to his memory. A bloody phantom haunts him constantly. He meets his gaze everywhere.

One evening, returning from an excursion in a distant part of the country, he was walking along a narrow path on the banks of a small creek, when, casting his eyes before him, he saw a man standing on an eminence a short distance from him, and pointing to a rock near which the Captain must pass.—O'Gunnell's blood ran cold when he recognised O'Darcy. Drawing a pistol from his belt, he fired, but the man scornfully smiled, and, again pointing to the rock, disappeared. When he reached the rock he found on it a letter which announced he had only nine months to live.

From this day the unfortunate Captain entertained no doubt as to supernatural influence in these occurrences. His fears were increased, and it was with anguish that he saw the approach of the fatal day upon which he was to receive the dreaded letters.

The day dawned at last, but nothing worth note took place, and as night came on, he thought the charm was dispelled. As he was returning home, congratulating himself on his good fortune, he was on the point of crossing a narrow bridge, when he saw a man who seemed inclined to dispute the passage. In him he recognised an old man, whose house had been destroyed by the orders of O'Gunnell at the time of his expedition against the rebels of Wexford. He asked him to make way for him, but the only answer he got was:

"I was waiting for you."

"You were waiting for me?" said O'Gunnell, "I have nothing to do with rebels and papists."

"Coward thou art!" said the man; "heed thy words, lest thou repent!"

The blood fled from O'Gunnell's face.

"I was never impudently insulted by any man. Here, take one of these pistols and defend thyself."

"Death would be preferable to the miserable life I lead. Thou hast deprived me of all that once made me happy, but I will not take advantage of the—"

"The hand of an assassin always trembles."

"Does my hand tremble?" asked the enraged O'Gunnell.

The man smiled, and, drawing a paper from his bosom, said, "I was requested to give you this. Ha! does your hand tremble now, you villain?"

O'Gunnell easily recognised the writing. His knees trembled and he fainted. When O'Gunnell recovered the man had gone, but O'Darcy was there, with his eyes riveted on his victim.

It would be tedious to enumerate the attempts made by O'Gunnell to rid himself of the phantom that haunted him. He traveled over the whole of England, visiting deserted places where no human being would think of searching for him; but the letters reached him regularly and increased his fears and remorse.

In this extremity he resolved to exile himself, and in consequence, took passage on a ship manned at Rotterdam, and set sail for Amsterdam, where a cousin had a mercantile house. He felt much relieved when the shores of England sank beneath the horizon. But that night a furious storm broke upon the ship. The billows roared, the wind blew with a terrible force. The ship was in imminent danger. O'Gunnell went on deck to see the sailors at work, when to his horror and dismay, a vivid flash of lightning revealed the presence of O'Darcy, who dropped a letter at the feet of the terrified Captain. To describe his anguish is out of our power. He now was convinced that he was lost!

When he arrived at Amsterdam, his cousin scarcely recognized in him the gay companion of former years. He found a man, old before the time; a livid hue sat on his furrowed cheek; he seldom spoke, and never smiled.

Anxious to learn the cause of this great change, the merchant questioned him; but all in vain. He could learn nothing, until one morning, as they were walking along the canal that crosses Heiren-Gat, one of the principle streets of Amsterdam, he questioned him more closely than usual, and getting no answer, he at last said:

"If it be remorse that haunt you, seek consolation in religion. Pray—that is all that you can do."

"Alas!" replied O'Gunnell, bitterly, "I cannot pray; even that consolation is refused. I have only one day to live! This evening at five o'clock I will be a corpse. My persecutor follows me, step, by step. To-night I must die, and still I cannot pray!" Here he shuddered. "There! There he is!" said he, pointing with a trembling hand and haggard look, at a young man who was walking on the opposite side of the canal. Saying this, he fell senseless to the ground.

O'Gunnell was carried home and placed in a bed. As it was thought his malady was caused by his excited imagination, a clock which was an half hour faster, was placed before his bed.

As time sped on, the state of the sick man became worse; but when the hour struck, a gleam of hope enlightened his dejected features. At that moment, however, a foot-fall is heard in the adjoining room. The door is thrown open with violence; a young man enters; his dress denoted an Irishman. O'Gunnell hearing the noise, arose to a sitting posture, uttered a groan, and sank back a corpse!

The brother of O'Darcy was there! He was revenged!

SENSIBLE ADVICE TO THE WOMEN.

An unfashionable coat or overcoat will keep one just as warm as the "latest cut;" and, dear woman, the hat which you wore last winter, if "done over," will answer well enough for this; nor is it absolutely necessary that you should lay aside your good cloak and shawl for a velvet mantilla. Of course, your children should be comfortably clad; but a plain cloth is just as warm as one more showy; while we always look upon a neat patch, not as a disgrace, but as the very highest compliment to the child's mother. It tells one more clearly than words could do it, of a frugal, thrifty, happy household existing somewhere, and ought not to be regarded as "premeditated poverty."

Why, madame, there are some old coats and pantaloons of your husband's up stairs, which might be altered over and make suits almost as good as new, for your younger children, or those of your indigent neighbors. You will have to take down these clothes pretty soon, however, if you mean to make any good use of them, as the moths have got at them already; for these active little creatures hate to see clothing lying idle; and so they are making your garments into beautiful vestments for themselves, just to show you how admirably they are capable of being turned to good account.—[Newark Advertiser.

SIR ISAAC NEWTON.

In the middle of the seventeenth century there was an English boy of mean and diminutive appearance, and behind all other boys of his age. He was constantly at the foot of his class; and verily it was believed that this boy would become only a bungler of some kind, for surely the soul of learning was not in him.

At the age of twelve a change was wrought in the character and fortune of the youth that had never obtained a "reward of merit," and was regarded by teacher and schoolmaster as an inferior. At this time an altercation took place between this backward boy and the one above him in the class, whereupon the latter treated him with indignity.

The pride of the boy was outraged. He could not revenge the insult by a blow, because he was too weak to cope with his opponent physically. How, then, shall he humble his assailant? He resolved to surpass him in study, to get above him in the class, and there remain, to look down upon his enemy, and clip from him the laurels he so industriously wears. He resolved—accomplished; became a most devoted scholar; commenced a career of glory; and Sir Isaac Newton appeared with a key to unlock the mysteries of motion, and to draft a truer chart of the stupendous universe.

Friendship doubles all our pleasures, and divides our pains.

A Wholesome Thought.

"Bring hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind," if you would have them healed of their many infirmities. We boldly and fearlessly assert that the Mustang Liniment will positively CURE Rheumatism. Let any who are afflicted with that most painful complaint try it thoroughly according to the directions, and if they are not cured, we will give them their money back. What more can we say? It will also cure the Piles. Thousands have tried it—and all were cured. Bruises, Sprains, Sores, or Eruptions, fade away as if touched by the magician's wand. Its application to a Burn or Scald acts like "oil upon the troubled waters," The tempest of pain and agony is soon spilled, and the patient is hushed to quiet and peaceful slumbers. "There is a balm for every wound," and that balm is the Mustang Liniment. Everybody that sells medicines keeps it for sale. "Hold your Horses," and if they are crippled, galled, or sprained, use the Mustang Liniment.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

MC'LEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLRED.
Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.
Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

His fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

CELESTIAL MARRIAGE.

BY ELDER ORSON PRATT.

It is quite unexpected to me, brethren and sisters, to be called upon to address you this forenoon; and still more so, to address you upon the principle which has been named, a plurality of wives.

It is rather new ground for me; that is, I have not been in the habit of publicly speaking upon this subject; and it is rather new ground to the inhabitants of the United States, and not only to them, but to a portion of the inhabitants of Europe; a portion of them have not been in the habit of preaching a doctrine of this description; consequently, we shall have to break up new ground.

It is well known, however, to the congregation before me, that the Latter-day Saints have embraced the doctrine of a plurality of wives, as a part of their religious faith. It is not, as many have supposed, a doctrine embraced by them to gratify the carnal lusts and feelings of man; that is not the object of the doctrine.

We shall endeavor to set forth before this enlightened assembly some of the causes why the Almighty has revealed such a doctrine, and why it is considered a part and portion of our religious faith. And I believe that they will not, under our present form of government, (I mean the government of the United States,) try us for treason for believing and practising our religious notions and ideas. I think, if I am not mistaken, that the constitution gives the privilege to all the inhabitants of this country, of the free exercise of their religious notions, and the freedom of their faith, and the practice of it. Then, if it can be proven to a demonstration that the Latter-day Saints have actually embraced, as a part and portion of their religion, the doctrine of a plurality of wives, it is constitutional. And should there ever be laws enacted by this government to restrict them from the free exercise of this part of their religion, such laws must be unconstitutional.

But, says the objector, we cannot see how this doctrine can be embraced as a matter of religion and faith; we can hardly conceive how it can be embraced only as a kind of domestic concern, something that pertains to domestic pleasures, in no way connected with religion. In reply, we will show you that it is incorporated as a part of our religion, and necessary for our exaltation to the fulness of the Lord's glory in the eternal world. Would you like to know the reasons? Before we get through, we will tell you why we consider it an essential doctrine to glory and exaltation, to our fulness of happiness in the world to come.

We will first make a few preliminary remarks in regard to the existence of man, to his first existence in his first estate; and then say something in relation to his present state, and the bearing which it has upon his next or future state.

The Mormons have a peculiar doctrine in regard to our pre-existence, different from the views of the Christian world, so called, who do not believe that man had a pre-existence. It is believed, by the religious world, that man, both body and spirit, begins to live about the same time that he is born into this world, or a little before; that then is the beginning of life. They believe that the Lord, by a direct act of creation, formed, in the first place, man out of the dust of the ground; and they believe that man is possessed of both body and spirit, by the union of which he became a living creature. Suppose we admit this doctrine concerning the formation of the body from the dust; then how was the spirit formed? Why, says one, we suppose it was made by a direct act of creation, by the Almighty himself; that he moulded the spirit of man, formed and finished it in a proper likeness to inhabit the tabernacle he had made out of the dust.

Have you any account of this in the Bible? Do the Scriptures declare that the spirit was formed at the time the tabernacle was made? No. All the tabernacles of the children of men that were ever formed, from remote generations, from the days of Adam to this time, have been formed out of the earth. We are of the earth earthy. The tabernacle has been organized according to certain principles and laws of organization, with bones, and flesh, and sinews, and skin. Now, where do you suppose all these tabernacles got their spirits? Does the Lord make a new spirit every time a tabernacle is made? If so, the work of creation, according to the belief of Christendom, did not cease on the seventh day. If we admit their views, the Lord must be continually making spirits to inhabit the tabernacles of the children of men; he must make something like one thousand millions of spirits every century; he must be working at it every day, for there are many hundreds of individuals being born into the world every day. Does the Lord create a new spirit every time a new tabernacle comes into the world? That does not look reasonable nor God-like.

But how is it, you inquire. Why the fact is that being that animates this body, that gives life and energy, and power to move, to act, and to think: that being which dwells within this tabernacle is much older than what the tabernacle is. That spirit which now dwells within each man and each woman of this vast assembly of people, is more than a thousand years old, and I would venture to say that it is more than five thousand years old.

But how was it made? when was it made? and by whom was it made? If our spirits existed thousands of years ago, if they began to exist, if there were a beginning to their organization, by what process was this organization carried on? Through what medium, and by what system of laws? Was it by a direct creation of the Almighty? Or were we framed according to a certain system of laws, in the same manner as our tabernacles? If we were to reason from analogy—if we admit anological reasoning in the question, what would we say? We should say that our spirits were formed by generation, the same as the body or tabernacle of flesh and bones. But what says revelation upon the subject? We will see whether revelation and analogy will agree.

We read of a certain time when the corner stones of the earth were laid, and the foundations thereof was made sure—of a certain time when the Lord began to erect this beautiful and glorious habitation, the earth; then they had a time of joy. I do not know whether they had instruments of music, or whether they were engaged in the dance; but one thing is certain, they had great joy, and the heavens resounded with their shouts; yea, the Lord told Job that all the sons of God shouted for joy, and the morning stars sang together when the foundations of this globe were laid.

The sons of God, recollect, shouted for joy, because there was a beautiful habitation being built, so that they could get tabernacles for their spirits to dwell in. Do you bring it home to yourselves, brethren and sisters? Do you realize that you and I were there? Can you bring it to your minds that you and I were among that happy number that shouted for joy when this creation was made? Says one, I don't recollect it. No wonder! for your recollection is taken from you, because you are in a tabernacle that is earthly; and all this is right and necessary. The same is written of Jesus Christ himself, who had to descend below all things. Though he had wisdom to assist in the organization of this world; though it was through him, as the great leader of all those sons of God, the earth was framed, and framed too, by the assistance of all his younger brethren; yet we find with all that great and mighty power he possessed, and the great and superior wisdom that was in his bosom, that after all his judgment had to be taken away; in his humiliation, his reason, his intelligence, his knowledge, and the power he was formerly in possession of, vanished from him as he entered into the infant tabernacle. He was obliged to begin down at the lowest principles of knowledge, and ascend upward by degrees, receiving grace for grace, truth for truth, knowledge for knowledge, until he was filled with all the fullness of the Father, and was capable of ruling, governing, and controlling all things, having ascended above all things. Just so with us; we that once lifted our united voices as sons and daughters of God, and shouted for joy at the laying of the foundation of this earth, have come here and taken tabernacles, after the pattern of our elder brother; and in our humiliation—for it is humiliation to be deprived of knowledge we once had, and the power we once enjoyed—in our humiliation, just like our elder brother, our judgment is taken away. Do we not read, also, in the Bible, that God is the Father of our spirits?

We have ascertained that we have had a previous existence. We find that Solomon, that wise man, says that when the body returns to dust, the spirit returns to God who gave it. Now all this congregation very well know, that if we never existed there we could not return there. I could not return to California. Why? Because I never have been there. If you never were with the Father, the same as Jesus was before the foundation of the world, you never could return there, any more than I could to the West Indies, where I have never been. But if we have once been there, then we can see the force of the saying of the wise man, that the spirit returns to God who gave it—it goes back where it once was.

Much more evidence might be derived in relation to this subject, even from the English translation of the Bible; but I do not feel disposed to dwell too long upon any particular testimony; suffice it to say, that the prophet Joseph Smith's translation of the fore part of the book of Genesis is in print, and is exceedingly plain upon this matter. In this inspired translation we find the pre-existence of man clearly laid down, and that the spirits of all men, male and female, did have an existence, before man was formed out of the dust of the ground. But who was their Father? I have already quoted a saying that God is the Father of our spirits.

In one sense of the word, there are more Gods than one; and in another sense there is but one God. The Scriptures speak of more Gods than one. Moses was called a God to Aaron in plain terms; and our Saviour, when speaking upon this subject, says: "If the Scriptures called them Gods unto whom the word of God came, why is it that you should seek to persecute me, and kill me, because I testify that I am the Son of God?" This, in substance, was the word of our Saviour; those to whom the word of God came are called Gods, according to his testimony. All these beings, of course, are one, the same as the Father and the Son are one. The Son is called God, and so is the Father, and in some places the Holy Ghost is called God. They are one in power, in wisdom, in knowledge, and in the inheritance of celestial glory; they are one in their works; they possess all things, and all things are subject to them; they act in unison; and if one has power to become the Father of spirits, so has another; if one God can propagate his species, and raise up spirits after his own image and likeness, and call them his sons and daughters, so can all other Gods that become like him do the same thing; consequently, there will be many Fathers, and there will be many families, and many sons and daughters; and they will be the children of those glorified, celestial beings that are counted worthy to be Gods.

Here let me bring, for the satisfaction of the Saints, the testimony of the vision given to our Prophet and Revelator, Joseph Smith, and Sidney Rigdon, on the 16th day of February, 1842. They were engaged in translating the New Testament by inspiration; and while engaged in this great work, they came to the 29th verse of the 5th chapter of John, which was given to them in these words—"they who have done good in the resurrection of the just; and they who have done evil in the resurrection of the unjust." This being given in different words from the English translation caused them to marvel and wonder; and they lifted up their hearts in prayer to God, that he would show them why it was that this should be given to them in a different manner; and behold, the visions of heaven opened before them. They gazed upon the eternal worlds, and saw things before this world was made. They saw the spiritual creation who were to come forth and take upon themselves bodies; and they saw things as they are to be in the future; they saw the celestial, terrestial, and telestial worlds, as well as the sufferings of the ungodly; all passed before them in this great and glorious vision. And while they were yet gazing upon things as they were before the world was made, they were commanded to write, saying, "this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God; and we heard the voice bearing record that he is the Only Begotten of the Father; that by him, and through him, and of him, the worlds are and were created; and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God." Notice this last expression, "the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God" (meaning the different worlds that have been created and made). Notice, this does not say that God, whom we serve and worship, was actually the Father himself, in his own person, of all these sons and daughters of the different worlds; but they are "begotten sons and daughters unto God;" that is, begotten by those who are made like him, after his image, and in his likeness; they begat sons and daughters, and begat them unto God, to inhabit these different worlds we have been speaking of. But more of this, if we have time, before we get through.

We now come to the second division of our subject, or the entrance of these spirits upon their second estate, or their birth and existence in mortal tabernacles. We are told that among this great family of spirits some were more noble and great than others, having more intelligence.

Where do you read that? says one. Out of the book of Abraham, translated from the Egyptian papyrus by the prophet Joseph Smith. Among the great and numerous family of spirits—"the begotten sons and daughters"—there are some more intelligent than others; and the Lord showed unto Abraham "the intelligences that were organized before the world was; and among all these there were many of the noble and great ones." And God said to Abraham, "thou art one of them, thou wast chosen before thou wast born." Abraham was chosen before he was born. Here then, is knowledge, if we had time to notice it, upon the doctrine of election. However, I may justly remark, it does not mean unconditional election to eternal life of a certain class, and the rest doomed to eternal damnation. Suffice it to say, that Abraham and many others of the great and noble ones in the family of spirits, were chosen before they were born, for certain purposes, to bring about certain works, to have the privilege of coming upon the stage of action, among the host of men, in favorable circumstances. Some came through good and holy parentages, to fulfill certain things the Lord decreed should come to pass, from before the foundation of the world.

The Lord has ordained that these spirits should come here and take tabernacles by a certain law, through a certain channel; and that law is the law of marriage. There are a great many things that I will pass by; I perceive that if I were to touch upon all these principles the time allotted for this discourse would be too short, therefore I am under the necessity of passing by many things in relation to these spirits in their first estate, and the laws that governed them there, and come to their second estate.

The Lord ordained marriage between male and female, as a law through which spirits should come here and take tabernacles, and enter into the second state of existence. The Lord himself solemnized the first marriage pertaining to this globe, and pertaining to flesh and bones here upon this earth. I do not say pertaining to mortality, for when the first marriage was celebrated, no mortality was there. The first marriage that we have any account of was between two immortal beings; death had no dominion, no power over them; they were capable of enduring for ever and ever in their organization. Had they fulfilled the law, and kept within certain conditions and bounds, their tabernacles would never have been seized by death; death entered entirely by sin, and sin alone. This marriage was celebrated between two beings. For how long? Until death? No. That was entirely out of the question; there could have been no such thing in the ceremony.

What would you consider, my hearers, if a marriage was to be celebrated between two beings not subject to death? Would you consider them joined together for a certain number of years, and that then all their covenants were to cease forever, and the marriage contract to be dissolved? Would it look reasonable and consistent? No. Every heart would say that the work of God is perfect in and of itself; and inasmuch as sin had not brought imperfection upon the globe, what God joined together could not be dissolved and destroyed, and torn asunder, by any power beneath the celestial world, consequently it was eternal; the ordinance of union was eternal; the sealing of the great Jehovah upon Adam and Eve was eternal in its nature, and was never instituted for the purpose of being overthrown and brought to an end. It is known that the Mormons are a peculiar people about marriage; we believe in marrying, not only for time, but for all eternity. This is a curious idea, says one, to be married for all eternity. It is not curious at all; for when we come to examine the Scriptures, we find that the very first example set for the whole human family, as a pattern instituted for us to follow, was not instituted until death, for death had no dominion at that time; but it was an eternal blessing pronounced upon our first parents. I have not time to explain further the marriage of Adam and Eve, but will pass on to their posterity.

It is true that they became fallen, but there is a redemption. But some may consider that the redemption only redeemed us in part, that is, merely from some of the effects of the fall. But this is not the case; every man and woman must see at once that a redemption must include a complete restoration of all privileges lost by the fall.

Suppose, then, that the fall was of such a nature as to dissolve the marriage covenant by death—which is not necessary to admit, for the covenant was sealed previous to the fall, and we have no account that it was dissolved—but suppose this was the case, would not the redemption be equally as broad as the fall, to restore the posterity of Adam back to that which they lost? And if Adam and Eve were married for all eternity, the ceremony was an everlasting ordinance, that they twain should be one flesh for ever. If you and I should ever be accounted worthy to be restored back from our fallen and degraded condition to the privileges enjoyed before the fall, should we not have an everlasting marriage seal, as it was with our first progenitors? If we had no other reasons in all the Bible, this would be sufficient to settle the case at once in the mind of every reflecting man and woman, that inasmuch as the fall of man has taken away any privileges in regard to the union of male and female, these privileges must be restored in the redemption of man, or else it is not complete.

What is the object of this union? is the next question. We are told the object of it; it is clearly expressed; for, says the Lord unto the male and female, I command you to multiply and replenish the earth. And, inasmuch as we have proved that the marriage ordinance was eternal in its nature, previous to the fall, if we are restored back to what was lost by the fall, we are restored for the purpose of carrying out the commandment given before the fall, namely, to multiply and replenish the earth. Does it say, continue to multiply for a few years, and then the marriage contract must cease, and there shall be no further opportunity of carrying out this command, but it shall have an end? No, there is nothing specified of this kind; but the fall has brought in disunion through death; it is not a part of the orignal plan; consequently, when male and female are restored from the fall, by virtue of the everlasting and eternal covenant of marriage, they will continue to increase and multiply to all ages of eternity, to raise up beings after their own order, and in their own likeness and image, germs of intelligence that are destined, in their times and seasons, to become not only sons of God, but Gods themselves.

This accounts for the many worlds we heard Elder Grant speaking about yesterday afternoon. The peopling of worlds, or an endless increase, even of one family, would require an endless increase of worlds; and if one family were to be united in the eternal covenant of marriage, to fulfill that great commandment, to multiply his species, and propagate them, and if there be no end to the increase of his posterity, it would call for an endless increase of new worlds. And if one family calls for this, what would innumerable millions of families call for? They would call for as many worlds as have already been discovered by the telescope; yea, the number must be multiplied to infinity in order that there may be room for the inheritance of the sons and daughters of the Gods.

Do you begin to understand how these worlds get their inhabitants? Have you learned that the sons and daughters of God before me this day are his own offspring—made after his own image; that they are to multiply their species until they become innumerable?

PETRIFIED HUMAN BODIES.

Mr. George Lane, who has charge of Woodland Cemetry, near this city, was called upon the other day by Mr. George P. Loy, who resides about three miles south-east of Germantown, in this county, to remove the remains of his first wife, a grandchild and other bodies, from a burying ground upon his farm and inter them in his lot in the Germantown Cemetry. The burying ground was made many years ago, upon the side of a little hill, in a field, some distance from the residence of Mr. Lane, in accordance with the custom in the Miami valley, at that day, when almost every property holder had a burying place upon his farm.

The first grave opened, was that of Mr. Loy's first wife, who was interred about twenty-four years ago. On reaching the coffin, it was found to be perfect—at least to appearance—and the men proceeded to completely unearth it, and raise it to the mouth of the grave. This, they soon ascertained to be a difficult task, and the small force engaged at it was compelled to procure assistance.

The aid of six men was at length obtained, and it required all their strength to raise the coffin from its bed, and place it upon the ground beside the grave. It was supposed by those engaged in the disinterment, that the coffin was filled with water, on account of its extreme heaviness, but after it was taken from the grave, it was measurably dry, and no signs of water could be discovered. The lid was then with difficulty removed, when it was ascertained that the body was in an excellent state of preservation.

The shroud, and indeed all the covering which was upon the body at the time of interment, twenty-four years ago, had disappeared—not a vistage of them remained. The body was perfect, except the right ankle joint, where the flesh seemed to have wasted away, and lay at the bottom of the coffin in a substance resembling ashes mixed with sand. With this exception of decay, the body and limbs exhibited the same perfectness of exterior they did when life and animation were in them.

The body, indeed, had been petrified! It was by some strange quality of the earth, and other causes of which we can form no conjecture, turned into stone of a drab, or more properly speaking, flesh color; and the chisel of the artist might imitate, but could not make so close a resemblance to the "human form divine." The smile which lighted up her countenance at the moment when death gently untied the cord which bound the soul to clay, still seemed to linger upon the face of stone!

The grave of the grandchild of Mr. Loy was next entered, and the coffin exhumed. It was also found to be very heavy, and when opened, the corpse presented much the same appearance as that of Mrs. Loy. It was not however, perfect although petrified. The body and limbs had about the same appearance they did in life, but the exterior had lost its life-like contour. The most remarkable thing connected with the remains of the child was, the hair upon the petrified skull was, to all appearance, the same as in life! Mr. Lane clipped a small ringlet from the crown and tied it into a knot. The other bodies which were exhumed—one or two in number—were only partially petrified, and were mostly decayed.—[Dayton Empire.

The late Earthquake down East.

In Portland, on Tuesday evening, the 16th inst, says a correspondent of the Portland Advertiser, at 15 minutes before 7 o'clock, an earthquake was distinctly noticed by my family. One of the small children was sufficiently frightened to commence crying. Another shock was felt in the course of the night, supposed to be before 11 o'clock. The concussion was not quite so marked as in the earthquake of July 17, 1853.

BETHEL, January 16.—A smart shock of what was apparently an earthquake occurred in this village this evening, at 37 minutes past 7 o'clock. It commenced with a heavy, rumbling noise for a few seconds, and was immediately followed by a rapid vibratory motion, sufficient to cause the crockery to rattle in the stores and dwelling houses for several seconds longer. Its apparent direction appeared to be from south to north, and continued nearly thirty seconds.

MOUNT VERNON, January 17.—This village was thrown into something of a consternation last evening, at a quarter before 7 o'clock, by an earthquake, which lasted a minute or a minute and a half to the great consternation of dealers in crockery. It is generally conceded that it came from the west, or north-west. We hear of it being experienced for miles around this place.

FREEPORT, January 17.—An earthquake was felt here last evening, about twenty minutes to 7 o'clock, which continued twenty or thirty seconds, and shook the houses and crockery very perceptibly.

A SHORT SERMON ON MANLINESS.—Learn from the earliest days to insure your principles against the peril of ridicule. You can no more exercise your reason if you live in the constant dread of laughter, than you can enjoy your life if you are in constant terror of death. If you think it right to differ from the times, and to make a point of morals, do it, however antiquated, however rustic, however pedantic it may appear; do it, not for insolence, but seriously and grandly—as a man who wore a soul of his own in his bosom, and did not wait till it was breathed into him by the breath of fashion.—[Sidney Smith.

FIRST NUMBERS OF THE LUMINARY.

We have many applications for the early numbers of the Luminary, which we are unable to supply, as the first and second numbers are sold out. If any of our subscribers have these numbers in a fair state of preservation, and would dispose of them, we shall be glad to purchase, that we may supply our anxious applicants with a complete file.

This number completes our first quarter, and quarterly subscribers are required to renew their subscriptions immediately.

OUR BRETHREN ABROAD.

Since our last paper was issued the eastern mail has reached us, bringing many interesting letters from our brethren who are traveling in Europe and in various parts of this land. Several letters have been received from old members of the church who have been scattered and driven into the holes and caves and rocks. and other outlandish corners of the earth, by their relentless persecutors. It was said by an old prophet that the Lord would send out hunters and fishers in the last days, who would hunt up and fish out his people from among the rocks and caves and dens of the earth. This may never be more literally fulfilled, perhaps, than it is at this time. Each week scares up some long lost frightened ones, who, hearing the voice of the good shepherd, are anxious to enter the general sheepfold for protection from the storms that threaten to overwhelm them, and their persecutors who have sought to destroy them. Erastus Babbit and several families have written us from Rock Island lately. They were so far lost as to our whereabouts that they directed their epistle to Omaha, Nebraska. They write as follows: "Having heard by the newspapers that you and several thousand of the brethren have gone to Kansas, we desire to learn if it be true that this place is appointed by the church as a gathering place for the Saints. If so, we feel determined, God being our helper, to start and try and get where we can hear the sound of that Gospel of which we have been so long deprived, for we are dying for want of that instruction that comes from the Lord through his priesthood. There is, indeed, among us, a famine for the word of God. We fast and pray, and cry continually unto Israel's God to deliver us; for while our brethren are growing in wisdom and in the knowledge of the truth, we like children, are confined to the alphabet. We want to be free; we want to dwell with our brethren; the signs of the times admonish us that the coming of the Saviour is at hand, and we can not feed on the husks that the swine do eat. Oh, brethren, help us by your prayers." Several families have written us stating their intention of striking the emigrant tract about the time of our spring emigration, and driving on to the valley. Our space will not permit us further to particularize cases of this kind, which would half fill our journal.

It must not be thought that all the sheep that are being scared up are of the true fold. Elder Spencer has lately scared up sheep or goats of a very questionable character at Cincinnati. Among them is one called Poo, who is spoken of by the Columbian as a respectable citizen, of 30 years standing; with such a testimonial, some thought him un brebis naturel, until opening his mouth, when, instead of bleating naturally, as the sheep, cried, like other wild goats, "Strang, Gladden, Beneemy." It has since been discovered that instead of following the true shepherd, he has been following a nigger, who, professing to be the Christ, led poor Poo by the nose, until Sambo (because of his lewdness) was compelled by a mob to run, leaving poor Poo in a puddle, where he remains to this day.

The editor of the Columbian has been to the Melodeon hall a few times, pricked up his long ears, brayed a little, and betrayed unmistakably his breeding—which has passed comparatively unnoticed by Elder Spencer. He doubtless thinks as we do, "that 'tis only an ass." Elder Spencer says it may be a fashion among the one-wife advocates to slander the appearance of all females; be this as it may he furnishes stern proof against ever being enticed into polygamy by any respectable females, and how he ever got so far as the alphabet of monogamy, may constitute a puzzle to those who read his paper.

Elder Banks is preaching in Springfield, with what success we have not yet learned. Elder Thos. Colburn gives us an interesting description of his travels through the States. He says: "Strang has played the devil in Michigan; he has sent his missionaries through the States to rob and plunder, and as he says, 'to suck the milk of the Gentiles.' They style themselves Mormons; their preaching is calculated to excite bad feelings; they proclaim publicly that they are going to possess the earth, and that the Gentiles will have to 'black their (the Mormons) boots, and become 'hewers of wood and drawers of water.' In Lapeer, where my debtor resided, a short time prior to my arrival, there were three stores broken into and robbed; they were taken in the act. One was Strang's first councillor; his name is Hix or Hickey; he gave them leg bail; the others were waiting their trial. These things have prejudiced the people against us. They think we are all of a flock. We could obtain only one house for preaching in the State. We called at Kirtland—found some tolerably good Saints considering circumstances, and many apostates. They have all become "rappers," and deny the Christ. They have taken possession of the temple, and they are no better than thieves and robbers."

Elder Van Cott writes us from Copenhagen, Denmark. He says that during his Presidency over that mission he has emigrated 1,200 souls, and over 530 this year, who are now en route to this land. We might have published the entire communication this week, but in consequence of its late arrival, and other accumulated matter on hand, it is unavoidably crowded out, with other valuable and interesting correspondence.

FOREIGN EMIGRATION.

Many are anxiously inquiring when the next company of Saints will arrive. We find it a difficult question to answer, for if the next ship should make as quick a trip as the Clara Wheeler, we shall have the next company here the latter end of this month, but if as protracted a one as the Germanicus last season, we need not expect it until some time in April; but for the better satisfaction of those who are expecting friends by this emigration, we give the names of several ships now on their way to Orleans, containing Saints, and the date of their departure, and leave each one to judge and decide for himself when to expect them in this city.

The James Nesmith, containing 440 Scandanavian emigrants and one English, cleared the docks on the 9th of January, under the Presidency of P. O. Hansen; the Rockaway, with 24 souls, under the Presidency of Elder Samuel Glasgow, on the 5th ult.; the Neva, about the 10th ult., with 13 souls, under the Presidency of Elder Thomas Jackson; the Charles Buck on the 17th ult., with 401 souls, under the Presidency of Elder Richard Ballantyne, returning to the valley from Madras. The steward on this ship, Jens Christian Nielson, is a Danish Elder, who was imprisoned with Br. Riser, in Hamburg.

NOTICE OF BOOKS.

The books advertised in a late number, which were expected by the Clara Wheeler, have been sent by the Charles Buck. They will probably be received about the middle of March.

In the absence of Elder Milo Andrus, application for books may be made to J. S. Cantwell, who will also act as agent for J. Linforth's illustrated route from Liverpool to Salt Lake. All applications by letter to be prepaid. Portraits of the first Presidency are now on hand for sale; price $1.25.

SALT LAKE MAIL.

The Salt Lake mail continues as usual to leave Independence, Mo., on the first of every month. All matter from St. Louis should be mailed at least one week before the first of the month.

Extract of a Discourse by Elder Milo Andrus.

There are a few in this city who would fain fall in with the doctrines of Gladden Bishop, and other apostates. I wish to speak a little on this subject, that those who step aside may understand that we know the stone on which they stumble their association with Gladden Bishop, Strang and other apostates, is merely an excuse for them to draw from the purity of the doctrines of Christ. It is not because the doctrine of the Saints is not true, nor that it is impure, nor is it from a lack of understanding of its principles; no, but because they find that within, themselves that shrinks from the celestial law; they find no sympathy in their hearts towards it; and when it comes in contact with them they feel it a burden, at which they shudder, and having a strong natural aversion to its strictness, they wish to escape from its influence—yet they wish to be considered honorable. A few in this congregation are trying to persuade themselves into the faith of Gladden Bishop's doctrines; but I know they cannot so persuade themselves, and if they say they can, it is because the truth is not in them. These individuals are those who cannot endure the purity of truth, as acknowledged by God, and as is manifested in the organization of this church, and who cannot appreciate and enjoy the blessings of the Lord. We would say to such, if the ways of the Lord are too strict for you, if you cannot endure the purity of our doctrines, throw them off at once, and don't be entangled with any such tomfoolery as Gladdenism. Strike out a course of your own, and say you will go to hell on your own responsibility; say honestly the doctrines are to pure for you, but that you don't wish to hinder others from following out the precepts of salvation, but that at present you cannot endure its laws; if you must go to hell go as honorable as you can.

As to this Gladden Bishop, I will say concerning him, he was a liar from the beginning. I am acquainted with his character. When he was sent on a mission down East, he said an angel came and ordained him to be a High Priest. He was called home, and for his lying disposition and his works of unrighteousness, he was cut off from the church. Upon a confession of his sins and promises to do better, he was re-admitted, and for his repeated acts of transgression was three times excommunicated, and was finally forbidden to enter the church again. I make these remarks on this system, not that they are worth so much notice, but for the sake of those who have not acquired proper information and instruction, that peradventure they may escape the delusions around them. I may say, for the information of some who think the tithing a hard law, that one condition of Gladdenism is that you shall give over to the Almighty all your substance, and I, Gladden, will control it. This is neither selfish nor oppressive is it? Poor fools! poor dupes! that can be led off by such a one, whose claims to truth and honesty, even, cannot be established, much less to a divine mission. Beneemyism, like Gladdenism, deserves only to be mentioned to be despised. They are akin, having one origin; and are equally ridiculous and unworthy; they need only to be united that they may receive one doom and one tomb together.

I hope you won't be uneasy, brethren, if you have to sit a little extra to-day; make yourselves as comfortable as possible, and when you are tired of sitting, stand up. I remember sitting in the Kirtland temple a day and a night. Some are such slaves to their appetites, that they would go to their dinner if an angel of God was dealing out the words of eternal life. They would follow their appetites before their God. These are but a few, the great body of the people here love the truth, because it is truth, and because it is the bread of life to them, and they feel like shouting Hosannah, Hosannah to God and the Lamb, for by the electricity of the spirit their understandings are lit up, so that they can understand pure wisdom and intelligence. One of our brethren since he came to this city, has been informed that the sine qua non of a good Latter-day Saint is to lie, cheat, steal, swear, chew tobacco, oppress and seduce the innocent. He was told that the authorities did this, and to make a first rate Latter-day Saint he must do all these things. This, I may tell you, has been misapplied; had it been applied to Gladdenism, it would have struck the rightful heirs; for it is the very essence of their spirit. It is the element they live in, will die in, and go to hell in. In dirt, filth and abomination they have fallen, and without a wonderful scouring, in that they will be resurrected.

The authorities of this church have always strove honestly for the good of this people; they have labored to bring the poor and oppressed to a land of freedom, and they offer free salvation to all mankind. The closer you approach to them, the more you will see they love you, and seek your welfare. Shall they always be rewarded with the murmurs of the discontented? I tell you nay; although it is written that "the wheat and the tares shall grow together until harvest;" the harvest will be here and the tares burned a great deal sooner than many of you are aware of. Did you ever think of this?

The day will come when those who desire to serve God in righteousness will have that privilege, and will not be subject to the corrupt influences of the ungodly; but at present the righteous have more or less to suffer with the wicked. Will these things always be so? Verily, no! Our children shall have the privilege of worshipping God and working righteousness, and not be infested with the ungodly. The wicked shall not always stand among the righteous and exert their damning influence to corrupt others. I hope my discourse will scare every black-hearted scoundrel from going West. If such are not afraid of going I will tell them they have reason to be.

I now ask this congregation, do you want to be saved? How are your bodies to be prepared to receive the pure ordinances of God? The ordinances that you have received heretofore have been in rivers, brooks, and the sea. We have been at liberty to do this in water, pure or impure, so long as we got the purest we could; but the apostle had his eye upon a time when "our spirits should be cleansed and our bodies washed with pure water." The ordinances of salvation in the Lord's house will have to be administered with pure water and with clean hands; your bodies, also, will have to be pure, before you receive the holy anointing, the sweet perfume of which will ascend up before God, and give pleasure to him, and he will roll back the veil of darkness, and cause the principles of light and truth to penetrate your hearts.

A few words on tithing. I will ask, for what do you pay your tithes? For whose benefit do we build a house unto the Lord? Is it for Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the prophets, or for Jesus? Oh, no; Jesus is exalted, has entered into his rest and sits upon his throne. These worthies paid their tithes long ago, and received their ordinances. We pay tithing that we may obtain salvation for ourselves, and our household, and that we may carry salvation to others. Suppose I ask you, husbands, if you are certain you can retain your wives in eternity? and you, wives, if you are certain of your husbands? Some of you may say, yes, I was married by Elder so and so, or by such an authority of the Lord. Did you ever ask yourselves what claim you had upon each other after this life, or whether you had any claim at all? If you have not done so before, you should now consider this; and if you view the subject aright, you will see reasons in abundance why you should pay your tithes, and build a holy temple unto the Most High, wherein a man can have sealed to him the wife he loves, and the children she has borne him; to have these blessings secured to you, with your posterity, for time and all eternity, is something to have a house built for. And is it impossible to secure this in any other place? Yes, it is as impossible as it would be for you to blow out the sun. You want to get the covenant that cannot be broken; an eternal covenant that shall secure to you eternal life, your wives, your children, that the blessings of the first resurrection cannot bo withheld from you. Nevertheless, if a man do wickedly he shall be destroyed in the flesh, but it shall not deprive him of the blessings whereunto he has been sealed, and no power can hold them from him, for they are given by the Almighty with an oath, and his word cannot be broken.

For want of proper information, many have come to wrong conclusions on this matter. Do not you, sisters, want to be given by Brigham Young, according to the revelations of God, to a man who shall be your saviour and head, to lead you on to eternal life, that shall be held responsible for your salvation, who shall be pledged under an oath to present you to your father. Don't you want such a husband? Have any of you sisters used your influence against your husband paying his tithes? Saying, if you pay your tithes I shall have to suffer for the want of a new dress, a gold chain, or some piece of furniture; saying, if you pay your money away in tithes the children cannot have their usual little trinkets, fine clothes, &c.

When you stand before the recording angel, when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed, shall it be said that you held back your husband from paying his tithes? That you uttered a protest in the dark, that you declared you would make a hubbub in the house, and turn all things up side down if he paid his tithes? Sisters, do you know how this matter stands? If you do not I will tell you. Br. Snow says we have to be plain and preach the things that are, and see if the people can bear it. Now, I'll tell you in what position you will stand. If you do this you will be servants to those that will keep the law. This is the whole of the matter; you will be servants to take messages, to arrange their dominions under their directions; you will be angels, but you will never have dominion or increase. Then walk up to the law; rise above narrowness and meanness; consider yourselves somebody; if you think it oppressive, take courage and meet it bravely. Repent and come forth with an open heart before the Almighty; get your hearts filled with his principles, and talk a little more of salvation—those principles that will save you from degradation and destruction.

To those whose wishes are to abide the law of God, and honor and live by the precepts of the Gospel, their course is particularly clear. Go forth and strengthen every brother and sister that are weak, and God shall bless you. If any are in doubt, or uncertainty, instruct them; let both male and female consider the responsibility that rests upon them; let not the sisters consider that they have no responsibility. Their responsibility and influence for good is great. They have in a general way exhibited more integrity than men; and are they not held accountable for the influence they exert? Yes. And they have opportunity of doing much good, and will if their minds are rightly disposed. Get, therefore, the spirit of God, and the rich treasures of heaven, and the power of God, and he will manifest to you his good pleasure. I feel now somewhat satisfied. I have spoken what has burdened my feelings more or less for several weeks on the subject of tithing.

To that portion of the Saints who have lately arrived, I have a word to say. They are wonderfully tried; they fancy everybody slights them; they are not taken care of. Some of them fancy there is unkindly feelings towards them. This is not correct. Remember this may be the day of your trial. If you are hungry, without habitations, or in unhealthy ones, it is not the kingdom of God that has thrown you there, you went there yourself. Do you expect your brethren, who are here in this crowded city, to find you extra accommodations free of cost? I will say in behalf of the greater portion of the brethren here, that they have reached out to you a friendly hand to do you good, yet in too many instances I hear the spirit of grumbling. The houses are in bad order, things are in a bad condition; where such spirits are there will be sickness. Recollect you have not risked everything yet; there are others who have suffered more than you. The pioneers to the valley had more to put up with than you have had; they had no one to receive them, nor any food that they could purchase, nor had they houses to go into; they have risked their lives for the Gospel's sake. Contrast your circumstances a little with what they have suffered in this the day of your trial, and repent or your grumbling will rob you of the blessings of the sacrifice. Let Israel cease grumbling, and let joy to the Lord and hosannah to the Highest be shouted by all people. Let such principles as these inspire and ennoble your hearts. Come life or come death, come cold or heat, plenty or poverty, be faithful to the end and you shall be saved. This is Mormonism; it is for this you came here, not for bread, houses, or land. This growling and grunting over a johnny-cake is no Mormonism. Even poverty has its blessings; it is always more dreaded at a distance than near at hand. Poverty can teach you many lessons that you could not learn otherwise, and remember before you can enjoy all things you must take your spell of poverty, and when you have past the ordeal, the treasures of earth could not buy your experience if it were marketable. Then put your trust in the Lord, and you shall be blessed and sustained; your bread shall be given, and your water shall be sure. May the God of Israel bless you continually, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

EMIGRANTS FOR UTAH.

OFFICE OF THE LUMINARY,
ST. LOUIS, February 16, 1855.

It is intended that the remainder of our European emigration destined for Utah the present year, will sail during the months of February and March, from Liverpool via Philadelphia, Cincinnati and St. Louis, to a point on the Missouri River, hereafter to be determined as a point of outfit for the plains. That portion of those now on their way hither, via New Orleans, as also those going from St. Louis, will be shipped hence to the same point on the Missouri. All others from the Eastern States, or British Provinces, who intend crossing the plains this season, will do well to concentrate at St. Louis, and report themselves at this office, during the month of April, or early in May, and embark hence under our general arrangements.

Those of Northern Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin, who choose to journey by land across the country, should also rendezvous at the same place on the Missouri,—which will hereafter be made known through the columns of the Luminary,—and there I will meet them personally, or by my agent, to organise them into companies, and give them such instructions, and adopt such regulations as will be necessary for their security in crossing the plains.

My assent will not be given for any Saint to leave the Missouri River, unless so organised in a company of at least fifty effectual well armed men, and that too under the command of a man appointed by me; one who will carry out my instructions.

Behold here is wisdom! "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." Every male capale of bearing arms, should provide himself with a good rifle, or other effectual fire-arms, and ammunition.

I will furnish at the point of outfit, for such as desire it, wagons, oxen, cows, guns, flour, bacon, &c.

Choice wagons made to order and delivered at the point of outfit, with bows, projections, &c., will be about $78, without projections, $75. Oxen, with yokes and chains, from $70 to $85 per yoke; cows from $16 to $25 each.

My experience, derived by six journeys over the plains, enables me to know what kind of teams and outfits are wanted for the plains.

Those wishing me to supply them in part or in whole, should lose no time in sending in their orders, which in all cases must be accompanied with certificates of deposit or drafts on some good banking house in the eastern cities or St. Louis, for the amount to be expended in filling such orders, the deficit or excess will be settled with the parties at the point of outfit.

One wagon, 2 yoke oxen and 2 cows will be sufficient (if that is the extent of their means) for a family of eight or ten persons, with the addition of a tent for every two or three families. Of course, with that amount of teams only the necessary baggage, provisions and utensils can be taken, and then the persons ride but little.

Those who have a surplus of means after paying their tithing and making provisions for their own outfit, should contribute to the "Perpetual Emigrating Fund," according to their means and faith, so that other long tried and faithful Saints who lack means, may receive aid through that channel.

In as much as many individuals and small families of limited means desire to hire a passage over the plains, I propose to fit out teams and emigrate all such from the Missouri river to Salt Lake in connection with P. E. Fund Emigrants, and under similar regulations, by their advancing $40 each, with the understanding that if, when the accounts shall have been adjusted by the P. E. Fund Co., it is ascertained that the cost of their emigration has exceeded that sum, the balances shall be paid in Utah, and if less it shall go the profits of the P. E. Fund. 100 pounds luggage, besides provisions, will be the extent allowed any P. E. Fund passenger, or $40 passenger; provided, that extra freight will be taken for the latter at $10 per 100 pounds.

All persons wishing to avail themselves of this opportunity, must send in to me their names, with the amount of their luggage, and the money as soon as they decide upon it, in order that active preparations may be making for the immense labors attending it.

THE following Joint Resolution has passed the House of Representatives authorizing the legislative assembly of Utah to continue their sessions for a term not exceeding sixty days, instead of forty days, as heretofore provided.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2, 1855.

MR. EDITOR—A bill has just passed the House of Representatives to establish the office of Surveyor General for Utah, with a view of having the lands of that Territory surveyed, &c. The bill in its original form proposed to donate to actual settlers a quarter section of land, and also to give two townships of land for a university, and every 16th and 36th section for school purposes; but a majority of the House was not for giving any land to the pioneers who first planted settlements in that desolate mountain country. Settlers in Oregon and New Mexico can have land donated to them, but those of Utah cannot, so that section was stricken out. A good deal of excitement prevailed while the bill was pending, and some pertinent remarks were made about the Mormons, polygamy, &c. There seemed to be a good number of members who felt willing for Utah to enjoy equal rights with the other Territories, and were willing to pass the bill in its original form, but the majority were not, and although the friends of the bill used every means they could to get it through without debate, thinking that to be the best, yet many members could not help manifesting their spleen toward Utah. However, some took a very honorable course, and was for citizens of Utah enjoying all the privileges of those of other Territories; among these I might name the Hon. John W. Jones, of Tenn., and others. The bill will go to the Senate, and then I should like to see the friends of Utah and equal rights, if there are any in that body, introduce again the section to donate land to actual settlers. Should it pass the Senate in that form the House might concur. During the excitement while the bill was pending, I observed that a great deal of respect was shown the Hon. J. M. Bernhisel, the delegate from Utah. He seemed to have a great deal of influence with many members.

About the time of the passage of this bill in the House, the Hon. S. G. Haven, a member from New York, gave notice he should introduce a bill to repeal all the laws of Utah allowing men to have more than one wife. Now I have never known that the Legislature of Utah had passed any such laws. The laws of that Territory say nothing about polygamy; but it is a part of the religious faith of the Mormons, and is allowed there by common consent of the people generally, so Mr. Haven may be saved all his trouble about passing laws on that subject in Utah.

The Senate for several days has been engaged upon a bill making appropriations for the army, also for raising three thousand volunteers for the protection of the frontiers and emigrants crossing the plains, but yesterday the section authorizing the President to accept the services of volunteers was stricken out, emigrants on the plains must expect to defend themselves.

Last night an interesting lecture was delivered by Mr. Marsh, formerly Minister to Constantinople, at the Smithsonian Institute, upon the subject of introducing the camel on our western prairies, by the government of the United States. The lecturer favored the experiment on a large scale as most likely to be successful.

I think there is now a bill before Congress on this subject, and it seems to meet favor with many. Let the experiment be carried out and prove successful, and we then shall see the fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah concerning the gathering of the children of Zion—"They shall come upon camels and upon dromedaries," &c. The lecturer seemed to understand the nature of camels and dromedaries very well; told many incidents that transpired while he was traveling with them in Arabia and other countries, showing their adaptation to the great plains of North America. He stated they were used in the torrid zone of both Asia and Africa, and in the temperate zone, even to the extreme Northern parts of Siberia. The lecture, I hope, will be published; if it is, and should meet my eye, I will send you a copy of it. Yours, &c., SALT LAKE.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Labors, Opposition, and Successes on the Frontiers—Plague among the Cattle.

Fort Beaufort, Sept. 15, 1854.

Br. Richards—I embrace the present opportunity of writing you a few lines, in order to inform you of some things which are transpiring in this part of the world.

As it regards the present prospects of the work of God in these dark regions of the earth, I would that I could write more favorably, that the people were more willing to hearken to the message which God in His mercy has sent to them, and repent and be baptized for the remission of sins, and embrace the fulness of the Everlasting Gospel, whereas but few as yet have complied. Of these, I have ordained one Elder, two Priests, and one Deacon, who are assisting all they can in spreading the Gospel, consequently the work is rolling on gradually, and the cloud of darkness, as well as priestcraft, is giving way to some extent.

No doubt, you are aware of my having been absent some ten months from Elders Haven and Smith, during which time I have been laboring on the frontiers of Africa, the borders of Kaffir land. I first labored two months in this place, and baptized nine, after which I spent some three or four months in Graham's Town. I procured a house, and held meetings three months of the time, which were well attended at first, but some seemed fully determined to break up the meetings. The excitement was so great, it caused many to stay away. I continued until none attended, except those who were disposed to make disturbance; and when they ascertained that no one else came, they were satisfied to stay away.

I received much insult and abuse; not only that, but two months of the time, I had no home, no place to get my regular meals, but I used to sleep in the room where I held meetings, and now and then had an invitation to dine or to tea. Although quite a number said that they believed that it was truth, that it was the work of God, yet none would repent.

We read that the devils believe and tremble—I often think the same is the case with many of this generation, especially when they see the judgments of God, spoken by the Prophets, which are being poured out, and sweeping over the whole earth, as is clearly demonstrated in this part.

There is a disease amongst the cattle here, called the lungsickness, which has been very destructive, and has caused much excitement amongst the people, as they cannot find out any preventive or cure. On its first appearance it was so alarming and destructive, that the Governor issued a proclamation, requiring all cattle attacked by the disease to be shot, and buried immediately, when it was ascertained, and authorizing any and every person to shoot all such cattle, when, or wherever found, and stating that parties were subject to a fine of five pounds, should they suffer any such cattle to run or to remain unburied. Consequently, thousands of cattle were shot, or died of the disease. Some men shot as high as fifty to a hundred head and upwards, but this did not stop the contagion. Thus all medicines and schemes proved unavailing. Finally, it was thought that inoculation would be a certain preventive, consequently, hundreds of cattle were inoculated all over the country, and in parts where the disease was unknown, but instead of this having the desired effect, it has been the very means of spreading the disease more rapidly.

Not only this, but the locusts have been sweeping over the country, destroying the grain and grass, in some parts leaving nothing for the beasts to eat.—Horses have died from eating the locust. Thus we see the word of God being fulfilled, spoken by modern as well as ancient Prophets, in spite of the puny arm of man, or even all the powers of earth and hell combined.

I will say, in conclusion, that I, in connection with the brethren, have visited several small villages, and have succeeded in getting openings in two or three places, and have preached several times. Some have concluded to be baptized, who I expect soon will be. My prayer is that Israel may be gathered, and Zion redeemed.

My best wishes and respects to my brethren, the Elders, and my associates in the kingdom of God.

I remain yours truly,

WM. WALKER.

Baptisms—Cattle Plague—Opposition—A Vision.

Port Elizabeth, Algoa Bay, Sept. 20, 1854.

Br. D. Richards—Having, through the mercy of our Heavenly Father, been called to embrace the Gospel, and being anxious for the salvation of those near and dear to me in the flesh, in the kingdom of our Lord and His Christ, I write this to desire you to instruct the Elder or President of the district to call upon my father, residing at Upton Cottage, Slough, Bucks, so that he may have the opportunity, if he has not already had, of hearing the Gospel, as revealed in these last days by the mouth of the Prophet of the Lord.

The work of the Lord is going ahead in this district. We have here ten baptized members, and many more are investigating the truth; so much so, that in a month or so, in all probability, our numbers will increase three fold. Many of the Dutch farmers are investigating the truth. They are greatly scared by reason of the plague which is raging amongst their cattle; also the early appearance of the locust, which has destroyed the crops in the upper district; likewise the probable outbreak of the Kaffirs next Christmas. Surely the hand of the Lord is on this land.

Elder L. I. Smith, whose labors and journeyings among them are unremitting, is generally very well received, both by Dutch and English. He preaches the Gospel as the only antidote for all their woes.—The Lord is backing up the message of His servants with unmistakable arguments.

At Uitenhage, about twenty miles from here, brother Smith has held many interesting meetings. Of course the accompanying persecutions have followed. One evening he had many of the head ladies and gentlemen of the place, when a fellow broke a bottle of asafœtida in the room, which caused such a fumigation as to effectually break up the meeting. At another time a volley of rotten eggs and turnips was hurled; but the devil reckoned without his host, to think that by such means he could put a stop to the work of the Lord.

On our second meeting in this place, I had my windows broken by a volley of potatoes. We had a mob of about three or four hundred men and boys, who amused themselves for about two hours, but it was no go. The work still goes on, and this very row only convinced me that this was the Church of Christ, and forthwith I embraced the Gospel. The main reason I had was a vision I had before brother Smith came here, at which time it was revealed to me, in answer to prayer, that I should not join myself to any of the sects of the day, but that one should come from America, whom I should here, and that I should join myself to the Church of which he was a minister, my beloved brother, Elder L. I. Smith, being then present before my view. When he came, I was not long in obeying, and can now bear my testimony to the truth of these things before the world, and also of having received the blessing of healing in my own family, likewise the answer to my prayers years ago, in having been ordained a teacher in the Church of Christ, and enjoying much of the Spirit of the Lord, whereby I am enabled to stand up and proclaim to others this Gospel.

Praying the Lord to bless and prosper you in His great and glorious work, I am, dear brother, yours in the Everlasting Covenant,

G. F. W. KERSHAW.

Incidents in the History of Joseph Smith.

G. S. L. City, U. T. Nov. 1, 1854.

Mr. Editor—Sir: Sometime during our stay in Liberty jail, an attempt was made to destroy us by poison. I suppose it was administered in either tea or coffee, but as I did not use either, I escaped unhurt, while all who did were sorely afflicted, some being blind two or three days, and it was by much faith and prayer that the effect was overcome.

We never suffered ourselves to go into any important measure without asking Br. Joseph to inquire of the Lord in relation to it. Such was our confidence in him as a prophet, that when he said, "Thus saith the Lord," we were confident it would be as he said; and the more we tried it, the more confidence we had, for we never found his word fail in a single instance.

A short time before we were to go to Davis county for trial, word came to us that either General Atchison or Doniphan would raise a military force, and go with us to protect us from the wrath of that people. The matter was discussed by the brethren, (except Br. Joseph,) and they naturally enough concluded it would be best; and although I had nothing to say, I concurred with them in my feelings. Br. Hyrum asked Br. Joseph what he thought of it. Br. Joseph hung his head a few moments and seemed in a deep study, and then raised up and said, "Br. Hyrum, it will not do; we must trust in the Lord; if we take a guard with us, we shall be destroyed."

This was very unexpected to us, but Br. Hyrum remarked, "If you say it in the name of the Lord, if we take a guard with us we will be destroyed; but if we put our trust in the Lord we shall be safe, and no harm shall befall us, and we shall be better treated than we have been since we have been prisoners."

This settled the question, and all seemed satisfied, and it was decided that we should have no extra guard, and they had only such a guard as they chose for our safe-keeping. When we arrived at the place where the court was held, I began to think he was mistaken for once, for the people rushed upon us en masse, crying, "Kill them; G—d d—n them, kill them." I could see no chance for escape, unless we could fight our way through, and we had nothing to do it with. At this Br. Joseph, at whom all seemed to rush, rose up and said, "We are in your hands, if we are guilty we refuse not to be punished by the law;" hearing these words, two of the most bitter mobocrats in the county, one by the name of Wm. Peniston, and the other Kinney or McKinney, I do not remember which, got upon benches, and began to speak to the people, saying, "Yes, gentlemen, these men are in our hands; let us not use violence, but let the law have its course; the law will condemn them, and they will be punished by it; we do not want the disgrace of taking the law into our own hands," &c.

In a very few minutes they were quieted, and they seemed now as friendly as they had a few minutes before been enraged. Liquor was procured, and we all had to drink in token of friendship. This took place in the court room, (a small log cabin about 12 feet square,) during the adjournment of the court; and from that time until we got away, they could not put a guard over us who would not become so friendly that they dare not trust them, and the guard was very frequently changed. We were seated at the first table with the judge, lawyers, &c., and had the best the country afforded, with feather beds to sleep on—a privilege we had not before enjoyed in all our imprisonment.

On one occasion, while we were there, the above named Peniston, partly in a joke and partly in earnest, threw out rather a hard insinuation against some of the brethren. This touched Joseph's feelings, and he retorted a good deal in the same way, only with such power that the earth seemed to tremble under his feet, nnd said, "Your heart is as black as your whiskers," which were as black as any crow. He seemed to quake under it, and left the room.

The guard, who had become friendly, were alarmed for our safety, and exclaimed, "Oh, Mr. Smith, do not talk so; you will bring trouble upon yourself and companions." Br. Joseph replied, "Do not be alarmed; I know what I am about." He always took up for the brethren, when their characters were assailed, sooner than for himself, no matter how unpopular it was to speak in their favor.

Yours, as ever,

ALEXANDER McRAE.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Washington, Feb. 13.—Mr. Douglas introduced a bill from the House, establishing a line of subterranean telegraph, merely granting the right of way; amendments were concurred in and the bill passed.

On motion of Mr. Gwinn, the Senate bill for the better protection of life and health on board of passenger vessels, was re-committed to the committee of Commerce.

The Indian Appropriation bill was then taken up and debated at considerable length on various motions to amend and finally postponed.

Mr. Rusk from the committee of Post office introduced a bill providing a system for registering money letters agreeably to the recommendation of the Post Master General. A number of Territorial bills were introduced and passed, and also, a bill to accommodate the U. S. court and Post office at Baltimore.

Mr. Chase introduced a bill to increase the salaries of the collectors of Toledo and Cleveland.—Various other bills were considered, when, finally the Senate being without a quorum, adjourned.

House—This being the day set apart for the consideration of business pertaining to committees.

Mr. Bocock from the Naval Committee reported a bill for the more efficient discipline of the Navy; he explained its provisions and the bill then passed.

The bill creating a retired list for the Navy was then taken up and after a long debate the bill passed.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE ASIA.

Halifax, February 14.—The royal mail steamship Asia, Capt. Lott, arrived here en route for Boston, at an early hour this evening. She left Liverpool on Saturday, the 3d inst. Her advices are one week later than those received by the Atlantic.

The political news is of a highly important character.

As was predicted, at the departure of the Atlantic, the resignation of Lord John Russell was followed by that of the entire Aberdeen Ministry, and up to the latest moment, no new Cabinet had been constructed. Lord Derby has been invited by Her Majesty to form a new Ministry, but his efforts were unsuccessful.

RUSSIA.

A letter from St. Petersburg, in the Hamburg News, says:—"The corps of grenadiers, as well as the corps of infantry, will be reinforced by two battalions for each regiment from the depots. This measure proves that there is no idea of peace."

The Ost Deutsch Post of Vienna has the following from Odessa, Dec. 12th:—"The great event of the day is the recall of the Grand Dukes Michael and Nicholas, which has been decided on. They will probably return to the theatre of war next spring with the Czar himself. It is stated that the Princes have been recalled, because Prince Menschikoff complained at St. Petersburg that his plans were thwarted by other influence. It is said that Prince Menschikoff has received an autograph letter from the Emperor, in which the latter thanks the army for the fidelity and devotedness which it has hitherto shown, and expresses a conviction that Russia, protected by so brave an army, need not fear the whole world. By the side of these congratulations, which have been made public in an order of the day, the autograph letter contained remonstrances of a nature to prevent the recurrence of events similar to those of the 5th. The tone of the letter is so severe that it is very clear that the result of that day has produced a very deep impression on the Czar.

Warsaw, Dec. 24.—The Russian Government has forbidden the export of sheep-skins for the remaining term of the war. Notice is also given, that any Russian subject resident in the kingdom of Poland who shall quit the Imperial domains without leave, will be punished by the confiscation of his estate and effects.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 23.—An announcement has been published by the Russian Government, that the Czar highly disapproves the practice hitherto pursued by his "children," of stabbing, mutilating, and murdering the foe who may have been wounded in action. Hereafter any Russian officer or soldier who may be caught in the act, shall suffer death.

Miscellaneous.

INTERESTING FROM WASHINGTON.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE ON INDIAN HOSTILITIES.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of War upon the subject of Indian hostilities. The employment of volunteer troops, as suggested by the Secretary, seems to afford the only practicable means of providing for the present emergency.

There is much reason to believe that other cases, similar in character to those particularly referred to in the accompanying papers, will at an early day require vigorous measures, and the exhibition of a strong military force. The proposed temporary provision to meet a special demand, so far from obviating, in my judgment, only serves to illustrate the urgent necessity of an increase of the regular army, at least to the extent recommended in my late annual message.

Unless by the plan proposed, or some other equally effective, a force can be early brought into the field, adequate to the suppression of existing hostilities, the combination of predatory bands will be extended, and the difficulty of restoring order and security greatly magnified. On the other hand, without a permanent military force of sufficient strength to control the unfriendly Indians, it may be expected that hostilities will soon be renewed, and that years of border warfare will afflict the country, retarding the progress of settlement, exposing emigrant trains to savage barbarities, and consuming millions of the public money.

The state of things made known in various letters, recently received at the War Department, extracts from a portion of which are herewith enclosed, is calculated to augment the deep solicitude which this matter has for some time past awakened, and which has been earnestly expressed in previous messages, and in the annual report of the Secretary of War.

I respectfully submit that the facts now communicated urgently call for immediate action on the part of Congress. FRANKLIN PIERCE.

Washington, January 15, 1855.

* * * * * * * * *

Since the date of my annual report, intelligence received from officers on the frontier, and through the Department of the Interior from the Indian Agents, and other sources, show that the Indians of the Western prairies and mountains are in hostile and defiant attitude, that several of those tribes have entered into combination for the purpose of making a general war upon the whites, during the approaching spring and summer, and these tribes can bring into the field from four to six or eight thousand warriors. Had the increase of the army which was urged in my report of December, 1853, been at an early period authorized, the force at the disposal of the Department would have been sufficient to prevent these combinations, and in all probability would have preserved the lives of many valuable citizens from Indian massacre. This measure, however, has not been acted on, and at this advanced period, should the bills now pending in Congress be passed, it will be found too late to organize a regular enlisted force and place it in position in season to prevent the anticipated attack, or to suppress it until after much mischief shall have been done. The only course now left the Department in anticipation of the proposed increase, is the employment of a volunteer force to co-operate with such of the regular troops as can be collected for the present emergency, and it is accordingly recommended that authority be asked of Congress to call into service 3,000 mounted volunteers to be organized into companies, squadrons and battalions, and to serve for a period of eighteen months, unless sooner discharged

J. W. DAVIS,

Extract of a letter from Alfred J. Vaughn Indian Agent.

The Brunes from the Platte, the Ouh-ha-pas, Blackfeet, Sioux, a part of the Yanctonies, Sans Arc, and Muncougus bands of the Missouri, openly bid defiance to the threats of the government, and go so far as to say they do not fear the result should soldiers come to fight them. The rest of the tribes in this agency are disposed to do right, and many of them at once would unite in exterminating the above bands. Several of them have come voluntarily to me, and stated that any information that might be required, should a force be sent here to chastise these, they will hold themselves in readiness to give any information relative to their locality and movements in their power, and render any assistance that may be required of them.

Something should be done to show the power of the government, and that speedily; otherwise, there is no knowing the result. Every man's life in the country is in jeopardy. Place yourself in my situation while on a visit to the Crows of the Yellow Stone river, with a war party of seventy-one stout, athletic, blood-thirsty Blackfeet warriors traveling after you for days, with equivalent to no protection at all, waiting momently for an opportunity to present itself to scalp you or any one they could reach with their guns; then witness the conduct of the Une-pa-pas and Blackfeet Sioux, with one hundred or more lodges, waiting on the banks of the river for one month for my return, and in full council assembled, peremptorily, and with every manifestation of hostility, telling me they did not want any of their Great Father's presents, that they preferred red scalps and stealing horses to anything he could give them; then witness the conduct of the portion of the Yanctonies of some one hundred lodges on the banks of the river. I stopped, through feelings of humanity and courtesy, to have a talk with them and make them a present of some coffee, sugar, flour, tobacco, powder and balls, which I purchased at Fort Clarke, knowing they would expect something. I spent some two hours or more with them in council—all of which they appeared to receive with marked respect and attention, when, to my utter astonishment, a noted scoundrel, called and known as Red Calf, drew from his scabbard a huge knife, and cut each one of the sacks, and scattered the contents furiously in every direction. He then threw the tobacco, powder and balls into the river, and in quick succession, forty or fifty guns were fired off, all around and about me.

I am sure that nothing but my coolness and apparent firmness saved me; and the feeling lecture I gave them, and the certainty of their being punished for such conduct, caused the interview to end as favorable as it did.

The traders in this district had all proceeded, with their outfits for trade, to the different points usually occupied by them, previous to receiving an account of the Laramie affair, and before my return to this point; otherwise, I should not have permitted them to leave their forts. I would recall them, but this cannot be done without an armed force to protect them, for should the Indians be apprised, they would, without doubt, seize upon everything they have.

In the hope that the foregoing statement of facts will cause the immediate action of the Government, I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

A. J. V.

CONGRESSIONAL SQUABBLE.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald, of Feb. 1st, says:

A little incident occurred in the House to-day, that varied the dull monotony of every day business. General Jo. Lane, of Oregon, and Mr. Farley, of Maine, had a clinch upon the floor, but it resulted in nothing serious. Mr. Phelps was in the chair, the House being in Committee of the Whole, and Gen. Lane had the floor, discussing the territorial bills before the House. Territorial business was the order of the day. During General Lane's discussion, Mr. Farley, of Maine, arose and proposed to introduce a bill to establish a line of telegraph through the Territories, and asked for its immediate discussion, insisting that such a bill came properly within territorial business. General Lane replied, saying, that questions of more importance affecting the territories were before the House, and the bill of Mr. Farley could not be discussed. While General Lane was proceeding in his remarks, Mr. Farley arose and called him to order.

General Lane, somewhat excited—"What do you mean, sir, by calling me to order?"

Mr. Farley, looking daggers—"I have as much right to call you to order, as you have to call me to order."

General Lane, looking fierce as Ajax defying the lightning—"You are a liar, sir."

Mr. Farley, looking Lane's fierceness back again with interest—"You are a d——d liar, sir."

Here the belligerants made a simultaneous rush towards each other, clinched a la Bill Poole and Morrissey, and blows were struck on both sides. The House just at this moment was in an interesting state of excitement. The timid rushed for the doors.—The bold stood up, gave their hair an extra push backwards, and rushed for the scene of action. The Chairman, somewhat excited, rapped, rapped, and rapped, and called "order," "order," "order;" but there was no order. A few who were a little anxious for some fun of the kind said nothing, but silently looked on to enjoy the show. After a pass of blows between the pugilists, three or four gentleman interfered, and separated the parties. No blood was drawn on either side, and the parties returned to their sides, like two gamecocks that both retained their spurs unfleshed. After the separation of the parties, the Chairman succeeded in obtaining order, and in a short time the wheels of Government rolled on as if nothing had happened to clog them. Farley's bill was given up, and the discussion of the Railroad bill was progressed with. This little incident will give a topic to Washingtonians for some days to come.

FROM A REGIMENTAL OFFICER.

Camp before Sebastopol, Dec. 22, 1854.

This morning I was on a working party in the trenches from 4 A. M. till 4 P. M., and to-morrow I am on picket again, and so on. Now, what manner of man, think you, can stand this? To-day we went at 4 o'clock in the morning to break fresh ground for a battery, and we were kept there until 4 in the afternoon, while about 200 guns ranged over us; and when we were returning, a body of riflemen opened fire, and peppered us well. However, only two men were hurt; but the wonder was that any of us escaped. This was a piece of work that ought only to have been attempted at night, but we have a commanding officer over all our movements here who leads us into more danger than any one but a madman would, and all for nothing. Besides, which who ever heard of making a battery so close to the enemy, as I have described, without first making an approach?

Yet so it was, and a similar system seems to pervade everything. As for Sebastopol, I have nothing to say about it, but that it is as safely Russian as ever; for miles, it seems nothing but one vast battery bristling with cannon. The houses are all loopholed for musketry, and the windows taken out and sand-bags put in, while every street is swept by a gun at its head; and Menschikoff says that before we get it, we shall pay such a price for it as will make us wish we never had it—that is, supposing (which he thinks quite impossible) we ever do get it. Our guns have been quite silent, "shut up," we call it, for a month past. What is brewing, if anything, we know not, and the feeling here is, that certain people, having made a "botch" of the whole affair, are puzzled now what to do with it. The Russians have been contented with sorties, and that sort of thing, lately, but there is little doubt that they are mustering for a great attack. Come when it may, they will be driven back; but then at what a cost!

Peace in Europe a Probability.—A special correspondent of the New York Times writes from London by the Canada, that the pending negotiations are likely to result in ending the war with Russia and restoring peace to Europe. The writer states that he has come to the conclusion within the last month. The Allies, he intimates, are for peace, and their propositions are believed to be such as can be accepted by Russia. The Czar, in his late manifesto, declares that he is not desirous of further shedding of blood, and will not reject any propositions and conditions of peace, provided they be compatible with the dignity of his empire and the welfare of his subjects. The Allies, it is said, have provided for this compatibility, and hence the opinion of the correspondent that peace is probable.

The Mormons.—Extensive preparations are being made in this city for the accommodation of the Mormon emigrants who are expected to start from this place in the spring. Large warehouses are going up, and our merchants are enlarging their stores, to make room for goods, which are required for their wants.

The emigration to Salt Lake this season, will be much larger than usual, and as all emigrants to that place start from our point, we may expect a lively time here in the spring. The progress of the Mormons is one of the most extraordinary of the day.—They continue to increase and multiply at an amazing rate, and their missionaries in all parts of the world are reaping a rich harvest. Let their number be ever so large, they will find ample accommodations at the great starting place—Atchison.—[Squatter Sovereign.

FREAKS OF THE WEATHER.

On the 6th inst. the cold was intense along the Atlantic coast. In New York, the mercury fell to zero, and, in the State, from "twenty to forty degrees" below. At Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, the thermometer was six degrees below zero; and, at Pottsville, nine degrees below. In Cincinnati, it was snowing all day.

On the same day, in St. Louis, about the latitude of Philadelphia, the mercury was far above the freezing point. The temperature was very mild; the sky clear and sun bright. In short, it was a "spring day." The warmth of the weather relaxed the icy fetters which have for the last three weeks bound our river; the "gorges" broke up; and the ice drift floated off toward the tropics.

The Chinese are a queer people to go to market. A friend at Canton writes 'Kemlich Van Tassel' that a neighbor of his had just laid in his winter's provisions—a hind quarter of a horse and two barrels of bull dogs. The latter salted to keep.

Decidedly Spiritual.—The enormous quantity of forty-seven million gallons of whisky, rum, and brandy, and thirty-five million gallons of strong beer, were made in the United States during the last year—being more than three gallons apiece to every man, woman, child, and sucking baby, black and white, in the country.

Poetical Department.

THERE'S A STAR IN THE WEST.

There's a Star in the West that shall never go down,
Till the records of valor decay;
We will at worship its light, though it is not our own,
For liberty burst in its ray:
Shall the name of a Washington ever be heard
By a freeman, and thrill not his breast?
Is there one out of bondage that hails not the word
As the Bethlehem Star of the West?

"War, war to the knife! be enthralled, or ye die!"
Was the echo that woke in his land;
But it was not his voice that promoted the cry,
Nor his madness that kindled the brand.
He raised not his arm, he defied not his foes,
While a leaf of the olive remained;
Till goaded by insult, his spirit arose
Like a long-baited lion unchained.

He struck with firm courage the blow of the brave,
But sighed oe'r the carnage that spread;
He ignominantly trampled the yoke of the slave,
But wept for the thousands that bled.
Though he threw back the fetters and headed the strife,
Till man's charter was fairly restored,
Yet he prayed for the moment when freedom and life
Would no longer be pressed by the sword.

Oh, his laurels were pure; and his patriot name
In the page of the future shall dwell,
And be seen in all annals, the foremost in fame,
By the side of a Hofer and Tell.
Record not my song, for the wise and the good
Of strong Britons, have nobly confessed,
That this was the glory, and ours was the blood
Of the deeply-stained field of the West.

EVIL SPEAKING.

We heartily endorse the following article upon evil speaking which we coppy from the Millennial Star, and we recommend it to the careful consideration and faithful practice of every Latter-day Saint. It is the most beautiful dissertation we have ever had upon the subject, and we hope it will be appreciated by our readers:

"The practice of evil-speaking has become so prevalent among nearly all grades of society, and so interwoven with every stage of life, that very few escape the guilt consequent upon such a practice.—To some, the evil created by those who indulge in this most detestable vice may appear trifling, but it only seems to those who have become so habituated to it as not to discern its baneful tendency. Perhaps there is no sin more frequently committed by those, who profess to be Saints, than that of evil-speaking; they seem yet not to have learned the mighty influence that can be wielded by the tongue for the happiness or misery of mankind; they seem not to appreciate that a single word often destroys that confidence which must reign supreme where happiness exists and often produces more extensive injury than almost any evil act that can be performed; they have not yet learned to watch their words as though each one was an instrument of life or of death—a blessing or a curse, to those who come under its influence.

"The law of God is very strict in its requirements upon this point, so much so that no man or woman can be saved who will indulge in such wickedness—I say wickedness, because it is a flagrant violation of the law. The organization of the holy Priesthood provides an officer whose special duty it is to see that there is no evil-speaking practised among the Saints, neither backbiting, nor hardness, which also exists in connexion with the practice. The law of the Holy Priesthood, if strictly enforced, would sever the one guilty of so foul a crime from the fellowship of Saints; and when the officers of the kingdom of God officiate in perfectness before the Lord, this sin, and all its evil consequences, will perfectly cease.

"It should be the study of the Saints, in every position of life, to guard against this evil, especially if occupying a prominent one among the people—one where their every act and word is expected to be a pattern for the people. We have had occasion to observe the importance of this, particularly with Pastors and Presidents who are called upon to succeed one another in their ministerial labours. The principle is readily detected when one Elder succeeds another, disapproves of his predecessor's course and general policy, and makes it his first business to demolish the existing policy of conducting affairs, publicly disapproving of them, and establishing new plans of operation after his own peculiar views and inclinations.

"When such a course is taken, it is generally accompanied with remarks and expressions calculated to destroy the work and influence of those who have been before, though their exertions may have been great, their labours unceasing, and their motives pure, according to the light and knowledge they possessed, as much so peradventure as any who could succeed them. God is sure to bestow upon all such faithful laborers a just reward. When one Elder is called upon to succeed another, it should be his study to guard the interests and influence of that brother, as he would wish to have his own guarded under like circumstances. No man should suppose, for a moment, that the policy adopted by another is not a righteous one, simply because it differs from that which he would choose. There may be differences of administrations and still all be prompted by the same Lord, as there are diversities of gifts by the same Spirit. The Apostle informs us that "there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all." Now if this be true, who can sit in judgment upon his brother, because he has his peculiar mode of operation, and disapprove of it, without coming under condemnation? Men differ in their dispositions, temperament, and spirit, and God is the author of that difference; and no one has a right to speak against his brother, because God has thus endowed him, while his desires and efforts are to maintain righteousness in the midst of mankind and build up the kingdom of God. Although this principle is true, and essential to be observed, it does not interfere in the least with the responsibility which rests upon every one to take proper steps to correct evils wherever they exist, but an individual's course may not necessarily be productive of evil, because it differs in some respects from another's.

"When a man has learned the truth, he will know that if he takes the liberty to speak against his brother, the same measure will be meted out to him in return, if God be true. A man may do evil, and that action be very limited in its influence, while another may speak of that evil to those who can have no control over it, and produce an almost unlimited amount of injury, both of a public and a private nature.

"The time is past, that men can claim a relationship with the people of God, and indulge in such practices without being despised; and where Teachers do their duty, such persons, whether high or low, will find themselves in danger of being called to an account, and, peradventure, dealt with according to the laws of the Church; while all those who are acquainted with the higher order, and the covenants of the holy Priesthood, will feel a degree of indignation, which they alone are capable of feeling.

"No one in the kingdom of God has a right to publish or make known the faults of others, only to those who have the right and power to reprove and chastise the transgressors. Nothing but evil can result from any other course, and to add evil to evil is the work of a wicked one. If a man discovers iniquity in his brother, whom it is his right to counsel and reprove, it is his duty to use his utmost endeavors to reclaim that brother, by himself alone; if he does not succeed, it is then his privilege to communicate the facts in the case to the Teacher, whose right it is, by virtue of his office, to see that there is no iniquity in the Church, and they unitedly may strive to save the wayward; if they both cannot prevail upon the guilty to turn from his transgressions, then he may be brought before the Church, and be lawfully dealt with. Until these steps are taken, no one has a right to publish and declaim against the wickedness of a brother. This is a degree of protection from exposure, which God has wisely provided for all who are in His Kingdom, that they may have an opportunity of correcting their faults before they have an evil tendency upon others.—When a man discovers iniquity or waywardness in one whom he has no power to call to an account, it is his privilege to make it known to one who has jurisdiction in the case, then his skirts are clear, and and the sin rests with those who have power to put it away, and by whom an atonement must be made that shall deliver them from the justice of the law. Saints must observe these principles in all their intercourse one with another, or they can never inherit eternal lives.

That man who appreciates his blessings as coming from his God, and feels to acknowledge His hand in all things, will ever be found in wisdom's paths, and they are peace. Let all evil-speaking cease from among the Saints; they corrupt good manners and morals, and destroy good feelings. Be mindful of each other's happiness, love one another, and seek the salvation of all; then shall you appear as saviours upon Mount Zion, to enjoy the rich reward of the redeemer, and become the ministers of our God for ever!

A MELTING STORY.

No other class of men in any country possess that facetious aptness of inflicting a good-humoured revenge which seems to be innate with a Green Mountain Boy.

One winter evening, a country store-keeper in the Mountain State was about closing his doors for the night, and while standing in the snow outside, putting up his window-shutters, he saw through the glass a lounging, worthless fellow within, grab a pound of fresh butter from the shelf, and hastily conceal it in his hat.

The act was no sooner detected, than the revenge was hit upon, and a very few moments found the Green Mountain store-keeper at once indulging his appetite for fun to the fullest extent, and paying off the thief with a facetious sort of torture for which he might have gained a premium from the old inquisition.

"I say, Seth!" said the store-keeper, coming in, and closing the door after him, slapping his hands over his shoulders, and stamping the snow off his shoes.

Seth had his hand upon the door, his hat upon his head, and the roll of new butter in his hat, anxious to make his exit as soon as possible.

"I say, Seth, sit down; I reckon, now, on such a night as this, a leetle something warm wouldn't hurt a fellow; come, sit down."

Seth felt very uncertain: he had the butter, and was exceedingly anxious to be off, but the temptation of "something warm" sadly interfered with his resolution to go. This hesitation, however, was soon settled by the right owner of the butter taking Seth by the shoulders and planting him upon a seat close to the stove, where he was in such a manner cornered in by barrels and boxes, that while the country grocer sat before him there was no possibility of his getting out, and right in this place sure enough the store-keeper sat down.

"Seth, we'll have a little warm Santa Cruz," said the Green Mountain grocer, as he opened the stove-door, and stuffed in as many sticks as the space would admit. "Without it you'd freeze going home such a night as this."

Seth already felt the butter settling down closer to his hair, and jumped up, declaring he must go.

"Not till you have something warm, Seth; come, I've got a story to tell you, too; sit down, now;" and Seth was again pushed into his seat by his cunning tormenter.

"Oh! it's confounded hot here," said the petty thief, again attempting to rise.

"Sit down—don't be in such a plaguy hurry," retorted the grocer, pushing him back in his chair.

"But I've got the cows to fodder, and some wood to split, and I must be agoin'," continued the persecuted chap.

"But you musn't tear yourself away, Seth, in this manner. Sit down; let the cows take care of themselves, and keep yourself cool; you appear to be fidgetty," said the grocer, with a leer.

The next thing was the production of two smoking glasses of hot rum toddy, the very sight of which, in Seth's present situation, would have made the hair stand erect upon his head, had it not been well oiled and kept down by the butter.

"Seth, I'll give you a toast now, and you can butter it yourself," said the grocer, yet with an air of such consummate simplicity, that poor Seth still believed himself unsuspected. "Seth, here's a Christmas goose—(it was about Christmas time)—here's a Christmas goose well roasted and basted, eh? I tell you, Seth, it's the greatest eating in creation.—And, Seth, don't you never use hog's fat or common cooking butter to baste with; fresh pound butter, just the same as you see on that shelf yonder, is the only proper thing in nature to baste a goose with; come, take your butter—I mean, Seth, take your toddy."

Poor Seth now began to smoke, as well as to melt, and his mouth was as hermetically sealed up as though he had been born dumb. Streak after streak of the butter came pouring from under his hat, and his handkerchief was already soaked with the greasy overflow. Talking away as if nothing was the matter, the grocer kept stuffing the wood into the stove, while poor Seth sat bolt upright, with his back against the counter, and his knees almost touching the red-hot furnace before him.

"Dreadful cold night this," said the grocer.—"Why, Seth, you seem to perspire, as if you were warm! Why don't you take your hat off? Here, let me put your hat away!"

"No!" exclaimed poor Seth at last, with a spasmodic effort to get his tongue loose, and clapping both hands upon his hat; "No! I must go; let me out; I ain't well; let me go!" A greasy cataract was now pouring down the poor fellow's face and neck, and soaking into his clothes, and trickling down his body into his very boots, so that he was literally in a perfect bath of oil.

"Well, good night, Seth, if you will go;" said the humorous Vermonter; adding, as Seth got out into the road, "Neighbour, I reckon the fun I've had out of you is worth a ninepence, so I shan't charge you for that pound of butter!"

Emigration Statistics.—During the past year the number of foreigners arriving at New York, according to the report of the Commissioners of Emigration, was 319,223. Of these, 176,906 were Germans, 82,302 Irish, 30,578 English, and 29,357 from other countries.

The Commissioners sent 4,164 into the country, supplied temporarily with food and lodging 51,569! procured situations for 13,694, buried 1,632, and shipped 444 back to Europe.

The German emigration was 57,342 more than in the previous year, and a still greater increase on those preceding. The Swiss emigration had also doubled. The arrivals from Ireland were 30,862 less than in 1853—and much less than 1851, the year of the Great Exodus, when 163,730 arrived.

A Hosier Editor, complaining that he could not sleep one night, summed up the cause as follows:

"A wailing baby of seventeen days—a dog howling under the window—a cat fight in the alley—a colored serenade at the shanty over the way—a tooth-ache—and a pig trying to get in at the back door."

"The more you knock," the Frenchman said, "the more I won't let you in."

A Wholesome Thought.

"Bring hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind," if you would have them healed of their many infirmities. We boldly and fearlessly assert that the Mustang Liniment will positively cure Rheumatism. Let any who are afflicted with that most painful complaint try it thoroughly according to the directions, and if they are not cured, we will give them their money back. What more can we say? It will also cure the Piles. Thousands have tried it—and all were cured. Bruises, Sprains, Sores, or Eruptions, fade away as if touched by the magician's wand. Its application to a Burn or Scald acts like "oil upon the troubled waters." The tempest of pain and agony is soon spilled, and the patient is hushed to quiet and peaceful slumbers. "There is a balm for every wound," and that balm is the Mustang Liniment. Everybody that sells medicines keeps it for sale. "Hold your Horses," and if they are crippled, galled, or sprained, use the Mustang Liniment.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of

MAN OR ANIMALS,

Requiring an External Application.

Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. Westbrook:—

Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,

J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.

Mr. G. W. Westbrook:—

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,

JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

Mr. G. W. Westbrook:

Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.

I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out. I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Crofon, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.

GEORGE RACKSTER.

MC'LEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLean—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLRED.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.

Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my hat,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

CELESTIAL MARRIAGE.

BY ELDER ORSON PRATT.

Let us say a few words, before we leave this part of the subject, on the promises made to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. The promises were—Lift up your eyes, and behold the stars; so thy seed shall be, as numberless as the stars. What else did he promise? Go to the sea-shore, and look at the ocean of sand, and behold the smallness of the particles thereof, and then realize that your seed shall be as numberless as the sands. Now let us take this into consideration. How large a bulk of sand would it take to make as many inhabitants as there are now upon the earth? In about one cubic foot of sand, reckoning on the grains of a certain size, there would be a thousand million particles. Now that is about the estimated population of our globe. If our earth were to continue 8,000 years, or eighty centuries, with an average population of one thousand millions per century, then three cubic yards of sand would contain a greater number of particles than the whole population of the globe, from the beginning, until the measure of the inhabitants of this creation are complete. If men then cease to multiply, where is the promise made to Abraham? Is it fulfilled? No. If that is the end of his increase, behold, the Lord's promise is not fulfilled. For the amount of sand representing his seed, might all be drawn in a one-horse cart; and yet the Lord said to Abraham, thy seed shall be as numerous as the sand upon the sea-shore; that is, to carry out the idea in full, it was to be endless; and, therefore, there must be an infinity of worlds for their residence. We cannot comprehend infinity. But suffice it to say, if all the sands on the sea-shore were numbered, says the prophet Enoch, and then all the particles of the earth beside, and then the particles of millions of earths like this, it would not be a beginning to all thy creations; and yet thou art there, and thy bosom is there; and thy curtains are stretched out still. This gives plenty of room for the fulfillment of the promise made to Abraham, and enough to spare for the fulfillment of similar promises to his seed.

We read that those who do the works of Abraham are to be blessed with the blessings of Abraham. Have you not, in the ordinances of this last dispensation, had the blessings of Abraham pronounced upon your heads? O yes, you say, I well recollect, since God has restored the everlasting priesthood, that by a certain ordinance these blessings were restored upon our heads—the blessings of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Why, says one, I never thought of it in this light before. Why did you not think of it? Why not look upon Abraham's blessings as your own, for the Lord blessed him with a promise of seed as numerous as the sand upon the sea-shore; so will you be blessed, or else you will not inherit the blessings of Abraham.

How did Abraham manage to get a foundation laid for this mighty kingdom? Was he to accomplish it all through one wife? No. Sarah gave a certain woman to him whose name was Hagar, and by her a seed was to be raised up unto him. Is this all? No. We read of his wife Keturah, and also of a plurality of wives and concubines, which he had, from which he raised up many sons. Here, then, was a foundation laid for the fulfillment of the great and grand promise concerning the multiplicity of his seed. It would have been rather a slow process if Abraham had been confined to one wife, like some of those narrow, contracted nations of modern Christianity.

I think there is only about one-fifth of the population of the globe that believe in the one-wife system; the other four-fifths believe in the doctrine of a plurality of wives. They have had it handed down from time immemorial, and are not half so narrow and contracted in their minds as some of the nations of Europe and America, who have done away with the promises, and deprived themselves of the blessings of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The nations do not know anything about the blessings of Abraham; and even those who have only one wife cannot get rid of their covetousness, and get their little hearts large enough to share with a numerous family; they are so penurious, and so narrow and contracted in their feelings, that they take every possible care not to have their families large; they do not know what is in the future, nor what blessings they are depriving themselves of, because of the traditions of their fathers; they do not know that a man's posterity, in the eternal worlds, are to constitute his glory, his kingdom, and dominion.

Here, then, we perceive, just from this one principle, reasoning from the blessings of Abraham, alone, the necessity—if we would partake of the blessings of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—of doing their works; and he that will not do the works of Abraham, and walk in his footsteps, will be deprived of his blessings.

Again, let us look at Sarah's peculiar position in regard to Abraham. She understood the whole matter; she knew that, unless seed was raised up to Abraham, he would come short of his glory; and she understood the promise of the Lord, and longed for Abraham to have seed. And when she saw that she was old, and fearing that she should not have the privilege of raising up seed, she gave to Abraham Hagar. Would Gentile Christendom do such things now-a-days? O no; they would consider it enough to send a man to an endless hell of fire and brimstone. Why? Because tradition has instilled this in their minds as a dreadful, awful thing.

It matters not to them how corrupt they are in female prostitution, if they are lawfully married to only one wife; but it would be considered an awful thing by them to raise up a posterity from more than one wife; this would be wrong indeed; but to go into a brothel, and there debauch themselves in the lowest haunts of degradation all the days of their lives, they consider only a trifling thing; nay, they can even license such institutions in Christian nations, and it passes off very well.

That is tradition; and their posterity have been fostered and brought up in the footsteps of wickedness. This is death, as it stalks abroad among the great and popular cities of Europe and America.

Do you find such haunts of prostitution, degredation, and misery here, in the cities of the mountains? No. Were such things in our midst, we should feel indignant enough to see that such persons be blotted out of the page of existence. These would be the feelings of this community.

Look upon those who committed such iniquity in Israel in ancient days; every man and woman who committed adultery were put to death. I do not say that this people are going to do this, but I will tell you what we believe—we believe it ought to be done.

Whoredom, adultery, and fornication have cursed the nations of the earth for many generations, and are increasing fearfully upon the community; but they must be entirely done away from those who call themselves the people of God; if they are not, wo! wo! be unto them also; for "thus saith the Lord God Almighty," in the Book of Mormon, "Wo unto them that commit whoredoms, for they shall be thrust down to hell!" There is no getting away from it. Such things will not be allowed in this community; and such characters will find that the time will come that God, whose eyes are upon the children of all men, and who discerneth the things that are done in secret, will bring their acts to light; and they will be made an example before the people; and shame and infamy will cleave to their posterity after them, unto the third and fourth generation of them that repent not.

How is this to be prevented? for we have got a fallen nature to grapple with. It is to be prevented in the way the Lord devised in ancient times; that is, by giving to his faithful servants a plurality of wives, by which a numerous and faithful posterity can be raised up, and taught in the principles of righteousness and truth; and then, after they fully understand those principles that were given to the ancient Patriarchs, if they keep not the law of God, but commit adultery and transgressions of this kind, let their names be blotted out from under heaven, that they may have no place among the people of God.

But again, there is another reason why this plurality should exist among the Latter-day Saints. I have already given you one reason, and that is, that you might inherit the promises made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and receive a continuation of your posterity, that they may become as numerous as the sands upon the sea-shore. There is another reason, and good one, too. What do you suppose it is? I will tell you; and it will appear reasonable to every man and woman of a reflecting mind. Do we not believe, as the Scriptures have told us, that the wicked nations of the earth are doomed to destruction? Yes, we believe it. Do we not also believe, as the prophets have foretold, concerning the last days, as well as what the new revelations have said upon the subject, that darkness prevails upon the earth, and gross darkness upon the minds of the people; and not only this, but that all flesh has corrupted its way upon the face of the earth; that is, that all nations, speaking of them as nations, have corrupted themselves before the Most High God, by their wickedness, whoredoms, idolatries, abominations, adulteries, and all other kinds of wickedness? And we furthermore believe, that according to the Jewish prophets, as well as the Book of Mormon, and modern revelations given in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, that the sword of the vengeance of the Almighty is already unsheathed, and stretched out, and will no more be put back into the scabbard until it falls upon the head of the nations until they are destroyed, except they repent. What else do we believe? We believe that God is gathering out from among these nations those who will hearken to his voice, and receive the proclamation of the Gospel, to establish them as a people alone by themselves, where they can be instructed in the right way, and brought to the knowledge of the truth. Very well; if this be the case, that the righteous are gathering out, and are still being gathered from among the nations, and being planted by themselves, one thing is certain—that that people are better calculated to bring up children in the right way, than any other under the whole heavens. O yes, says one, if that is the case, if you are the people the ancient prophets have spoken of, if you are the people that are guided by the Lord, if you are under the influence, power and guidance of the Almighty, you must be the best people under heaven to dictate the young mind; but what has that do with the plurality of wives? I will tell you. I have already told you that the spirits of men and women all had a previous existence, thousands of years ago, in the heavens, in the presence of God; and I have already told you that among them are many spirits that are more noble, more intelligent than others, that were called the great and mighty ones, reserved until the dispensation of the fulness of times, to come forth upon the face of the earth, through a noble parentage that shall train their young and tender minds in the truths of eternity, that they may grow up in the Lord, and be strong in the power of his might, be clothed upon with his glory, be filled with exceeding great faith; that the visions of eternity may be opened to their minds; that they may be prophets, priests, and kings to the Most High God. Do you believe, says one, that they are reserved until the last dispensation for such a noble purpose? Yes; and among the Saints is the most likely place for these spirits to take their tabernacles, through a just and righteous parentage. They are to be sent to that people that are the most righteous of any other people upon earth; there to be trained up properly, according to their nobility and intelligence, and according to the laws which the Lord ordained before they were born. This is the reason why the Lord is sending them here, brethren and sisters; they are appointed to come and take their bodies here, that in their generations they may be raised up among the righteous. The Lord has not kept them in store for five or six thousand years past, and kept them waiting for their bodies all this time to send among the Hottentots, the African negroes, the idolatrous Hindoos, or any other of the fallen nations that dwell upon the face of this earth. They are not kept in reserve in order to come forth to receive such a degraded parentage upon the earth; no, the Lord is not such a being; his justice, goodness, and mercy will be magnified towards those who were chosen before they were born; and they long to come, and they will come among the Saints of the living God; this would be their highest pleasure and joy, to know that they could have the privilege of being born of such noble parentage.

Then is it not reasonable and consistent that the Lord should say unto his faithful and chosen servants, that had proved themselves before him all the day long, that had been ready and willing to do whatsoever his will required them to perform, take unto yourselves more wives, like unto the patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, of old—like those who lived in ancient times, who walked in my footsteps, and kept my commands? Why should they not do this? Suppose the Lord should answer this question, would he not say, I have here in reserve noble spirits, that have been waiting for thousands of years to come forth in the fulness of times, and which I designed should come forth through these my faithful and chosen servants, for I know they will do my will, and they will teach their children after them to do it. Would not this be the substance of the language, if the Lord should give us an answer upon this subject?

But then another question will arise; how are these things to be conducted? Are they to be left at random? Is every servant of God permitted to run here and there, seeking out the daughters of men as wives unto themselves without any restriction, law, or condition? No. We find these things were restricted in ancient times. Do you not recollect the circumstance of the prophet Nathan coming to David? He came to reprove him for certain disobedience, and told him about the wives he had lost through it; that the Lord would give them to another; and he told him if he had been faithful, that the Lord would have given him still more, if he had only asked for them. Nathan the Prophet, in relation to David, was the man that held the keys concerning this matter in ancient days; and it was governed by the strictest laws.

So in these days; let me announce to this congregation that there is but one man in all the world, at the same time, who can hold the keys of this matter; but one man has power to turn the key to inquire of the Lord, and to say whether I, or these my brethren, or any of the rest of this congregation, or the Saints upon the face of the whole earth, may have this blessing of Abraham conferred upon them; he holds the keys of these matters now, the same as Nathan in his day.

But, says one, how have you obtained this information? By new revelation. When was it given, and to whom? It was given to our prophet, seer, and revelator, Joseph Smith, on the 12th day of July, 1843; only about eleven months before he was martyred for the testimony of Jesus.

He held the keys of these matters; he had the right to inquire of the Lord; and the Lord has set bounds and restrictions to these things; he has told us in that revelation that only one man can hold these keys upon the earth at the same time; and they belong to that man who stands at the head to preside over the affairs of the church and kingdom of God in the last days. They are the sealing keys of power, or in other words, of Elijah, having been committed and restored to the earth by Elijah, the prophet, who held many keys, among which were the keys of sealing to bind the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers; together with all the other sealing keys and powers pertaining to the last dispensation. They were committed by that angel who administered in the Kirtland temple, and spoke unto Joseph, the prophet, at the time of the endowments in that house.

Now let us inquire what will become of those individuals who have this law taught unto them in plainness, if they reject it? [A voice in the stand, "they will be damned."] I will tell you: they will be damned, saith the Lord God Almighty, in the revelation he has given. Why? Because where much is given much is required; where there is much knowledge unfolded for the exaltation, glory and happiness of the sons and daughters of God, if they close up their hearts, if they reject the testimony of his word, and will not give heed to the principles he has ordained for their good, they are worthy of damnation, and the Lord has said they shall be damned. This was the word of the Lord to his servant Joseph, the prophet, himself. With all the knowledge and light he had, he must comply with it, or, says the Lord unto him, you shall be damned; and the same is true with regard to all those who reject these things.

What else have we heard from our President? He has related to us that there are some damnations that are eternal in their nature; while others are but for a certain period, they will have an end, they will not receive a restoration to their former privileges, but a deliverance from certain punishments; and instead of being restored to all the privileges pertaining to man previous to the fall, they will only be permitted to enjoy a certain grade of happiness, not a full restoration. Let us inquire after those who are to be damned, admitting they will be redeemed, which they will be, unless they have sinned against the Holy Ghost. They will be redeemed, but what will it be to? Will it be to exaltation, and to a fulness of glory? Will it be to become the sons of God, or Gods to reign upon thrones, and multiply their posterity, and reign over them as kings? No, it will not. They have lost that exalted privilege forever; though they may, after having been punished for long periods, escape by the skin of their teeth; but no kingdom will be conferred upon them. What will be their condition? I will tell you what revelation says, not only concerning them that reject these things, but concerning those that through their carelessness, or want of faith, or something else, have failed to have their marriages sealed for time and for all eternity; those that do not do these things, so as to have the same ordinances sealed upon their heads by divine authority, as was upon the head of old father Adam, if they fail to do it through wickedness, through their ungodliness, behold, they also will never have the privilege of possessing that which is possessed by the Gods that hold the keys of power, of coming up to the thrones of their exaltation, and receiving their kingdoms. Why? Because, saith the Lord, all oaths, all covenants, and all agreements, &c., that have been made by man, and not by me, and by the authority I have established, shall cease when death shall separate the parties; that is the end; that is the cessation; they go no further; and such a person cannot come up in the morning of the resurrection and say, behold, I claim you as my wife; you are mine; I married you in the other world before death, therefore you are mine: he cannot say this. Why? Because he never married that person for eternity.

Suppose they should enter into covenant and agreement, and conclude between themselves to live together to all eternity, and never have it sealed by the Lord's sealing power, by the holy priesthood, would they have any claim on each other in the morning of the resurrection? No; it would not be valid or legal, and the Lord would say, it was not by me; your covenants were not sealed on the earth, and therefore they are not sealed in the heavens; they are not recorded on my book; they are not to be found in the records that are in the archives of eternity; therefore the blessings you might have had are not for you to enjoy. What will be their condition? The Lord has told us. He says these are angels; because they keep not this law they shall be ministering servants unto those who are worthy of obtaining a more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; wherefore, saith the Lord, they shall remain singly and separately in their saved condition, and shall not have power to enlarge themselves, and thus shall they remain for ever and ever.

Here, then, you can read their history; they are not Gods, but they are angels or servants to the Gods. There is a difference between the two classes; the Gods are exalted, they hold keys of power, are made kings and priests, and this power is conferred upon them in time, by the everlasting priesthood, to hold a kingdom in eternity that shall never be taken from them worlds without end; and they will propagate their species. They are not servants; for one God is not to be a servant to another God; they are not angels; and this is the reason why Paul said, Know ye not, brethren, that we shall judge angels? Angels are inferior to the Saints who are exalted as kings. These angels who are to be judged, and to become servants to the Gods, did not keep the law, therefore, though they are saved, they are to be servants to those in a higher condition.

What does the Lord intend to do with this people? He intends to make them a kingdom of kings and priests, a kingdom unto himself, or in other words, a kingdom of Gods, if they will hearken to his law. There will be many who will not hearken; there will be the foolish among the wise, who will not receive the new and everlasting covenant in its fulness; and they never will attain to their exaltation; they never will be counted worthy to hold the sceptre of power over a numerous progeny, that shall multiply themselves without end, like the sand upon the sea-shore.

We can only touch here and there upon this great subject, we can only offer a few words with regard to this great, sublime, beautiful, and glorious doctrine, which has been revealed by the prophet, seer, and revelator, Joseph Smith, who sealed his testimony with his blood, and thus revealed to the nations things that were in ancient times, as well as things that are to come.

But while I talk the vision of my mind is opened; the subject spreads forth and branches out like the branches of a thrifty tree; and as for the glory of God, how great it is! I feel to say, Hallujah to his great and holy name; for he reigns in the heavens, and he will exalt his people to sit with him upon thrones of power, to reign for ever and ever.

GREAT EXCITEMENT IN LOS ANGELES.

The citizens in arms—popularity of Judge Lynch—the Mayor an advocate of Lynch Law.

We take the following from an extra of the Southern Californian, published in Los Angeles:

The arrival of the Goliah with the order from the Judge of the Supreme Court, granting a stay of proceedings in the cases of Brown and Lee, and leaving Alvitre to suffer the penalty which by our court has been awarded alike to them all, has been received by our citizens with general indignation.

It will be recollected, that on the occasion of the murder of Clifford by Brown, that the citizens were only deterred from hanging the latter, in consequence of the very general confidence reposed in Judge Hayes and his court; and it was distinctly understood at the time, that if sentence of death were passed upon him by the said court, that no outside or foreign influence should interfere to prevent its execution.

Interested parties have, however, thought proper to thwart the popular will in this matter, and we are now reaping its consequences.

Last night, Thutsday evening, one of the largest and most excited mass meetings ever convened in our city, was held in the immense dining saloon of the Montgomery. Upwards of six hundred persons, from all parts of the county, were gathered within and without—numbers being unable to effect an entrance—composed of all classes.

Among the numerous speeches made on the occasion, was one by his honor the Mayor, in which he unequivocally proclaimed himself in favor of hanging Brown and Alvitre together. His remarks were listened to with great attention. It will be recollected that mainly to his exertions at the former meeting is due the fact that Brown was turned over to the authorities, and he pledged himself that if justice was not done, he would resign his office, and assist with the people in carrying out the wishes of the public. We presume he will resign, and if so, there can be no doubt that he will be re-elected without a dissenting voice.

A committee was chosen, composed of Don Juan Sepulbeda, Capt. Hunter and S. K. Labatt, to draft resolutions, who reported the following:

Resolved, that whereas the time for the execution of Brown and Alvitre will have arrived to-morrow, the 12th day of January, 1855; and as, by some means, Brown has received a respite, and Alvitre none; and as they are both equally guilty—we, the committee, think they should be executed at the same time, and on the same drop.

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to devise means to carry into effect the above resolutions, which committee was chosen, and the meeting adjourned to Friday morning.

TEN O'CLOCK.—This meeting is now in session; extensive and determined preparations are being made to further the designs of the excited populace.

The sheriff's party having spiked the different pieces of ordinance in the city during the past night, smiths are engaged in drilling them out. The sheriff is determined to do his duty in carrying out the law at all hazards, having yesterday made his will and prepared himself for every emergency. Some fifteen or twenty men are prepared to stand by him to the death.

ONE O'CLOCK, P. M.—Two thousand men have gathered from all portions of the county, well armed and determined. One hundred dollars has been paid this morning to the proprietors of the shooting gallery, by Californians, for loading their revolvers. Masses of people congregating from all quarters.—Stores closed.

HALF-PAST ONE.—All business ceased; immense numbers of people are constantly arriving.—There cannot be less than five thousand now in and about the city. Crowds are thronging the hill tops and about the jail yard.

The multitude, in overwhelming masses are approaching the jail. Excitement increasing to a fearful extent.

THREE O'CLOCK.—Alvitre hung by the Sheriff; but the rope broke. He was, however, again put up and swung off.

Whereupon, Mayor Foster and Capt. Hunter took the vote of the masses on Brown's case. One universal shout of "aye!" responded to the question whether or not he shall be forthwith executed?

The end not yet.

News has just arrived of the committal of the King boys in the Monte, for murder by Squire Martin.

At a quarter after three o'clock Mayor Foster resigned, and asked the mob if they would wait and let Brown be hung by the authorities, or if they wanted to hang him immediately. The answer was hanging. The mob then made a rush for the outer gate of the jail, and succeeded in effecting an entrance, after which they commenced breaking open the doors with axes, the sheriff in the meantime having left.

At last accounts—half-past three—they were still breaking down the jail cells in search of the prisoner Brown, and should they succeed in finding him he will certainly be hung. No resistance was made by the sheriff and his posse.

The St. Louis Intelligencer of the 17th inst. contains an interesting article upon the spread of Mormonism. The subject is introduced as follows:

"A Mormon Elder has been elected chaplain of the Legislature of the State of California. It is well to make a note of this, as one of the way-marks which indicate the progress of Mormonism in our midst."

We have been so little accustomed to candor, courtesy, and respect from the Intelligencer, that any favorable expression concerning us from this source is considered worthy of note, being another of the way-marks that indicate the progress of Mormonism.

The Intelligencer, in his description of the progressive character of Mormonism, says:

"Very young men recollect the first publication of the Book of Mormon; in the boyhood of the youngest citizen that has a beard on his face, the Mormons were a sect too contemptible to excite even curiosity; now the Mormons have already in our midst a large independent community, purely Mormon, and which, before long, will be demanding admission to the Union as a Mormon State. In California, their Elders have a position and influence; the Christian ministers there cannot afford to treat them with contempt, but are compelled by force of public opinion, as well as by a sense of duty, to meet them in public debate and attempt the serious refutation of errors, which, five years ago, were met with a smile of pity or a sneer of contempt, and which, unless they were actually gaining considerable ground, it would be, of course, the worst policy to treat with the consideration and respect of a reply."

It would appear that things are assuming their proper character in some degree. The affected smile of pity and the bitter sneer of contempt, so long indulged in by Christian ministers and pious editors, are found too piteous and contemptible for anything in creation but themselves. Mormonism is made of sterner stuff than they imagined, and those who fight against it will soon be confounded, and fall into the shade and be forgotten, or miserably suffer the pity or well-merited contempt of those whom they have ingloriously sought to injure and destroy.

It is no a little humbling to the opponents of Mormonism to be compelled to admit that "the smile of pity and the sneer of contempt" are ineffectual arguments; that Christian ministers are compelled by public opinion, as well as by a sense of duty, to meet us in public debate. It will be pleasing to our numerous friends to learn that the Christian ministers are at length brought to a sense of duty concerning us; but we are still sceptical upon the subject; however, if it be so, we shall be glad to witness its development. It must be admitted by every candid and honest man that if it is the duty of Christian priests now to meet us in fair and open combat, to investigate and discuss our respective doctrines and creeds, and our relative claims to divine authority; it was their duty five, ten or twenty years ago, and the fact that they have not done so until dragged forth by public opinion, to say the least of it, is mean and cowardly, and proves to us that "something is rotten in Denmark."

We are willing to give our cotemporary credit for all he has said, but we are not prepared to give the Christian fraternity the credit he has given them. We have seen no symptoms indicating a reformation among them, and our daily correspondence proves that there is no more disposition among that class of community to deal honorably with us than formerly, except in a very few instances.

The Alta Californian, speaking of Mormonism, says "Mr. Pratt has advanced in person even to our church doors and pulpits to proclaim himself a defender of a new faith, flinging the gauntlet into the minister's desk. Up to the present time we believe no David has gone forth against this Philistine, to meet him on either point of law, morality or religion, all of which he declares himself equally ready to meet an enemy upon.

The Intelligencer goes on to say, as a matter of surprise, that—

"At a time when every one knows that it would be impossible to elect a Catholic priest to a similar office—when the fact that Bishop Fitspatrick got one single vote for the chaplainship in the Legislature of Massachusetts—a Mormon minister is selected over his Christian competitors to the position of chaplain of the Legislative body of one of the most flourishing States of the Union, and the fact hardly elicits comment. It is accepted as the most natural thing in the world. These are signs of the times, rather humbling, perhaps, to the patriotic American, who has been accustomed to boast of this as an age and country of progress, social, political, and religious; they are signs, at least, that the dangers which have ruined society in the past still exists in full force among us."

Our friends need not be surprised at this little event, for greater things than these shall be seen before the world is much older. Indeed, if Mormonism should continue to progress during the next ten or twenty years as it has during the last five or ten years, it will be no longer a wonder for a Mormon to be elected to offices of State, the only wonder then may be that any other should be elected. These signs of the times are rather humbling, perhaps, to lying editors, mobocratic priests, and foul-hearted apostates who have boasted of this as an age and country of progress and freedom, whilst their hands have reeked with the blood of prophets and saints, and while they have robbed, plundered, and driven many thousands of patriot Americans whose only crime was that they were Mormons! These are signs, at least, that the dangers that have ruined society in the past still exist in full forceamong us.

"Mormonism," says the Intelligencer, "now counts amongst its defenders men of cultivated intellect, and who shall say that, in the lapse of the next ten years, it will not number in its ranks men whose social position shall be such as to do away with the reproach which the low condition of its professors in the social scale has so far brought upon it? When there is question of error in matters of religion, no amount of intellectual culture is a preservative. As far as that goes, it is a well known fact, that the great body of Joe Smith's disciples so far, have been Englishmen, of the lower classes indeed, but not of the lowest division of that class; persons intelligent, instructed more or less in the doctrines of Christian sects, shrewd enough in the every day affairs of life, and of respectable common school education.

The writer of these lines does not hesitate to avow his belief that there is a good deal more in Mormonism than people have supposed. The opinion may go for what it is worth, but it is founded upon some consideration of the subject, some acquaintance and conversation on the matter of their superstition with the better sort of Mormons, and a well grounded conviction that the vast majority of deluded creatures that pass through St. Louis to the Salt Lake, are perfectly sincere, and as ready to die for their creed as the Christians by whom they are surrounded."

We are quite willing that the writer's opinions should go for what they are worth, but to us the opinions of men are a very trifling consideration, conscious that we can live down their crude and false opinions; and fully satisfied that one revelation from the Almighty is worth more to us than the hypotheses and opinions of the world. We are fully prepared to confirm the writer's belief that "that there is a great deal more in Mormonism than people have supposed." We could have told him so years ago; and we would moreover suggest that he be more respectful in his language when speaking of his superiors, and particularly of the honored dead, or his name shall be handed down among the execrable murderers and defamers of the righteous. The day is not far distant when such characters will be compelled to observe good manners and due courtesy. If they have no sense of duty upon the subject, they will be dragged to it by the force of public opinion, or will otherwise, like perverse, obstinate, ignorant, and deluded creatures seek to hide their heads in shame.

The writer next sings his old song "Mormonism is a delusion" to which we answer as chorus that the Intelligencer has not sufficient intelligence to prove it such. And we are told in the following sentencee that "those who believe Mormonism to be simply a human delusion have to account for its spread." Then we say, Mr. Intelligencer, for conscience sake, if you have any, or at least for the sake of consistency, prove your charge or hold your pence.

In the following paragraph the Intelligencer says:

"These Mormons have nothing to gain and everything to lose by embracing the Sect. Most of them were well enough to do in the old country, and they expose themselves to hardship on hardship, to profess their religion. To say nothing of the abandonment of home and friends, they have stood already more than one persecution with a courage worthy of a better cause; and neither the threats of the civilized communities from which they have been driven, nor the horrors of the wilderness into which they have penetrated so far, daunted their resolution or turned them from their purpose. To say that they are led on by the mere hope of sensual indulgence, is absurd; for polygamy can be practiced only by the very few, and implies even the celibacy of the many. Then, it offers no temptation to the female part of the Society, but is contrary to all their habits and natural instincts. The sensualist need not become a Mormon to gratify his appetites. Concubinage is cheaper than polygamy, and involves no unpleasant responsibilities, and the practice of concubinage exists—in secret, to be sure—but it exists almost unchecked throughout the civilized world."

Whether the above is given with intent to bless or to curse, we will leave our readers to judge for themselves; but we are forcibly reminded of a celebrated prophet, who was sent for by Balac, king of Moab, to curse Israel, but when the old man had done his worst, the king in a rage said: "I sent for thee to curse Israel, but thou hast blessed them altogether."

"Mormonism;" says the Intelligencer, in conclusion, "is rapidly growing to be one of the great isms of the day. It is advancing now with rapid strides, and it would be well enough for some of those who sneer at it and shut their eyes to it, and who, whilst set up as the defenders of Christianity, know nothing of this new enemy of their religion, the nature of its arts or the method to be adopted to deliver its unhappy victims from the snare,—it would be well for them to give the subject some attention, for it is becoming, and will soon be, a very practical one, especially in this part of the United States.

The writer appears to have discovered at last, the fact that Mormonism wont be crushed, or remain in the back ground, but will advance to the front ranks in spite of all that is said and done to prevent it; but we consider it rather too bad to lay all the blame on the poor clergy, they cant help it or they would have done so years ago. Is not the press equally to blame? Then why not equalize the burden, and give to the editorial fraternity their quota of the reproach? we go in for equal rights, and for giving even the devil his due.

In conclusion we will say for Mormonism, that it has never yet shuned investigation, criticism nor debate—confident in the potency of its principles, and the perpetuity of its organization, it has thrown the gauntlet to the smartest among all nations, and "whoever knew it put to the worse in a free and open encounter?" It has for twenty-five years boldly contended and grappled with falsehood, and is better prepared for a rough encounter to-day than at any former period.

Page & Bacon have resumed their extensive banking business. The announcement in their card to the public on the 17th inst., has produced a general feeling of satisfaction.

Star in the East, Ho! It has come at last.

The first number of the anxiously looked for "Mormon" made its appearance in our sanctum last evening, just in time for us to introduce it to our readers. It comes in a beautiful dress, with a head and front that cannot fail to commend it to the attention of all who may chance to meet it.

It is printed on excellent paper—double medium sheet—and on new type. Office No. 102 Nassau street, New York. Price of subscription, $2 per annum, or 5 cts. single copy. Subscriptions received at the Luminary office.

The "Mormon" bids fair to be all its prospectus promised, and we hail with joy, this rising Star in the East, and we trust it will receive that support and encouragement which is due to the commanding talents, and indomitable perseverence of the editor and publisher—Elder John Taylor. He has been so long, and so generally known as a bold and powerful writer, a scholar, and a gentleman of the highest order, that the greatest meed of praise we can bestow upon the "Mormon," is to say it is edited and published by Elder John Taylor.

THE SAINTS IN THIS STAKE OF ZION.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 17, 1855.

Dear Brothers and Sisters—I again take this opportunity of addressing you through the pages of the Luminary. Being called to leave you for a short time on business pertaining to our salvation in the Kingdom of God, I feel to say a few words to you before leaving. From the press of business I am not able to visit you all as I would like to have done, but I often think of you, and call to mind many of the circumstances that we have been called to pass through during the nine months that I have been with you; the many joyful meetings that we have had, and how that our hearts have rejoiced under the influence of the Holy Spirit while thus assembling ourselves together. Be assured that while absent from you, that the constant desire of my heart is for the Lord to bless his Saints in this place and throughout the whole world, may grace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of him that has called us from darkness unto light. I am going to the western part of this state to assist in preparing the outfit for the emigration this spring—purchasing cattle and &c.

Now dear Saints, I hope that I shall have your prayers for me now, as much as though I was in the stand every Sunday. I will say for the benefit of those into whose hands this may come, that the work of the Lord is progressing in this place. Most of the quorums of the priesthood now organized are doing all in their power to build up the kingdom of God, some are preparing for the valley, and here let me say to those of the humble poor that are striving hard to lay up something to help them to go to the mountains of His holiness, and unto the fat vallies of Ephraim, that have got small amounts, put it into the Perpetual Emigration Fund, and make your wants known to President E. Snow. To those who have a few spare dollars, I would also say, put it into the P. E. Fund, and thereby strengthen the means that the Lord has provided to gather the faithful poor of His church, and then you will have the prayers of the faithful upon you and your substance, which will make it increase and multiply an hundred fold. Try it and see whether Br. Andrus is a true prophet or not; you that do it will be able to bare testimony.

We have crowded meetings every Sunday and considerable inquiry concerning the Latter-day Saints and their moves in general, some are baptized weekly. May the Lord continue to work in the hearts of the honest among the nations of the earth, until they are all gathered and built up in our most holy faith.

I will now close by asking my Heavenly Father to bless you during my absence. I remain your servant for the gospel sake,

MILO ANDRUS.

P. S. Let those who have not ordered their wagons, do so through Br. E. Snow. M. A.

DEATH AND BURIAL ON THE PLAINS.

Death is never a welcome guest. To deliver up to his icy arms a husband or wife, a father or mother, a son or daughter, is, indeed, a sore trial under any circumstances. Yet when the destroyer selects his victim from our home circle, we enjoy a degree of satisfaction in the privilege of depositing their bodies in the old church yard near the graves of other departed kindred. It affords us consolation to visit their lonely resting places by the pale light of the moon, and mingle our tears with the evening dews, to plant sweet flowers over their tombs, or train the delicate vine up the marble slab that marks the hallowed spot where we have buried the cherished idols of our affections. But when the grim monster serves his imperious summons far away on the distant plain, far from the abodes of civilization, where not even a rough plank can be procured of which to make a rude coffin, or the necessary material to stitch together into the ordinary habiliments of the grave, it is then we feel the blow as doubly severe. My memory still retains in sad distinctness the death and burial of poor brother Sprouse, as we were journeying over the plains to the valley of the Great Salt Lake.

The shades of evening were quietly gathering around as our long train of covered wagons slowly rolled into camp on the banks of Wood river, which here makes a large bend, and sweeping around a low point, describes nearly a three-quarter circle, and encloses a beautiful little valley, luxuriant with grass, and dotted with prairie flowers, affording rich grazing for our hungry cattle. We had experienced a hard day's travel up the valley of the main Platte, subject to the broiling influence of a July sun. It was Friday evening, and we were to remain in camp till Monday morning. We hardly had time to dispose of our hurriedly prepared supper before the sable curtains of night closed around us. A guard was detailed and we retired to rest.

Saturday was a pleasant day, and all were early engaged. The men were burning a small coal pit, and repairing wagons and yokes; the women were washing by the river side, and spreading their clothes on the willows to dry, and the boys were watching the cattle that were turned out to graze. About the middle of the afternoon brother Joseph Sprouse was violently attacked with that dreadful scourge, the cholera. I was immediately sent for, and myself and others administered in the name of the Lord. But it seemed to do no good. He was certain that he would not recover, and did not in the least degree seem tenacious of life. He continued to grow worse till dark, though every means at our command were employed to baffle the power of the destroyer. I assisted in removing him from his wagon to a tent, and remained by his side till about eleven o'clock, when he ceased cramping and appeared to be quite easy. I now left him in kind hands, and wearily sought my bed. It was much exhausted with continual exertion, and soon fell into an uneasy slumber. I had been asleep but a few minutes when I was aroused by a wild cry of anguish, apparently near the front of my wagon. It was a female voice, and her frantic shrieks rang wildly out on the still night air, "Oh, brother Charlie do come quick, Joseph is dying." I sprang from my wagon and hurried to the tent of the dying man, which I reached just in time to witness his last struggle.

Sunday morning was a delightful one. The majestic king of day, seated in his glowing car, proudly arose to his diurnal course. The feathered warblers of the grove gaily tuned their musical throats in notes of welcome to the return of gentle morn. But our little company of pilgrim saints was in mourning. Our camp was encompassed in a shroud of quiet gloom. The destroyer was in our midst; our beloved brother had fallen a victim to his cruel tyranny. The angel of death plumed his sable wings over the camp of the saints.

A grave was prepared beneath the shade of a wide-spreading ash that grew on a small natural mound near the banks of the river. About 10 o'clock the camp assembled to pay their last respects to the remains of our deceased brother. A rude bier was formed by placing on the ground two tent poles, about three feet apart, and parallel with each other. Across these were laid small rods, cut of a proper length, and over all were placed willow boughs. The corpse was brought from the tent and placed on the bier, and was slowly borne to the grave, followed by a procession of sorrowing saints.

A large tree had been felled, and cut the required length, and the bark peeled off in halves. One half was placed in the bottom of the grave, forming a sort of trough, over which was spread a nice new blanket. The corpse was next lowered, and the blanket carefully wrapped around it. The remaining half of the bark was now placed over the body, forming an arching lid to this rude coffin. The green branches that had covered the rustic bier were thrown into the grave, which was soon filled with the damp mould, hiding from our sight all that was left of a fond brother, a kind husband, and devoted saint. A benediction was pronounced, and we returned sorrowing to camp.

The next morning before we broke up camp, I placed at the head of the grave a rough wooden slab, with this inscription, cut in irregular characters, with my pocket knife—"J. S. 1852."

We moved early, and the heart-broken widow of the deceased lingered a few sad moments near the grave of her dead husband, and then turned her back upon the sacred spot forever.

CHARLIE.

Springfield, O., Feb. 6, 1855.

Copenhagen, Jan. 10, 1855.

Elder E. Snow: Dear brother—It is with great pleasure that I aeknowledge the receipt of your kind favor, bearing date Nov. 3d and 8th. It came to hand Dec. 1st, together with enclosed prospectus for the Luminary, all of which was very cheering, and afforded me great satisfaction, as it was an evidence to me that I was not forgotten. I have often thought of you, and have wondered that you did not write to me, as I was laboring in the field which the Lord established by you. Often have I been led to reflect upon the trials and great labor that you have endured to lay the foundation of a great work in Scandanavia. Be assured that you are not forgotten; you are often spoken of and inquired after even by those who never had the pleasure of seeing you. Their hearts are warm towards you; they realise in a great measure under what circumstances you labored here, in order to establish the work, but not fully; they know not what it is to leave a dear family and friends and go several thousand miles from home, among strangers who are filled with the traditions of their fathers, and are entirely ignorant of the way of life and salvation. To open the door to such a people, requires one that has the keys, power and authority so to do, then that which appears impossable to the majority of mankind is accomplished. Those who have had experience know what it is. I can better appreciate what it is to leave the society of family and friends and go to a distant land, than I could when following an agricultural life. I know, in part, what has to be endured, and can realise, in a great degree that which you had to encounter in establishing the work of the Lord in this land. But it is a great satisfaction to know that the time had come for the work to commence in this land. The Lord had prepared the way; the spirit operated upon his servants; suggested to them that there was a favorable time to open up the Gospel to this benighted people. You came in faith; the Lord was with you in might and power; the result was the work permanently established, and through the blessings of the Lord it has grown and will continue to increase until the honest in heart are gathered out of this land. The labors of those who are engaged in the ministry are crowned with success. Many upright souls have yielded obedience to the requirements of the Gospel—many are investigating the truth. Our publications are sought after by strangers as well as by the Saints. They carry a convincing influence with them, and are bound to open the eyes of the upright in as much as they will peruse without prejudice.

We have many faithful laborers in the vineyard, but could use many more if we had them of the right kind. You will see by our statistical report of the strength we are getting in this land, notwithstanding we have sent out very many destined for the land of Zion. I have sent out since I have been here about 1,200 souls—over 530 this year. The elements all around rage wonderfully every time there is company of Saints to go out of this land. The devil is mad, and the waters have been greatly troubled, have foamed and raged, and the waves have rolled mountains high, and have exerted a power and influence as if moved by a magic hand, in order to engulf the Saints who were on their journey of gathering together in accordance with the commandments of the Lord. He who has thus commanded has extended a fatherly and preserving care over His children. While thousands have found watery graves, and scores of ships have been broken into fragments, the Lord has preserved his Saints, notwithstanding he has tried and proved them to a great extent, especially those whom I sent out in the steamship Cambria (say 441, besides infants). They left here on the 29th of November with fair prospects, had a good passage to Frederickhaven, took on a portion of the above number of passengers there, together with their luggage, and left the 20th, with good weather and a prospect of a speedy passage to Hull; but after coming out into the North sea, the ship had to meet the monster in all the shapes you can imagine, and could not encounter, and finally was obliged to seek port in Norway, where she safely reached, and remained until Dec. 7th. During the Saints stay in port, they improved the time by preaching the Gospel to the inhabitants. They were kindly treated, and many believed their testimony. Much of the good seed was sown, and I shall take measures to nourish it, hoping that there may be much fruit as the reward for their labors.

The Saints have already clearly seen the hand of God in their deliverance, and bear witness to that effect. They left that port with renewed confidence in Him who had thus delivered them, with the expectation of soon reaching England, but when within about 30 Danish miles, a storm arose, the wind blew a gale, the billows rolled, a portion of the bulwarks were broken in. The captain was obliged to turn the ship about and go back, designing to seek port again in Norway, but could not turn in without endangering the ship—finally came back to Frederickhaven, which was on the 9th. The Saints, still patient, with another evidence of the preserving care of the Almighty. There they remained while the elements were raging without, until the 26th, when they left full of faith that they would have a safe passage, and finally landed in Hull on the 24th—all alive and generally well, which is remarkable, when we consider circumstances and the length of time they were togther. Surely the blessings of the Lord was with them.

They write back from Liverpool, expressing much joy and gladness in their deliverance, and in the way and manner in which they are received and treated by President Richards. I will assure you that there are many good upright Saints in that company whose desire is to serve the Lord with all their might.

I have labored in this mission with a degree of satisfaction, as I have witnessed the advancement of the work. It is now in a prosperous condition. Never was there more unison among the Saints, and a greater willingness to hearken to the priesthood, and to do their duties in every respect. We had a general council on the 28th, 29th, and 30th, ultimo, in which I had a full representation of the present condition and prospects of all the conferences, an extract of which you can read in the Scandanavian Stierne. All is encouraging and bids fair for the time to come. Our hall is filled to overflowing every Sunday, and the strangers have began to learn that we know what our rights are, and will maintain them. We have a policeman every Sunday at the door; he maintains good order, keeps those who would disturb at a proper distance, and I believe would fight for us if necessary. Mormonism is not dead here. It is talked of in every grade of society. Many fears have been expressed on account of its increase in this land, the consequent danger that would result from it and many remedies proposed. Priests and Bishops are called upon to do their duties, exert their influence and protect the people from the so-called delusion; still they do nothing; are almost as silent as death—answering very well the description of those shepherds we read of, who care not for the flock. I have received Nos. two and three of the Luminary for which I feel truly grateful. I have forwarded to you the Scandanavian Stierne, and shall continue to do so as long as I remain here. I hope you will favor me with a communication as often as convenient. My desire is that the Lord will bless you in your arduous and important labors, and return you safely to your family and friends in Zion. I remain yours, &c.,

ITALY.

Position and Prospects of the Mission.

Prassuit, Angrogna, Vallee de Luserne, Piedmont, December 14, 1854.

Dear President Richards—As it is now six mont since anything definite from Italy reached the Office, and two months have passed since my arrival here, I make the attempt to furnish you with a few items, relative to our position and prospects.

On my arrival, I received welcome and happy greetings from the Saints, which made me feel at home. After my long and tedious journey across the Alps, it seemed like finding a heaven below, to find the sons and daughters of God in this dark and benighted land. I shall never forget my feelings and thoughts on entering my present field of labor. The almighty responsibilities that weighed upon my mind at that moment, made me feel the weakness and littleness of man, more than ever I realized them before. Earnestly I lifted up my voice to that God who had sent me hither, to supply me with wisdom and knowledge to conduct His Church in Italy in a way that should redound to His honor and glory, and the salvation of many of His creatures. The darkness was such that I could feel it, and while in the plains my mind and body seemed to be imprisoned. As I neared the valleys I felt more free, and as I mingled with the Saints by day I was very happy.

We have, besides myself, two travelling Elders here, who are faithful in disseminating the Gospel. Officers and members number altogether about seventy. Over a hundred have been baptized here since the commencement of the work, some of whom have emigrated, and a few have been excommunicated.

Since Elder Keaton's departure in June last, the brethren have baptized twelve. Two have died, and three have been cut off. My little flock, and I assure you, I feel myself honored to be their shepherd, are as happy and faithful as any who have presumed to tread the narrow way. You might see them, though they have two or three miles to go over rugged mountains, waiting more than an hour before the meeting time, for the arrival of the brethren. It was so the first Sunday I met with them, though some had eight miles to come. I have stopped their long journeys, by having meetings in each Branch. We have three Branches, and have very good meetings in each of them, and little ones in the week. We have but few friends who visit us at present, and those are favorable, and promise soon to unite with us. Within these last two weeks, we have extended our labors to two new places, and prospects are favorable. We meet in peace in our stables, kitchens, and wood houses, and enjoy ourselves much with the brethren. The brethren who are more known, cannot well go out at night in some places without receiving a few stones, but it is only from the lower class, I mean in morals. I hope by a prudent course, to keep our present liberty, and to extend the work in all those valleys; and if we get an increase of that blessing, to commence in the plains. From our present position and prospects, I am full of faith for Italy.

I have received three letters from President Tyler, but was sorry to learn, by his last, of his ill health. I trust our prayers to the God of power, have prevailed on his behalf, and that I shall receive his promised visit in the spring.

The brethren and sisters wish me to send you their salutations, which please accept with my own, and give my very kind love to Elder Spencer.

I subscribe myself your humble servant in the truth,

SAMUEL FRANCIS.

FRANCE.

Baptisms at Havre and Paris.

Jersey, December 28, 1854.

President F. D. Richards.

Beloved Brother—Having just returned from a short visit to France, among the few but faithful Saints in that country, I write you a few lines to inform you of their welfare, and also of my safe return to Jersey.

I left Jersey on Monday, the 10th instant, and after a beautiful passage of about 25 hours, including a stay of four hours in Southampton, I arrived in Havre with Elder Thomas Liez. I found the Saints in good health and spirits, rejoicing in the blessings of the Gospel. On Wednesday, we accompanied Elder May to the water, where he baptized one woman, and in the evening we held a meeting and confirmed her. We had a good time. I spoke to the Saints for some time with rather unusual liberty, being much aided by the Holy Spirit. It was truly a time of refreshing.

Thursday, the 13th, I left, at 7 A. M., by rail for Paris, where I arrived about 1 P. M. I found the Saints at the station to receive me, although they had but one hour's notice. I was conducted to the house of Elder Alexis Metzger, whom I found almost overjoyed to see me, as also was sister Metzger, who is truly worthy of the name of a Latter-day Saint. She soon gave me an evidence of a welcome reception, by putting some of the good things of Paris in an eatable condition. After dinner, we were conducted by young brother Metzger to the house of Elder Hubert, a good, zealous, faithful man, who feels that he and all that he has are in the kingdom of God. Also we found Elder Fonteneau and family in good spirits, although sister Fonteneau's health was not the best. On Sunday, the 16th, we held a meeting. I think that I can say it was as good a meeting as I have attended on this side of the Atlantic. The power of God was manifested in a very potent manner in the gifts of healing, and also of prophesying. I was much pleased with the spirit they manifested, and the union and faith that they possessed. They cannot help but win the honest in heart to join their ranks. Two very worthy persons, a young man of about 25 years, and his wife, have been lately baptized into the Church, and bid fair for doing much good.

I left Elder T. Liez in Paris, by request of the Saints. They voluntarily proposed supporting him there, and entered into an arrangement for that purpose.

On Monday, the 17th instant, at about 11, P. M., I left by train for Havre, and arrived at 6 on the morning of the 18th, feeling myself much pleased. I staid with the Saints till Friday, when I left per steamer for Southampton, and arrived next day about 2 P. M., and found my old friend, Elder James G. Willie, at that place. I remained with him till Monday evening, when I left for Jersey, and arrived about 4 P. M.

I feel truly thankful to God that I found the condition of the Saints in France so much improved, and think that under the wise direction of Elder Dunyar it will be well. The Saints wished to be kindly remembered to you, and pray earnestly for your prosperity and happiness.

The brethren here join me in love to you. Elder Oakley will start for his new field of labor on Friday next, the 29th. He is in good health and spirits.

I remain yours in the Gospel of Jesus Christ,

A. L. LAMOREAUX.

David and Jacob Whitmer, Witnesses of the Book of Mormon—Kirtland Temple, &c.

We have been favored by Elder Andrus with the following extract of a letter dated Independence, February 9, 1855.

Since leaving St. Louis I have heard nothing from you, although I have anxiously inquired for letters hoping to hear from you. How often have I wished to see you and be in your society since leaving St. Louis, but I could not. I hope to have the pleasure of meeting you again in the spring, and to hear the sound of your voice proclaiming the words of truth and eternal life.

I have found all sorts of people since I left, some who intended to do the will of God; some did not care whether they did or not—I have been laughed at, hissed at, reasoned with, and treated in every way nearly. Mormonism shows a man the changes of life; if he can learn the difference between pain and pleasure, he ought to learn it in Mormonism. One will curse you for being a fool; another will say you are smart, striving, if possible, to draw you away with flattering words, and a third will praise your religion, at the same time, tell you what a fine lot of cattle he has got to sell; all these things go to make up the cup of a man's experience, till it is full.

I was in Richmond nearly two days, and was treated well by the land-lord of the City Hotel, Mr. Risner; if you ever go to R., stop there; David and Jacob Whitmer, two of the witnesses of the Book of Mormon are there, and they are worshiping at the shrine of the great dollar—they would not have much to say. I tried to get David to subscribe for the Luminary, but he told me he would consider on it, and I left him to consider until my return to the States, which I hope will be when the little stone has crushed the image to pieces, for surely, if I had to stop in this country, the spirit of the Holy Ghost would die in me, and then I should be worse than dead. It is a hard matter to pray in this part of Mo., the air is so impregnated with curses, profanity, and mobocracy.

I learn that over a million of dollars is subscribed towards making Kansas a slave State. I have met with a man here, and there are three families that are waiting for the building of the temple; they say they have never been cut off from the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; one man's name is Roberts, and they are from Philadelphia. They say they have the gifts among them here, and feel fully confident that the temple will be built here soon, and they can almost imagine that they hear the ring of Father Cutter's trowel now. Ha, ha, ha, but I suppose it is no laughing matter.

There is but little business doing here at present, no trade, and money is very scarce. I expect to leave here to-morrow if the prospects are not more cheering in the morning—it costs money to travel in this country.

Yours in the gospel of peace, A. L. S.

THE CRIMEA.

Casualities to the Brethren—Baptisms—Interest in the Work, &c.

CAMP INKERMANN, }
2 miles from Sebastopol, Dec. 21, '54. }

Dear Brother Richards—Your kind and welcome letter came safe to hand, after having been lost and found again near Balaklava by a seaman, who kindly brought it to the 49th regiment. For the counsel you so kindly sent we return you our grateful thanks, as it was much required by every one of us.

Since last I wrote to you, we have had to pass through many trying and dreadful scenes. The 2nd Division, to which most of this Branch of the Church belongs, has been in three general engagements, and in the last the brethren suffered severely, one—Priest Patrick Brodie, was killed; he fought as every soldier should—in the love and fear of God, and I feel to say, great will be his reward. Elder McLean was wounded in the arm, which only kept him from his duty four days. Three of the brethren were wounded—two slightly, the other brother—Peter Hay, has lost his right arm, and he will have to return to England. I have written to Elder Gilbert, at Chatham, so that he may be received when he arrives there, as he had no certificate with him, on account of my not being able to see him.

We all feel the solemnity of our present position, and let what may come we feel to say, Thy will be done, O Lord.

No one, but those who have been in similar situations to what we have, can form any idea of the horrors of the field of battle. God grant the time may not be far distant when we may be released from such scenes.

One only have we baptized since I wrote last, but I have the pleasing news to say, that many would be baptized if we had time and opportunity. Some who departed in the late engagements died believing the latter-day work. At the present time we can do but little, as we cannot hold a meeting to preach, but we converse with many when we have an opportunity, which has done much good.

Elders Ross and Higgins, and Teacher W. Walker, have been very sickly of late. Their faith is good, and I hope they will soon be well again. The remainder of the brethren are doing well. As for myself, God has been good, kind, and merciful to me, for which my heart bounds with love towards Him.

On the 19th of December, being on out-lying picket, "Mormonism" was brought forward, and seeing an opportunity, I rose and testified to the work. The Spirit of God was with me, and I brought before those that would listen the first principles of the Gospel. When I sat down, Satan sent his imps to play, and from the mouth of one there came nothing but swearing and cursing at God's holy word and His servants. I told him that God made him, and had protected him so far, but if he tempted the Lord, His wrath would come on him before long. He kept on for some time. At two o'clock the next day this man was dead.

Elder Higgins has sent for me. I hear that he is very bad. Please to excuse this scrawl. I will write again the first opportunity.

Yours in the Everlasting Covenant,

HENRY RUSSELL.

Miscellaneous.

THE MORMONS.

We passed half an hour yesterday in the company of two very intelligent representatives of the Latter-day Saints in Utah—Messrs. John Taylor and N. H. Felt. These gentlemen represent affairs in Utah in a very flattering light. The Saints are rapidly surrounding themselves with the various comforts and many of the luxuries of civilization. Emigration and natural increase are adding daily to their numbers, and the day is not very far in the future when Utah will be "knocking" for admission into the family of States, or preparing to defend an independent sovereignty of her own, in the mountain fastness, by the hardest kind of "knocks." The crops of the past season had been somewhat injured by the grasshopper; but still, our informants assured us, there would be the greatest abundance harvested for the use of the Saints, and a surplus for the constantly arriving emigrants, as well as those who may take Salt Lake in their way to California. Messrs. Taylor and Felt are on their way to New York, for the purpose of establishing a paper in that city, to be devoted to the propagation of the doctrines held by the Saints, and for the purpose of carrying "the war" into Africa, whenever and wherever provocation thereto may be offered. Mr. Taylor, in addition to the dignity of the Apostleship—and a jolly, rubicund, wide-awake Apostle he is—brings to the editorship of the "Mormon" a manifold experience in the profession, and we doubt not its columns will be eagerly and satisfactorily perused by the Saints into whose hands it may fall. Gentile though we be, we shall look for it with some interest ourselves, and our readers will doubtless be delectated with occasional excerpts from its columns, touching the polity, politics, and domestic institutions of the Saints, as the same may be developed to the world. The object of establishing an organ in New York, Mr. Taylor assures us is twofold:—first, to defend the people of Utah from the misrepresentations of lying letter-writers and designing politicians: and secondly, to minister to the wants of the Saints scattered throughout the States. The mischief growing out of the two causes above named has tended much to hinder the spread of Mormonism in the States, and greatly vexed and scandalized the pious who play the shepherd over the sheep collected in Salt Lake Valley. Our informants assured us, that the people of the States have been led into many erroneous opinions touching the light in which the executive appointments for Utah are looked upon. They desire competent and discreet men—nothing more. Men of this character, they say, they have among themselves, more than sufficient to fill all the offices, and they think the President would only be carrying out his own doctrine of Popular Sovereignty, were he to so far respect the popular wish of the people of Utah, as to select his appointees from among them. Nevertheless, they say, any competent well-behaved man will be well received there as a territorial officer, if he will devote himself to the legitimate business of his office and let other matters alone. But the trouble has been, with a very few exceptions, that while the appointees were notoriously incompetent for the duties of their offices, they also intermeddled with the domestic relations of the Saints in a manner quite extra-official, and carried things in a style of lordly superiority over those who consider themselves their equals in every respect. This is what they complain of. They want no tenth-rate lawyers placed over them, and they are by no means desirous that Utah should be made a Botany Bay of, for the banishment of broken-down political hacks, who have sunk their character and capital in the States. We enquired of them about the Governorship of the territory. Their answer was, that the people of the territory preferred Brigham Young in that capacity to any other living man. But they would receive any competent man President Pierce might send out to them as Governor. As for brother Brigham himself, he did not want the office—would prefer not to be encumbered with it—had his head, hands and heart full of other and more important matters. The rumors recently circulated respecting this matter, they said, originated at Washington, and were put afloat for political effect. The people of the territory care but very little about the matter one way or the other.

As respects slavery in the territory, we were assured there was but little of it there, yet it is there. Some slaves had been liberated by their owners since they were taken to Utah; others still remain slaves. But the most of those who take slaves there pass over with them in a little while to San Barnardino, a Mormon settlement in California, some seven or eight hundred miles from Salt Lake City. How many slaves are now held there they could not say, but the number relatively was by no means small. A single person had taken between forty and fifty, and many had gone in with smaller numbers.—[Chicago Paper.

LETTER FROM A KNOW-NOTHING.

BOSTON, January 16, 1855.

SON JOHN: I have too much Legislature work to come home on Saturday nights as I said I would—so you mind the farm. I have managed to get on a good many committees, so as to come popular by having my name printed ofner in the papers, and I manage to say something occasionally and I have seen my name 3 times printed in the daily bee.—American principles is looking up some here in Boston, and we are going to discord all foreign eliments in our government (by the way have the barn door painted over with some other color besides spanish brown. I dont like anything spanish.) The governor has made a lick at the foreign militia and disbanded all the companies. (dont use any more British oil for your deefness for I have thrown away that box of Russian salve your mother put in my trunk to rub my rumatic leg with use American physic it is the best.) We are going to have the latin lingo taken of the state-coat of arms and put plain yankee english in its place. We are going a head I tell you, and make a clean swoop of every thing of foreign extraction I have visited no place of amusement excepting the live buffaloo which is a regular native he looks very much like a hairy cow. Speaking of cows reminds me very much of our Durham Bull you may sell him to wade the butcher he is of foreign extraction. A friend asked me to go to the Atheneum and see the library and pictures but I was told nearly all the pictures are painted by the old masters as they are called—and these I am told are without exceptional foreigners besides many of the books are in foreign languages so it is contrary to my principles to visit such a place. I was going to see Banvards great painting of the Holy land which is making some stir but a native artist told me it was mostly painted with Venetian red Dutch pink and Naples yellow while all the skies were Prussian blue too much of the foreign eliments to be interesting to me. By the way speaking of paint have the front blinds which I had painted with French green last fall painted some color other than I mentioned above. Stop the Zions Herald and take the Yankee privateer in its place. Give my Marseilles vest to dick the plowman and tell him to stone Jip the scotch terrier off the farm and to kill that Maltese cat. from your affectionate father.

OPPOSITES.—A good wife should be like three things; which three things she should not be like.

First—She should be like a Snail to keep within her own house; but she should not be like a snail to carry all she has on her back.

Secondly—She should be like an echo, to speak when spoken to; but she should not be like an echo, always to have the last word.

Thirdly—She should be like a town clock, always to keep time and regularity; but she should not be like a town clock, to speak so loud that all the town may hear her.

"Biddy, has that surly fellow cleared off the snow from the pavement?"

"Yes, sur."

"Did he clear it off with alacrity, Biddy?"

"No, sur; with a shovel."

CALIFORNIA ROMANCE AND CRIME.

A short time since, in California, quite a tragical affair occurred at San Francisco, which possessed a feature of criminal romance. A Miss Elizabeth Sullivan, formerly an actress, but at the time of this affair happening, was proprietress of a cigar store, went into the street in search of one Henry Kerrison, a prominent member of the police, and highly respected in the community, and finding him standing in a company on the street, approached him, with no other warning or salutation than merely exclaiming "Harry," she plunged a bowie-knife into his breast, just above the region of the heart; the knife glancing from the rib, passed between, and entered the left lobe of the lung, inflicting a wound about one inch and a half in depth in the lung, and from the outside about three inches. The force with which the blow was struck caused her to stumble. She struck a second time, and the officer who interferred received the cut in his hand. She was then arrested, and when taken to prison handed the following letter to the officer, which fully discloses the promptings of her revenge:

"HARRY: For the last time, Harry Kerrison, I now write you. You have embittered my whole life; you have given me no choice but a life of prostitution; and, Harry, God will not let me be unavenged. You will say to the latest moment, when I first saw you, if any one had hinted to me that I would fall so low as to associate with you, I would considered it an insult. You remember when I would scarcely deign to notice you when you came where I was; and then I was happy, and I may add, innocent. See now through your accursed wiles, to what I am brought! Why are such men as you allowed to live? You're a curse, a curse to the world. Now mark my words—I am about entering into a life, than to do which, I would gladly prefer death, and God knows my heart—knows how hard I have struggled to avoid it. By your dastardly treatment I am driven to it. Now, Harry, to tell you that I have loved you—that I would have laid down my life for you—that if sickness had laid you on a bed, I would have worked for and tended you as tenderly as the fondest mother would her child—that if crime or reproach had been yours, I would have clung to you and loved you through all—that nothing on earth would have dampened my love for you, so closely had I entwined you around my heart—this, Harry, has been my love for you—this, Harry, has been the heart you have thrown from you.—Your own heart will tell you best why—if from the caprice of a moment, or from a passing fancy of your fickle nature, it matters all the same. The die is cast; if now you were about to offer, in the right of man, to woo me as your wife—if you were to lay a fortune at my feet, I would refuse it all, for a stronger passion has laid hold of me, and a sweeter one. Have patience, Harry, and read. When I left home my mother gave me a Bible. Since that I have never looked into it till last night. Do not treat this as the fancy of a moment. I am very calm—the cool, calm hate—deadly hate; and I knelt on my knees on the cold earth, with no other witness but the stars above me, and Harry Kerrison I took an awful oath on that Holy Book—an oath which would make your blood run cold to hear. 'Tis you have known my love—now you shall feel my hate. Months may elapse, but my revenge shall overtake you. No sudden, open act of violence, for my late fury has settled down into deep calm revenge. If I meet you openly, I will meet you with a smile—I will meet you proudly. If you leave this city, I will leave too. I will have those watching that you little dream of. You need not, if you can, avoid coming near me—it is all the same.

"Now, if you will, show this letter around to your friends—my own writing—this letter will, no doubt, one day be shown against me. I can bear it all, and more, when I am revenged; I would willingly die for it. Did you ever think, Harry Kerrison, that it would ever come to this? Did you ever think that she who was loving, and easy to forgive you, had such feelings within her? An old saying—'the strongest love sometimes turns to the deadliest hate.' Yes, my dear love, this affair, with this romance, as you have styled it, will have quite a romantic termination—a subject for a novel writer, ending in a tragedy of death and a scaffold! Well, I can think of no more for your amusement in this letter—all, all comes from the heart. Now go on, Harry; go, with the deep deep curses of a broken, blighted heart! Go! for you are doomed; for, so sure as the sun rises and sets, so sure will my words come to pass."

She was removed to the county jail. Since her arrest she has refused all food or nourishment, and has declared her intention to starve, for the purpose of haunting her victim hereafter.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Legislature of North Carolina has given to the world, the conditions upon which that State will remain in the Union. After approving the course of Congress in regard to the Nebraska Bill and the Missouri Compromise, that body Resolved, that if the federal government shall "repeal or impair the efficacy," or "refuse to enforce" the Fugitive Slave Law, it will be a virtual dissolution of the Union, and the Governor of North Carolina, in case of such repeal, or refusal to enforce, shall immediately call together the General Assembly to prepare for the worst!

How very important that Congress should attend to this matter, or that State might smash things! Why, she is

"—monarch of all she surveys,"

and the rest of the Union should bow submissively, or they will have a free and independant republic; or probably establish an empire, and then our Haytien friend, Souloque, will have a rival as to who shall annex the United States and British Provinces first to their crown. These braggarts should be frowned down in their attempt to dissolve our beloved Union, sealed together by the blood of the chivalrous sons of the South, as well as the hardy scions of the North, which was shed in delivering us from the tyrannical yoke of our—worse than—step-mother.—[Virginia Telescope.

THE EMIGRANT TO HIS WIFE.

You speak of England, dearest one,
With something like regret;
You talk to me of sunny hours,
And ask if I forget?

Oh, no; sweet memories of the past
Come o'er me now and then;
I think I see our favorite walks,
The cottage in the glen.

In fancy I behold the stream
Along whose banks we roved,
When hopes were bright, and hearts were light:
'Twas there you owned you loved.

But darker scenes will oft intrude—
Oh, well I mind the day
When little Willie there was born,
How near death's door you lay.

Dire was the wintry hour,
The cupboard shelves were bare;
My pockets, too, were empty, love,
My heart nigh crush'd with care.

"Why want?" the tempter whispered me;
"There's plenty—why not take?
Your wife, your children"—no, I can't;
Not even for their sake.

Day after day I struggled on,
And robbed my nights of sleep,
Until we left that joyless home,
To cross the briny deep.

Oh, well I love my native land,
Ere youth and hope had fled;
But dearer, far, I prize the soil
That yields our children bread.

From the Deseret News.

PERPETUAL EMIGRATING FUND.

Extract of a discourse by Orson Hide, Salt Lake City, October 8, 1854.

We extract the following from a discourse upon gathering, and recommend it to the special attention of all who are interested in the P. E. Fund, the general interest of our emigration and the redemption of Israel.

"What is the duty of the saints who have come here by the aid and benefit of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund? It is their duty to pay back the debt they owe immediately. 'But' says one, 'we cannot pay, we have no means,' very well we will not oppress you; but you can give your note, and you can file your obligation with the agent, or such authorities of the Fund that it concerns, that they may have some voucher to act upon; or that they can tell at least where the funds are,—in whose hands they are lodged; but do not go to the east, and to the west, to the north, and to the south from the city without making it a matter of record in some shape; and when God puts the means in your hands, by your own perseverance and economy, pay it over and liquidate the debt, and these means are sent again to relieve some one else; and the same means that brought you, may perhaps bring out a thousand persons if they are faithful and active in restoring it to the channel of its usefulness. For instance, I take half dollar, and it is a debt I owe, I pay it, and that man owes it to another; and by the time it has passed round it has paid a hundred debts, and relieved a hundred wants; whereas, if I keep it in my pocket, I prevent it from being circulated, and doing so much good. Do I get any credit by doing so? I have the satisfaction of saying I am not out of money; while at the same time, I have the disgrace before God and every intelligent being, which is my due.

"Well then, this money that has been appropriated to bring the saints here, let it be refunded with all speed; let it be a matter of conscience. If you should see your neighbor suspended from a tower, and hanging by a brittle cord, and by any little struggle he might break the cord, and be dashed in pieces, whatever you might be engaged in, you would leave it and run to his rescue, and try your utmost to save the man who is ready to plunge into this vortex, a gulf beneath his feet. Look then at your brethren in a similar position; and perhaps if they were struggling to gain life, they would be plunged into wretchedness forever. This is a debt, a sacred obligation which you owe, not only to the authorities of this church and kingdom, but you owe it to your brethren whose cries and prayers are ascending up to God, and if you withold that which belongs to them,—that which they should enjoy, their prayers will recoil back on your heads, not in blessings but in curses.

"We all say here that we are blessed, we say our labor and toil have been blessed; I am sure of it. Can we work out our salvation? Can we witness to God and angels and to our brethren that we are willing to put forth our hands and contribute to swell the sum total of this Perpetual Emigrating Fund according to the ability God has given us? Are we willing to put forth our hand and aid in rolling forth this work, by collecting the people together from wretchedness and want? What shall we gain by doing this? We shall gain numbers that will look up to us as their friends and benefactors, and hail us as their saviors. It is said, 'That saviors shall come upon Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau; and the kingdom shall be the Lord's.'—Some men think the way they are going to be saviors, is to get as many wives as they can, and save them; now, they may slip up on that, if that is their view, and their feelings extend no further. I will tell you what a savior is; if I see a family who are starving for want of bread, and are thirsting and fainting for water, and an individual should give them bread and water, he has saved them, that is the kind of savior I would give the most for under some circumstances that I have been placed in, and I would prize that savior more precious than gold. If I were in danger of falling from a precipice, or from a building as I have said before, and have no means of saving myself, if some kind friend would come along, and put forth his hand and help to save me, he is my savior; so if a man rescues me from a galling yoke of oppression under which I must faint and die, he is my savior. Saviors shall come upon Mount Zion, and they shall judge the Mount of Esau. This is the kind of savior that will judge the ungodly, and give them their due. What! are you going to judge the ungodly? Yes judge the Mount of Esau. You know the Lord has said, 'Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated.' Where is the Mount of Esau? It is the world at large, the wickedness of which God hates. Then saviors shall come upon Mount Zion and judge the Mount of Esau. And says Paul, 'Know ye not brethren, that the saints shall judge the world.'

"We will hand out our money, for that is almighty in the eyes of this world. God has put this means in our hands and it is for us to advance it to this good purpose according to our ability, and so we shall become saviors to rescue the oppressed from every land, and when we have gone to the extent of our power, and done all we can, will there be any more effiecient operations entered into to effect the purposes of God? There will, he will say now my servants you have done all you can I will stretch out my own arm! Says one, 'I really wish I knew how soon it will be when the angels are sent from heaven to gather up the elect at the winding up scene. I can tell you how soon it will be. Have you got the word of the Lord upon this subject? I do not claim that I have, but when I tell you, you will say it is true, and if it is true, it is just as good as the word of the Lord, and as any other revelation already given. When will it be that the angels are sent to gather in the remnant? It will be just at the time when the saints have done all that is in their power to do, and can do no more, and have been worn out in the service of their God: then the Lord will send the armies of heaven to aid them. He has had an army under his training from the beginning, and when he gives the word of command they will collect the balance of the saints from the four winds; and not only so but they will open the graves, and raise the saints from the dead. An angel showed a little example of this at the time the Savior ascended from the tomb. He rolled the stone from the door of the sepulchre, and the keepers fell as dead men, and the Son of God arose. There is the work of an angel, of one who was reserved for this purpose, and there are convoys of angels who are schooled and trained to this work, and they can open a grave much quicker than an Irishman can with a spade. At the presence of one of these angels, the earth trembles and throws out its dead. The angels will do this, but not until we have done our best. I have frequently said to my son, 'You take this bag and carry it to a certain place.' 'I cannot father,' 'Well take hold of it and try'; he takes hold of it and it is a pretty good lift for him; and he begins to labor and lift with all his might, at the moment he begins to try, the fathers hand helps him to balance the load. It is just so in this work. Now says the Lord, 'I have tried you, and you have done as I have told you, and my hand is ever ready to help you. If I were hungry I would not ask you for food; if I were naked I would not ask you for clothing.' I do not know how many spirits of the condemned are at work making white robes for the just, and pure; I do not know how much they are spinning, and how many white robes they are making for the saints and the redeemed; but they have to work out all their indebtedness in prison; and if God is hungry or naked he will not call upon you; for he has millions of resources in another quarter. He can get along without us doing the work, but he gives us a privilege of doing it if we will; and if we will, he will bless us, and if we will not, he don't care.

"There are some men in this kingdom who have an idea it cannot roll on without them; 'I must be there, I am of so much consequence and importance, that if I should happen to set up my will in opposition to any measure, the wheels would be retarded in their onward course.' 'But,' says the Lord, 'If you do not wish to serve me, go your own way; I have plenty at my command, and when you are out of the way I will let you see that my kingdom will roll on faster without you than with you; still if you desire to take a part among the multitude of my servants in rolling it on, I will make you an honored instrument in doing so.'

"I think I have spoken about as long as is necessary. Br. Kimball wished me to speak upon this subject. Br. Young will be in soon, and probably there are other matters to be attended to. I might continue to address you, but I esteem it unnecessary. I believe I have fulfilled the charge laid upon me to show the necessity of putting forth our own hands to pave the way for the exhibition of the great power of the Almighty in accomplishing his purposes on the earth. I wish to say a word or two more, and then I am done. It is the desire of my heart that we may all live before God, and before one another in the way and manner that shall reflect honor upon the cause of the Latter-day Saints—upon Mormonism as it is termed. They may publish their squibs in the newspapers, and tell about our wickedness and corruptions, but if we only live to reflect honor on the cause of God it matters little what our enemies say.

"In a communication from an editor to me he quotes from the 17th chapter of Jeremiah where it says 'Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and making flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord, for he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited.' 'Now' says he, 'how exactly is this fulfiled in the followers of Joe Smith that have gone to Utah Territory; there they are in a salt and barren land, and they do not know when good comes.' In my communication, I have told him he is mistaken; for we have no more salt here than is necessary; but the quotation made me think of Long Island for the early settlers were surrounded with salt, and it must allude to Long Island; and if it would not suit there he might apply it to the early settlers of Syracuse; it is all in that country.

"But to turn the scale; where shall be the habitation of the righteous? The old prophet says, 'He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressors, and shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil; he shall dwell on high; his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks; bread shall be given him; his water shall be sure.' Where is the people who have got more rocks than we have? Do we have bread, and plenty of it? Yes! We have had fine crops of wheat since the cricket and grasshopper war was over, and our waters are sure, for here we have them flowing down every street, in the midst of summer, and they are not salt waters neither, but they are fresh and good. How applicable are these sayings of the prophet to the Latter-day Saints in Salt Lake Valley. Their habitation is the 'Munitions of rocks,' and they ask no odds of the world, but they are subject to God who has redeemed this Basin, and put salt enough in it to save us. It is not a dry and barren ground, for we can make it rain when we please, and they cannot in Long Island. The Bible says, have salt within yourselves; we have it here, and if there comes along a villian who is worthy of it, we can salt him up in Salt Lake too. (Laughter.)

"There is another thing I want to say; we should live before God and one another so as to reflect honor upon the cause we have espoused, and never let satan gain an advantage over it, but like the true American soldier, let us keep our colors unfolded, and flying free, in the hour of battle; and let us all the time be right side up with care in the eyes of everybody. If you light a candle and set it on a table everybody in the house can see; so let your good works shine before men on earth and angels in heaven.

"I spoke in relation to some things on Friday evening about which I merely wish to say the sentiments I advanced with regard to certain doings here are unalterable in my heart; I care not whether it is Gentile or Mormon that defiles the land in which we dwell. Judgment begins at the House of God, and the Mormon will be the first to feel the chastening of the Almighty, because we looked for better things of him; he has light and knowledge, and knows better than to be guilty of such acts. If we always think of God, and maintain our integrity to Him, to ourselves and towards our neighbors, the unvirtuous and wicked cannot find access into our society. If the gates of the citadel of virtue is never opened to our enemy, he may strive in vain. He cannot find access unless the way is voluntarily opened, and he invited and encouraged. Let every man and woman be on their guard and situate themselves so that strangers and bogus Mormons can neither rob you of your virtue, nor of your money or goods, that they cannot do a wrong that will bring a stain upon the fair name of the saints, or damn themselves forever. I say then let the standard of our integrity, and virtue be erect, and let it never lean to the right hand or to the left.

"I have no blessings upon them that will do these things, even as I have said, whether they be Jew or Gentile, bond or free; but the man or woman that observes the common laws of propriety, and walks uprightly, I do not care whether they be black or white if they mind their own business, I say God bless them, and guide them in the way of life everlasting. But the villian who seeks to lay the axe at the foot of truth and to bring dishonor upon the saints, I say curses be upon that individual, let him die the death of the ungodly. I do not wish anybody to apply this to themselves unless they are worthy of it; and if I am met in the streets and assailed with having spoken rashly; I say you are the man; the saddle fits you; but those who are not guilty but are secure in the possession of their virtue and good intentions, may the blessings of the Lord be upon you forever: Amen.

A Wholesome Thought.

"Bring hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind," if you would have them healed of their many infirmities. We boldly and fearlessly assert that the Mustang Liniment will positively CURE Rheumatism. Let any who are afflicted with that most painful complaint try it thoroughly according to the directions, and if they are not cured, we will give them their money back. What more can we say? It will also cure the Piles. Thousands have tried it—and all were cured. Bruises, Sprains, Sores, or Eruptions, fade away as if touched by the magician's wand. Its application to a Burn or Scald acts like "oil upon the troubled waters," The tempest of pain and agony is soon spilled, and the patient is hushed to quiet and peaceful slumbers. "There is a balm for every wound," and that balm is the Mustang Liniment. Everybody that sells medicines keeps it for sale. "Hold your Horses," and if they are crippled, galled, or sprained, use the Mustang Liniment.

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of

MAN OR ANIMALS,

Requiring an External Application.

Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,

J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,

JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:

Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.

I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.

I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.

GEORGE BACKSTER.

CORINTHIAN MELODY.

Music—"HARK!"

The Hat was on his head,
The passing crowd admired;
A whispering maiden said—
See how that man's attired!
What beauty in his waist,
How matchless his cravat,
And then how much he's graced
With that resplendant HAT!

He turned him from the throng,
As he left Corinthian Hall;
But as he moves along,
On him all glances fall.
Cried one—"Not heaven's clear blue,
With starry radiance set,
Appears more fair to view
Than yonder lustrous jet!"

Its fame by all was raised;
His bosom swells with pride;
While they admiring gazed,
He raised his voice and cried—
"Friends, would you have my joy,
And win an equal fame,
Your Hats on Broadway buy;
There's a few more left—the same."

SPIRITUAL COMMUNICATION.

BY ELDER P. P. PRATT.

I was led to reflection on this subject, not only by my acquaintance with the present state of the world, and the movements and powers which seem new to many, but because this text, written by Isaiah so many centuries since, and copied by Nephi ages before the birth of Jesus Christ, seemed as appropriate and as directly adapted to the present state of things as if written but yesterday, or a year since.

"Should not a people seek unto their God for the living to hear from the dead?" is a question by the prophet, and at a time when they shall invite you to seek unto those familiar with spirits, and to wizards, etc. or in other words, to magnetizers, rappers, clairvoyents, writing mediums, etc. When they shall say these things unto you, then is the time to consider the question of that ancient prophet—"Should not a people seek unto their God for the living to hear from the dead?"

We hear much, of late, about visions, trances, clairvoyance, mediums of communication with the spirit world, writing mediums, etc., by which the world of spirits is said to have found means to communicate with spirits in the flesh. They are not working in a corner. The world is agitated on these subjects. Religious ministers are said to preach, editors to write and print, judges to judge, etc., by this kind of inspiration. It is brought into requisition to develop the sciences, to detect crime, and in short, to mingle in all the interests of life.

In the first place, what are we talking about, when we touch the question of the living hearing from the dead? It is a saying, that "dead men tell no tales." If this is not in the Bible, it is somewhere else; and if it be true it is just as good as if it were in the Bible.

The Sadducees in the time of Jesus believed there were no such things as angels and spirits, or existence in another sphere; that when an individual was dead it was the final end of the workings of his intellectual being, that the elements were dissolved, and mingled with the great fountain from which they emanated, which was the end of individuality, or conscious existence.

Jesus, in reply to them, took up the argument from the Scriptures, or history of the ancient fathers, venerated by reason of antiquity, in hopes, by this means, to influence the Sadducees, or at least the Pharisees and others, by means so powerful and so well adapted to the end in view.

Said he, God has declared himself the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Now God is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living; as much as to say that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were not dead, but living; that they had never been dead at all, but had always been living; that they never did die, in the sense of the word the Sadducees supposed, but were absolutely alive.

Now, if intelligent beings, who once inhabited flesh, such as our fathers, mothers, wives, children, etc. have really died, and are now dead in the sense of the word, as understood by the ancient Sadducees or modern Atheist, then it is in vain to talk of converse with the dead. All controversy, in that case, is at an end on the subject of correspondence with the dead, because an intelligence must exist before it can communicate. If these individuals are dead, in the sense that the human body dies, then there is no communication from them. This we know, because of our own observation and experience. We have seen many dead bodies, but have never known of a single instance of any intelligence communicated therefrom.

Jesus, in his argument with the Sadducees, handled the subject according to the strictest principles of ancient and modern theology, and true philosophy. He conveyed the idea in the clearest terms, that an individual intelligence or identity could never die.

The outward tabernacle, inhabited by a spirit, returns to the spirit from which it emanated. But the thinking being, the individual, active agent or identity that inhabited that tabernacle, never ceased to exist, to think, act, live, move, or have a being; never ceased to exercise those sympathies, affections, hopes and aspirations, which are founded in the very nature of intelligences, being the inherent and invaluable principles of their eternal existence.

No, they never cease. They live, move, think, act, converse, feel, love, hate, believe, doubt, hope, and desire.

But what are they, if they are not flesh and bones? What are they, if they are not tangible to our gross organs of sense? Of what are they composed, that we can neither see, hear, nor handle them, except we are quickened, or our organs touched by the principles of vision, clairvoyance, or spiritual sight? What are they? Why, they are organized intelligences. What are they made of? They are made of the element which we call spirit, which is as much an element of material existence, as earth, air, electricity, or any other tangible substance recognized by man; but so subtle, so refined in its nature, that it is not tangible to our gross organs. It is invisible to us, unless we are quickened by a portion of the same element; and, like electricity, and several other substances, it is only known or made manifest to our senses by its effects. For instance, electricity is not always visible to us, but its existence is made manifest by its operations upon the wire, or upon the nerves. We cannot see the air, but we feel its effects, and without it we cannot breathe.

If a wire were extended in connection with the equatorial line of our globe in one entire circle of 25,000 miles in extent, the electric fluid would convey a token from one intelligence to another, the length of the entire circle, in a very small portion of a second, or, we will say, in the twinkling of an eye. This, then, proves that if the spiritual fluid or element called electricity is an actual, physical, and tangible power, and is as much a real and tangible substance as the ponderous rocks which were laid on yesterday in the foundation of our contemplated Temple.

It is true that this subtle fluid or spiritual element is endowed with the powers of locomotion in a far greater degree than the more gross or solid elements of nature; that its refined particles penetrate amid the other elements with greater ease, and meet with less resistance from the air or other substances, than would the more gross elements. Hence its speed, or superior powers of motion.

Now let us apply this philosophy to all the degrees of spiritual element, from electricity, which may be assumed to be one of the lowest or more gross elements of spiritual matter, up through all the gradations of the invisible fluids, till we arrive at a substance so holy, so pure, so endowed with intellectual attributes and sympathetic affections, that it may be said to be on a par, or level, in its attributes, with man.

Let a given quantity of this element thus endowed or capacitated, be organized in the size and form of man, let every organ be developed, formed, and endowed precisely after the pattern of man's outward or fleshy tabernacle, what would we call this individual, organized portion of the spiritual element?

We would call it a spiritual body, an individual intelligence, an agent endowed with life, with a degree of independence, or inherent will, with the powers of motion, of thought, and with the attributes of moral, intellectual, and sympathetic affections and emotions.

We would conceive of it as possessing eyes to see, ears to hear, hands to handle; as in possession of the organ of taste, of smelling, and of speech.

Such beings are we, when we have laid off this outward tabernacle of flesh. We are every way interested, in our relationship and hopes, as if we had continued to live, but had stepped aside, and were experiencing the loneliness of absence for a season. Our ancestors, our posterity, to the remotest ages of antiquity, or of future time, are all brought within the circle of our sphere of joys, sorrows, interests, or expectations; each forms a link in the great chain of life, and in the science of mutual salvation, improvement and exaltation through the blood of the Lamb.

Our prospects, hopes, faith, charity, enlightenment, improvement, in short, all our interests, are blended, and more or less influenced by the acts of each.

Is this the kind of being that departs from our sight when its earthly tabernacle is laid off and the veil of eternity is lowered between us? Yes, verily. Where then does it go?

To heaven, says one; to the eternal world of glory, says another; to the celestial kingdom, to inherit thrones and crowns, in all the fulness of the presence of the Father and of Jesus Christ, says a third.

Now, my dear hearers, these things are not so. Nothing of the kind. Thrones, kingdoms, crowns, principalities, and powers, in the celestial and eternal worlds, and the fulness of the presence of the Father, and of his son Jesus Christ, are reserved for resurrected beings, who dwell in immortal flesh. The world of resurrected beings and the world of spirits, are two distinct spheres, as much so as our own sphere is distinct from that of the spirit world.

Where, then, does the spirit go, on its departure from its earthly tabernacle? It passes to the next sphere of human existence, called the world of spirits, a veil being drawn between us in the flesh, and that world of spirits Well, says one, is there no more than one place in the spirit world? Yes, there are many places and degrees in that world, as in this. Jesus Christ, when absent from his flesh, did not ascend to the Father, to be crowned and enthroned in power. Why? "Because he had not yet a resurrected body, and had therefore a mission to perform in another sphere. Where then did he go? To the world of spirits, to wicked, sinful spirits, who died in their sins, being swept off by the flood of Noah. The thief on the cross, who died at the same time, also went to the same world, and to the same particular place in the same world, for he was a sinner, and would of course go to the prison of the condemned, there to await the ministry of that Gospel which had failed to reach his case while on the earth.

How many other places Jesus might have visited while in the spirit world, is not for me to say, but there was a moment in which the poor, uncultivated, ignorant thief was with him in that world. And as he commenced, though late, to repent while on the earth, we have reason to hope that that moment was improved by our Saviour in ministering to him that Gospel which he had no opportunity to teach him while expiring on the cross. "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise," said Jesus, or, in other words, this day shalt thou be with me in the next sphere of existence—the world of spirits.

Now mark the difference. Jesus was there, as a preacher of righteousness, as one holding the keys of apostleship, or priesthood, anointed to preach glad tidings to the meek, to bind up the broken hearted, to preach liberty to the captive, and the opening of the prison to them that was bound. What did the thief go there for? He went there in a state of ignorance and sin, being uncultivated, unimproved, and unprepared for salvation. He went there to be taught, and to complete that repentance, which in a dying moment he commenced on the earth. He had beheld Jesus expire on the cross, and he had implored him to remember him when he should come into possession of his kingdom. The Saviour, under these extreme circumstances, did not then teach him the Gospel. but referred him to the next opportunity, when they should meet in the spirit world. If the thief thus favored continued to improve, he is no doubt waiting in hope for the signal to be given, at the sound of the next trump, for him to re-enter the fleshly tabernacle, and to ascend to a higher degree of felicity. Jesus Christ, on the other hand, departed from the spirit world on the third day, and re-entered his fleshly tabernacle, in which he ascended, and was crowned at the right hand of the Father. Jesus Christ, then, and the thief on the cross, have not dwelt together in the same kingdom or place, for this eighteen hundred years, nor have we proof that they have seen each other during that time.

To say that Jesus Christ dwells in a world of spirits, with those whose bodies are dead, would not be the truth. He is not there. He only stayed there till the third day. He then returned to his tabernacle, and ministered among the sons of earth for forty days, where he ate, drank, talked, preached, reasoned out of the Scriptures, commissioned, commanded, blessed, etc. Why did he do this? Because he had ascended on high, and been crowned with all power in heaven and on earth, therefore he had authority to do all these things.

So much, then, for that wonderful question that has been asked by our Christian neighbors so many thousand times, in the abundance of their charity for those who, like the thief on the cross, die in their sins, or without baptism and the other Gospel ordinances.

The question naturally arises—Do all the people who die without the Gospel hear it as soon as they arrive in the world of spirits? To illustrate this, let us look at the dealings of God with the people of this world. "What can we reason but from what we know?" We know and understand the things of this world, in some degree, because they are visible, and we are daily conversant with them. Do all the people of this world hear the Gospel as soon as they are capable of understanding? No, indeed, but very few in comparison have heard it all.

Ask the poor Lamanites who have, with their fathers before them, inhabited these mountains for a thousand years, whether they have ever heard the Gospel, and they will tell you nay. But why not? Is it not preached on the earth? Yea, verily, but the earth is wide, and circumstances differ very greatly among its different inhabitants. The Jews once had the Gospel, with its apostleship, powers, and blessings offered unto them, but they rejected it as a people, and for this reason it was taken from them, and thus many generations of them have been born, and have lived and died without it. So with the Gentiles, and so with the Lamanites. God has seen proper to offer the Gospel, with its priesthood and powers, in different ages and countries, but it has been as often rejected, and therefore withdrawn from the earth. The consequence is, that the generations of men have, for many ages, come and gone in ignorance of its principles, and the glorious hopes they inspire.

Now these blessings would have continued on the earth, and would have been enjoyed in all the ages and nations of man but for the agency of the people. They chose their own forms of government, laws, institutions, religions, rulers, and priests, instead of yielding to the influence and guidance of the chosen vessels of the Lord, who were appointed to instruct and govern them.

Now, how are they situated in the spirit world? If we reason from analogy, we should at once conclude that things exist there after the same pattern. I have not the least doubt but there are spirits there who have dwelt there a thousand years, who, if we would converse with them face to face, would be found as ignorant of the truths, the ordinances, powers, keys, priesthood, resurrection, and eternal life of the body, in short, as ignoran of the fulness of the Gospel, with its hopes and consolations, as the Pope of Rome, or the Bishop of Canterbury, or as are the Chiefs of the Indian tribes of Utah.

And why this ignorance in the spirit world? Because a portion of the inhabitants thereof are found unworthy of the consolations of the Gospel, until the fulness of time, until they have suffered in hell, in the dungeons of darkness, or the prisons of the condemned, amid the buffetings of fiends, and malicious and lying spirits.

As in earth, so in the spirit world. No person can enter into the privileges of the Gospel until the keys are turned, and the Gospel opened by those in authority, for all which there is a time, according to the wise dispensations of justice and mercy.

It was many, many centuries before Christ lived in the flesh, that a whole generation, eight souls excepted, were cut off by the flood. What became of them? I do not know exactly all their history in the spirit world. But this much I know—they have heard the Gospel from the lips of a crucified Redeemer, and have the privilege of being judged according to men in the flesh. As these persons were ministered to by Jesus Christ, after he had been put to death, it is reasonable to suppose that they had waited all that time without the knowledge or privileges of the Gospel.

How long did they wait? You may reckon for yourselves. The long ages, centuries, thousands of years which intervened between the flood of Noah and the death of Christ. Oh! the weariness, the tardy movement of time, the lingering ages for a people to dwell in condemnation, darkness, ignorance, and despondency, as a punishment for their sins. For they had been filled with violence while on the earth in the flesh, and had rejected the preaching of Noah and the prophets which were before him.

"CASTING OUT DEVILS."

We have been taught to believe that the days of miracles were past, and that the people of this generation were not liable to that terrible affliction common to the wicked in the patriarchal day—that of being "possessed of devils." Although many worthy and intelligent gentleman have related marvellous stories of spirit-possessed tables, chairs, musical instruments, and other household articles, we have been all along rather incredulous of belief in these supernatural agencies, and set them down as mental delusions, or as Professor Spencer would term them, "Psychological manifestations" But we witnessed, on Sunday night, an instance of "casting out devils," which was no deception, but a stern reality.

The Church of the Latter-day Saints—the old Fourth street Methodist Church—was the scene of the "casting out" operation, and a stray sprig of the Emerald Isle the recipient of the benefit. The Emeralder was possessed of three spirits—the spirit of whisky, the spirit of curiosity, and the spirit of loquacity. The first led him through the streets, when he ought to have been at home with Bridget; the second induced him to enter the church of the Saints at "meeting time," and the third prompted him to "talk in meeting" in a very loud voice. The Elder who was holding forth from the pulpit in a strain of impassioned eloquence, was suddenly "brought up standing" by certain loud and blasphemous ejaculations from the spiritualized Gentile, and one of the brethern descended from his exalted seat, approached Murphy, and taking him by the nape of the neck, sent him kiting over the platform into the street in double quick time. The Elder afterwards remarked to the congregation that it was nothing new for the Saints to be disturbed in their devotions by such outsiders—having frequently had tin pails, stools and other missiles, hurled at their heads by their persecutors. They had become adepts in the science of casting out devils, and could perform that miracle with great facility.—[Herald.

A MIRACULOUS BILL.

The following items are stated by a celebrated tourist, to have actually been presented in a bill of work done in repairing the Lutheran church, at Hamburgh:

For mending the ten crmmandments.

For a nose and three fingers on one of the robbers on the cross.

For scouring and brushing Pontius Pilate.

For painting and gilding the wings of the angel Gabriel.

For half a breast to Mary Magdalene.

For cleaning the sky in the east, and adding sundry stars.

For cleansing and painting the High Priest's Maid, and adding color to her cheeks.

For putting a new feather in the cockade of St. Peter.

For brushing and brightening hell-fire, and providing tails and horns for two devils.

For beautifying and ornamenting some of the Elders, and strengthening their backs.—[Ex.

THREE HUNDRED AND SIXTY PERSONS FROZEN TO DEATH.—General report gives out that on the 22d, and not far from Odessa, more than 360 foot-soldiers and several Jewish carters perished in a snow-storm. The causes of death were the want of adequate warm clothing, and the sudden set in of a frost; and it is also said that the wagons and teams had gone on before the men, who were thus left behind; and as the soldiers had on wet clothes from the previous rain, they froze into a crust of ice when the frost began. They looked about for a bridge, but could not find any. The day after, groups of frozen dead bodies were found, and between 20 and 30 men lay in each heap.—[Eng. Paper.

ARRIVAL OF A MORMON PREACHER.

Among the passengers in the John Gilpin, arrived on Monday from Calcutta, was Samuel A. Woolley, a preacher of the Mormon faith. We learn from Brother Woolley that he left Salt Lake City about three years since for the East Indies, where he preached, and succeeded in making a number of proselytes among the natives of Calcutta.—He would have made more, he says, if his money held out—the missionaries who have the most cash always being the most successful in making converts. He also informs us that the usual rate of pay for a convert to Christianity of the first class, is about ten rupees per month—if more is offered by another sect, the freshly converted heathen abjures his former faith, and takes up a new religion with every extra supply of rupees. Brother Woolley is a native of Pennsylvania, having been born near Philadelphia, and is a smart, active specimen of a Pennsylvania Yankee.—[Boston Times.

MORE RUSSIAN ATROCITIES.

"The Russians, puzzled, no doubt, by the silence of our batteries, exert themselves day and night, but particularly at night, to ascertain the cause of our passive attitude. They made another sortie in the night of the 24th against our lines, but were quickly repulsed. The enemy directed, at the same time, an attack against the most advanced works of the English, which was likewise unsuccessful. After having vigorously beaten back the Russian column, the English were returning to their trenches, when they perceived, in a well, the bodies of several of their comrades, completely naked, and pierced with wounds. It was evident that those English soldiers were either surprised by the enemy, or being wounded in an engagement, had fallen into their hands, and that they were afterwards cowardly butchered, in order to be stripped of their clothes; for it is not customary to find in such a place, nor in such a condition, the bodies of soldiers fairly killed on a field of battle."—[London Weekly Dispatch.

A SINGED CAT.

The New York and Erie railroad office in this city, was yesterday the scene of an incident which is worthy of being recorded with the events of the day, not only because it was a good joke, but because it bears on its face a moral:

An old man enters the effice—in age apparently verging on three score years; his clothes are of very coarse texture, ventilated in some places, and rather dingy withal; his head, with its long grey locks, is covered with a hard worn beaver; his face, the lower part of which is ornamented with a grizzly gray beard, has an humble appearance, and his dull eyes have an imploring expression; he has a folded paper in his hand, and advancing to the desk of the first clerk, he extends it.

Clerk—Go away, sir; I havn't anything for you.

Old Man—(With a look of supprise,) But, sir—

Clerk—No buts about it sir; I tell you I have nothing for you; go out!

The old man with a mingled look of supprise and indignation, passes on to the desk of another clerk and offers the paper.

Clerk—Don't interrupt me sir; get out of the office! I give nothing to beggars.

The truth begins to reveal itself to the old man's understanding; that last word has rekindled the fires of his youth; his face glows and his eyes flash with indignation; he is about to retort sharply upon the man who called him a "beggar," when a third party interferes, and directs him to the Cashier, to whom the old man hands the papers. The Cashier unfolds them, and finds, instead of begging certificates, New York and Erie Railroad income bonds to the amount of ten thousand dollars! Cashier looks surprised—the old man demands his money—Clerk No. 1 takes a seat on the cross-bar of his desk, out of sight—Clerk No. 2 turns red, purple and white by turns; the old man receives his money and makes a noisy exit, mumbling something about counter-jumpers and broad-cloth.—[N. POPULATION OF ST. LOUIS.

In 1830 it was	5,852
In 1840 it was	16,496
In 1850 it was	77,860

By the census lately taken by the city, we have a population of 97,218 in the six Wards. Outside of the city limits, we have a population of about thirty thousand. This shows an increase of about ten thousand a year since 1850.—[Mirror

THERE are within the territories of the United States, upwards of four hundred thousand Indians, of which there are about three hundred thousand in California, Oregon and Texas.

The following are the number of some of the largest tribes in 1853. Creeks, 25,000; Cherokees, Chipewas, 8,000; California Indians, 100,000; Oregon and Washington Indians, 33,000; Utah, 11,500; New Mexico, 45,000; Texas, 29,000; Missouri Valley Indians, 45,000; Arkansas Indians, 20,000.

OUR ANTIPODES.—The Chinese mourn in white, put their saucers on their cups, punish the innocent to find out the guilty, shake their own hands instead of those of their friends, whiten the soles of their boots, their compass points South, the earth is a perfectly square, flat body, the left hand is the post of honor. Rogues are whipped to death with bamboos; sometimes squeezed between two boards, so that from a sharper he becomes converted into a flat.—[Wm's Quarterly.

THE largest library in the world is believed to be the Bibliotheque Nationale, in the Rue Richelieu, Paris, containing 1,400,000 volumes, mostly in handsome binding, of colored leather, enriched with gilt, and placed in solid walls, from floor to ceiling, with a front net work for protection as high as the hand can reach from a standing position upon the floor.

MR. GEO. W. CURTIS, in a lecture at New York, spoke of those pious people who clapped their hands so tight in prayer that they could not get them open when the contribution box came round. A good hit.

AMEN TO THAT SWEET PRAYER.—The Emperor of Russia hopes to be found with the "Sword in his hand, and the Cross in his heart." Europe echoes his hope, simply reversing the locality of the two articles.

ANONYMOUS COMMUNICATIONS.

We have received, of late, several anonymous articles designed for the Luminary. Now, we wish it distinctly understood, that we shall pay no attention whatever to such correspondence; but we recomend to the writers of such articles, to crawl to some portion of the earth, where no one can see them, and we further suggest to one in particular, to search for some one as mean as himself, to terminate his miserable and cowardly career.

CALIFORNIA MAIL COMPANY.

JEFFERSON CITY, Feb. 18, 1855.

The charter for this company, which passed the House by a large majority, and which will pass the Senate without opposition, is one of the most favorable that has been granted at the present session, and one of which we have no doubt but that a line of transportation for passengers and freight, will soon be established between San Francisco and St. Louis. The bill was introduced and urged to it passage by Mr. Lightner, and he certainly deserves the greatest credit for the diligence and zeal he has manifested in its behalf. If once this mail line shall be established upon the Central route, where it is bound to go, it will do more to enforce the great Pacific railway than all the speeches in Congress, or any action the federal government may take in regard to it. It will mark out the first line of continuous settlements, up the valley of the Kansas and the Huerfano, through the Coochatopee, and thence by the passes, of the Sierra Nevada into California, and when this is done, the work is more than half accomplished. If this company too, shall have liberal donations of land from Congress, and shall receive for the transportation of the mails one-half of what is now paid the steamships for carrying the same by the Isthmus—the proceeds alone will be sufficient to build gradually this magnificent highway."

It is written by one of the old Prophets, that an highway shall be cast up in the last days, in the Deserts, by which the ransomed of the Lord shall journey to Zion, with songs of praise and everlasting joy.

That change is stamped upon all things created, is a fact that will not be controverted. Changes are following each other in rapid succession in all portions of the earth; antiquated dynasties of the old world, and more recent organizations of the new, are sharing in the universal change; even heaven and hell appear effected or agitated by the times we live in. The old beaten tract of our forefathers will no longer satisfy the go-aheadative spirit of this generation. The cast-iron creeds of our fathers are trampled under foot as relics of the dark ages; the slow coach movements in the complicated business of life and death are altogether intolerable to the restless spirit of the age. Railways, steamships, electric telegraphs, and a thousand other inventions, are called into daily requisition to facilitate the schemes and speculations of merchants, warriors, politicians, and others of the interested fraternity. Schemes and plans are devised and executed which perfectly astonish and bewilder the ignorant and uninformed, until by proximate association and familiar intercourse they cease to be wonderful. Mesmerists, clairvoyants, spirit-rappers, writing mediums, and familiar spirits, are as numerous as were the necromancers, sorcerers, sooth-sayers and magicians in days of old, and it has already become as common for spiritualists to inquire of the dead as it is for Saints to inquire of the Lord, which must lead the studious and reflective to inquire whereunto things are tending, whether to union and perfection or to dissolution and destruction. These are questions worthy the consideration of all mankind; questions in which all are more or less interested.

About twenty-five years ago a dispatch was received from the eternal world that caused all who heard it to wonder and marvel. One of the old prophets said: "The Lord shall come, and shall not keep silence." In accordance therewith, he spake unto Joseph, saying, I will make my power known through you to this generation, as I did unto former generations, by my servants, the prophets. "And it shall come to pass that there shall be a great work in the land, even among the Gentiles, for their folly and their abominations shall be made manifest in the eyes of all people; for I am God, and mine arm is not shortened; and I will show miracles, signs and wonders unto all those who believe on my name; and whoso shall ask it in my name in faith, they shall cast out devils, they shall heal the sick, they shall cause the blind to receive their sight, and the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak, and the lame to walk; and the time speedily cometh that great things are to be shown forth unto the children of men; but without faith shall not anything be shown forth except desolations upon Babylon, the same which has made all nations drunk with the wine of the wrath of her fornication. And there are none that doeth good except those who are ready to receive the fulness of my gospel, which I have sent forth unto this generation." Page 117 Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Nearly eighteen hundred years had quietly passed away: the religious and political government of the world had been apparently left to bigoted priests, tyrannical rulers, and foul-hearted demagogues, who, by their cunning, craftiness, and ill-gotten power, had bound the fetters of tradition, ignorance and superstition so closely around mankind, that when the announcement was made that God had again spoken as in days of old, and had asserted his right to govern and control the world, religiously and politically, but few would believe the testimony; but it caused the wicked and ungodly to fear and tremble, feeling their craft was in danger; and then the poor clergy groaned and cried, Revelation in this age! Impossible! God will never speak again to mortal man. The age of miracles and revelations has passed away, indeed they are no longer needed. Communications from the other world! Oh, blasphemy! delusion!

A few short years has produced wondrous changes, for by the force of truth, tradition and prejudice have been compelled to relinquish their iron grasp upon the humble and the honest hearted, and many ten thousands have endorsed and boldly proclaimed the fact that God has spoken, and revealed the way of life and truth, performing wonders as in days of old. The press so vigorously employed a few years since to invalidate this testimony, is now extensively engaged in the vindication and establishment thereof, and the print of its thousand tongues is seen from the Rocky Mountains to the most distant nations of the earth.

Those who have rejected the message of heaven are left a prey to every foul and unclean spirit. It would indeed appear from facts constantly transpiring, that every evil and corrupt spirit has been let loose to distract and deceive the inhabitants of the earth; and by the very principle they have despised and rejected when sent to them by the Lord from heaven, have the spirits overcome and ensnared them. Judges, lawyers, doctors, editors, and all classes of community who once declaimed and waged war against direct revelation, are now firm believers and staunch advocates of this doctrine, but it must come to them in their way. It must come either through a writing medium or an old table, or they won't have it. Dr. Hatch, at a conference held in New York, Jan. 13th, said: "For one, and I speak the sentiments of most spiritualists when I say, that I am convinced that there is an intercourse opened between us and higher spheres—that tables do move, that raps are heard, that the organs of speech are controlled, that persons become clairvoyant and clairaudiant." There is something too insignificant and contemptible in the above, and in spirit-rapping in general, to comport with the august character of Jehovah; there is something too devilish in the destruction of human reason, of which the lunatic asylums bare record concerning spiritualism, to be ascribed to the God of Israel. Sorcery, witchcraft, mesmerism, clairvoyance, spirit-rapping, &c., have led thousands to lunacy and suicide, and thousands more are following in the wake. Who has hatched all this evil? Not the Doctor, certainly; and certain it never came from heaven; then whence its origin. We leave our readers to judge for themselves.

Mr. Toothly said at the conference above named, "Two millions of our inhabitants are now convinced that spiritualism is true, fundamentally and radically true, and yet, as our brother has suggested, what is going to come of it? Nothing; until we learn how to apply it."

It is admitted that there are two millions of believers in spiritual manifestations and communications. Yet years have passed away and nothing is accomplished but turning a few tables, and some few tyroes' brains. On the 15th of January last the aggregate of wisdom and intelligence in spiritual matters, in conference assembled, informs us, unequivocally, that spiritualism will accomplish nothing, until they, the chief repositories and directors, learn how to apply it. Till then spirits may rap and write, but all in vain; French, English, Italian, and even American tables, may perform their intelligent and eccentric movements, and yet be entirely useless, unless their numerous turns be turned in a right direction. But, alas, where shall a man be found with sufficient wisdom and power to control these ungovernables creatures? For though tables do move, though raps are heard, though organs of speech are controlled, and though dead men begin to tell tales, and though judges, lawyers, doctors, and parsons, and other smart specimens of human kind are chosen as spiritual mediums, yet all is useless, and indeed worse than useless—'tis destructive of human reason, subversive of the order of heaven, and antagonistic to the interests of the kingdom of God; and we have no sympathy for it whatever. But we are willing that it should spread itself abroad among the nations of the earth until it has accomplished the mission for which 'tis sent, when, in the valley of Jehosaphat or Hamon Gog, at one fell swoop of the Almighty, hosts will disappear from the earth; and then the spirits that have deceived the nations, and those that have been deceived, will be confined in their prison houses for at least one thousand years. Judge Edmonds, in his introduction to a work upon spiritual communications, admits that there are contradictions and inconsistencies in spiritual intercourse; but because he has heard raps, seen tables move, and witnessed other manifestations of spiritual power, (which could as well have been performed by the sorcerers and magicians of Egypt, as by the spirit-rappers of America,) he prostrates his reason, his talents, and his soul and body at his shrine who said, all these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Lest we should be thought too severe in our remarks upon the Judge, we will quote his own words: "I, for one, see and acknowledge in this a power mightier than belongs to mere earthly humanity, and bend in humble adoration in its presence; but too conscious that without its aid I cannot grasp the mighty truth it can teach."

It may be seen by the above, that simply because he discovers a superhuman power in spirit rappings, he bows the knee in humble adoration and worships it. If this may be taken as a general sample of the faith and infatuated devotion of spiritualists to superhuman power, irrespective of its source, their position is truly pitiable, for when the celebrated character presents himself, exercising all the power of the first beast, doing great wonders, so that he maketh fire to come down from heaven on earth, in the sight of men, deceiving those that dwell on earth by the means of the miracles which he had power to do, there is no philosophy of which the spiritualists are in possession that can save them from bending in humble adoration and worshipping the beast, and more especially as it is said as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.

For a further development of this subject we refer our readers to a discourse by Parley P. Pratt, which will be found in other columns of our paper, and will be read with great interest.

HORRIBLE MURDER.

This city was thrown into considerable excitement on Wednesday last, by the following disgraceful and bloody tragedy: Between one and two o'clock in the afternoon, Robert O'Blenis, a wealthy, and of course respectable citizen, had a difficulty in the bar-room of the Planters' House with Benjamin F. Brand, a Deputy Marshal. After some altercation, in which Brand demanded an apology for an insulting epithet used towards him. O'Blenis took from his pocket a revolver and shot Brand in several places, from the effects of which he died the same afternoon, leaving a fond and devoted wife and two children, as well as numerous friends to mourn his loss.

The Morning Herald says: "Brand will have hundreds to lament his death, while his murderer will have few sympathisers, save those who are his associates and companions. We knew Brand well, and can bear testimony to his amiable and inoffensive character. We also know the other party, and have known him for years as an outlaw and a bully."

O'Blenis gave himself up, and after a lengthy examination was committed to jail, to await action of the Grand Jury on the charge of murder.

Elder Milo Andrus, President of the church in St. Louis, started up the Missouri river, Feb. 17th, on the steamer Golden State, bound for Weston. He was accompanied by forty brethren, part of whom are in quest of employment in the upper country, and others are to assist in gathering stock, and preparing the way for our spring emigration.

He wrote us on the 20th ult., six miles from Jefferson City. With the exception of colds, the company were well. Weather then fine; river clear; boat getting along well, though it had experienced much difficulty in getting over bars. Speaks highly of the officers and management of the boat.

Since that time the weather has turned very cold, and the river opposite this city has been full of ice, and we fear the Golden State will not be able to reach its destination until warmer weather.

We hoped to have been able to present in this week's issue something later from them, but in this we are disappointed.

REMARKS BY ERASTUS SNOW,
Sunday, Feb. 13th, 1855.

Elder Edwards having given strong testimony in favor of Brigham Young, Elder Snow arose and took up the subject as follows:

"Br. Edwards' last testimony accounts for some other remarks he has made, which would appear to the faint-hearted, inexperienced Saint, and to the unbelieving world, the hight of folly; to me they are important truths—truths that thousands have demonstrated as clearly to their minds as any mathematical truth was ever demonstrated, or any other truth or matter of fact was ever demonstrated in our lives. To persons of a limited knowledge of the spirit of Mormonism, so called, and the true spirit that reigns within those who are the leaders of this church, the remarks we have heard from Br Edwards this morning would appear extreme folly, and indicate a weak and superstitious mind. They say Mormonism is absolute submission to one man—an entire yielding up to one man or a few men their souls and bodies, their judgment in matters of religion, and their temporal interests; selling themselves to the will of their fellow men; and so they judge who know no better. Another class of men look upon the Latter-day Saints as being the most independent, bold and fearless people in the world. They say you cannot frighten or turn them from their course—they are indomitable and more self-relying than any other people in the world. Yet others will call them superstitious slaves; but I know they are not. And why? Because they have no man or set of men for master. There are no leading spirits in this church who will be their masters, or tyrannise over them. Those who receive the spirit of Mormonism know it to be perfect freedom, and in it they enjoy themselves, and in it there is no bondage at all. It makes them free, bold, and resolute before men, and before the Almighty, meek and humble. They can be fashioned after his will to execute his purposes, but as far as this world is concerned, they are fearless and independent. There is no such thing as slaves where there are no masters.

"Br. Edwards' closing testimony concerning Brigham Young explains his previous remarks. He said that he knew he was a good man, and all the world could not make him believe to the contrary. How can this be, when he has never seen him? Can I explain this so that you can understand it? Every one who knows it comprehends and understands it for himself, by the spirit within him, and if he has not the knowledge by this means he would not understand it by my talking till Doomsday. Does the Lord tell anybody about Brigham Young? Yes, he does; and Saints have a testimony that he is a man of God and appointed to lead his people. Every man who enjoys the spirit of the Gospel has this testimony within him. We never saw the Almighty, nor his son Jesus, and yet we believe them to be wise and good, and we defend Jesus against those who say he was a bastard, and his mother a lewd woman. We did not associate with him and witness his course, and what we know about him, we know by the gift and power of the Holy Ghost, and if we don't know it by this means, we do not know it at all. I have been intimately acquainted with Brigham Young and Joseph Smith since 1835, and am an eye and ear witness, and I know them both to be good men, who have sought the glory of God and the interests of the church. Before the Lord called Joseph Smith he knew what he could do with him, and that he was the proper instrument, and if there had been any one else more fitted he would have selected him. Through many years experience he proved himself. He never forsook his friends, nor did he ever falter in the most trying circumstances, and he made many friends who never forsook him. When his enemies sought his life they watched by his side and at his door, to prevent the assassin from taking his life, nor did he falter in prison. His was one undeviating course. The Lord was with him. He did the work the Lord gave him to do, and when he had done it he sealed his testimony with his blood. If the Lord had wanted anybody else but Brigham Young to fill his place he would have put him there. He controls these things as he pleases; and just as easy as he can cause a spire of grass to grow and then wither again, can he build up or destroy. The Lord has always directed his people, and always will, and whoever lives by his instruction will have a safe and triumphant entry into the kingdom of God. I will bear the sins of every man and woman who will live up to and follow out in their lives the instructions as given through the leaders of this church. Those who have been most acquainted with Brigham Young have the most confidence in him, and know that he governs this people in righteousness. When we trust our property and ourselves in his hand it is as safe as if submitted into the hands of God. This is only what we have covenanted to do, to submit ourselves and all that we have into the hands of our heavenly Father. We have not got much. The Lord called the poor in the days of Jesus. "The poor had the Gospel preached to them," and unless we possess the feeling to sacrifice everything to the Lord, he will never give us much. If some of you were entrusted with riches you would be overcome of the world, and act very different from what you have towards the Lord and his people. Nevertheless he will try his people in riches and in poverty. Some he has tried, and found to be the same in wealth and in poverty. Those only can bear riches who have a determined purpose and unwavering faith in God; who do his will, and allow him to reign supreme in their hearts. Such can be entrusted with wealth, and will do good with it. Those who know Brigham Young, who have been with him in the travels, and persecutions, and poverty of this people, and afterwards seen his management in prosperity, feel as though the whole world could be entrusted safely in his hands. Is anybody in Utah afraid he will get their property or their wives and children? No. I tell you he would sooner give them his own. If you don't know it I do. If he would receive them he might be perfectly loaded down with them, and have as many as Solomon had, and yet I do not know that he has taken but one since he has been in the mountains.

"We hear talk about a wife of Gov. Young's going down east to lecture. Shall we hear anything more about it? Would not you like to see her here in St. Louis? It would be excellent eye salve for those who have got sore eyes; it would heal them to get sight of such a woman. Where does that woman exist? If any where, it is in the brain of the editor who published it, or the person who forged the lie. But this is deviating from what I was saying about Brigham Young. The people of Utah who know Br. Young best feel that everything would be safe in his hands.

"But to those who go there with corrupt hearts and evil eyes, everything looks wrong; a mole-hill to them looks to be as big as the Rocky mountains, and if there is no mole-hill, they imagine one. They soon leave for California or some other country, and they know no more of Brigham Young's true character than they know of the moon and its inhabitants. Those who know his business habits and proceedings among this people, feel all is safe in his hands, because he has proven himself, and withstood the temptations of lust and the allurements of wealth. If the Lord throws wealth in his hands he does good with it, and the people know it.

"As to tithing, I have no idea that ever he used a cent for the benefit of his family; but I do know that he has been the means of adding thousands and tens of thousands of dollars to the church during the last ten years, besides taking care of this people and his own family. The people there know when funds are entrusted to this church under his care they are safe, but if committed to a bank or mercantile house you don't know the day they will close their doors; not so in this church. So it was in Joseph's lifetime, with a few, but far from being the case with all. This people had not then learned as much as they know now. There was a portion who could trust him with their souls, but not with their dimes! There is a great change among this people in these things. This people are increasing in faith before God, and in confidence toward his servants and each other, while the world are hardening their hearts against the truth, against the testimony of His servants, preparing themselves for the great day of burning and desolution.

"This people have great cause of thankfulness before God, that he has given them the truth, and men that cannot be moved with the temptation of gold. He has given them pastors after his own heart, as he promised he would do, and from their midst."

Intolerance of the Military Authorities at Belgaum—Opening and Baptisms at Kotree—Review of an Invitation, &c.

BELGAUM, Oct. 22, 1854.

PRESIDENT RICHARDS:—Beloved Brother—My last to you intimated that I had obtained permission to reside, prench, &c., in this cantonment, and that a few had been baptised, and many more were interesting themselves in the principles of the Gospel.

It soon got blazed about that we were likely to do some good, and our common enemy, true to his general policy in the east, had it on the wing that the people, soldiers and all, were about to become Mormons and be off to the Salt Lake; and, as might be expected where the tactics of war are the order of the day, a party rose to arms to barricade the 64th against further Mormon invitations, which has proved as yet somewhat effectual. The first move was for some of the would-be cunning ones to find out who really had been baptised; and finding a victim in the person of brother George Gordon, assistant schoolmaster, he was, as I am informed, dragged before his commanding officer, accused of the notorious crime of having renounced Protestantism, for which, without the pretence of another charge against him, he was deprived of his situation, and turned back to the ranks as a private, with the additional stigma hung to his character, that his evidence should not thenceforth be taken in any court-martial.

The prosecutor, no doubt deeming this a fair beginning, here intimated that there were about half a dozen more in the regiment, and the honorable inquisitor licensed him to have them brought up, and he should serve them the same way. And further, if the Mormon missionary should again be found in the lines, a refreshing duck in the tank was to be administered to him, which, by the by, our worthy postmaster was, two days after, well nigh coming in for. He had entered the forbidden boundary and an equipped party gave chase, until they discovered, to their chagrin, that they had mistaken their man.

Possibly you may be disposed to censure the introduction here of inquisitor; but hold on, my brother, you will at once perceive the epithet to be most appropriate, when I inform you that brother Gordon's Bible, which lay in the school-room, and which he was accustomed to read after school hours, at the same time penciling any impressive portion for future reference, was taken to the orderly room and passed to the adjutant to this court for examination; and that an order was issued from the same place to gather up all Mormon books and tracts (whether public or private property) found in the barracks, and to have them burned by the meanest native menial.

The next necessity appeared to be to apply to the Brigadier-General to order my expulsion from the camp. This, however, he was not prepared to do in the absence of some reasonable cause. But in such hands, even this could not stand long in their way; a complaint therefore followed—the men went home to barracks from our meeting intoxicated. On this head I received an official note to wait on the General. I had become acquainted with the circumstance from which the impeachment was hatched, and from which it was current that we baptised the people in brandy, &c., but the circumstance not having the most distant connection with us, I was quite prepared to explode the whole fabrication. The General said he would make an immediate investigation of the matter, and let me know officially what he required of me. But twenty days have elapsed and I have heard nothing further of the matter, save vague reports.

General Wilson has evinced an upright disposition towards me from the first, but he is of a pliable disposition, which permits the combined opposition and insinuations of chaplains and officers to influence him. The commandant of the company of artillery gave an order, ere I attempted to enter his lines, that I was not to be permitted to do so; he had also lodged a complaint with the Brigadier because some of our works had been found among his men.

I have penned the foregoing outline for the purpose of conveying to you an idea of the obstacles that beset the path of the Elders of Israel throughout British India, and the almost impossibility of doing any great good, even where temporary privileges have been obtained. Nevertheless the Lord is our helper, we trust not in an arm of flesh; and the fiat of the Almighty shall not return to him void.

Poona seems to have yielded her quota for the present, and stands fast; and the monsoons having now subsided, brother Allan Findlay leaves there for Ahmudnugger and other minor stations about the first proximo.

The last news from the Scinde, the General of that division of the army had ratified the decision of the Brigadier of Kurachee to keep the Elders out of that camp. Two good men had been baptised. Elder Leonard had left Elder Musser there, had gone up the Indus to Kotree and Hydrabad, and had found an open door in the former; but the latter being the military camp an uncertainty hung over it.

Brother Davies has been stirring up the Bombayites with fresh fire, and has lately had the honor of baptising two ladies, and is in sanguine hopes of doing something more in that way ere long, which may not be a little thought of indeed in Bombay.

We have just been favored in Belgaum with a production, well enough understood to be the effusion of two staff captains in company, though they and the printer seem to have been alike averse to their names accompanying the performance. It purports to be a review of an Invitation circular I had distributed in camp, (published by Elders Wheelock and McDonald, the latter having sent me a few of them,) and which the captains have appended in full to their tract, not even omitting the place and time of meeting, as had been filled with the pen. You have doubtless seen this succinct epitome of our faith, and cannot fail to tender our military friends your sympathetic thanks, as we do, for thus aiding us in its circulation in this country, for certainly their attempt to darken its lustre has been so utterly futile that the truth in it sparkles unclouded still.

The branch in Belgaum now numbers eighteen souls, and we are in hopes of plucking out a few more; there are many well convinced of the truth, who lack moral courage to obey it. At the same time I feel assured that those who have obeyed the Gospel here think more of it, and of each other, than if all were peace and quiet without. The sable cloud and the thunderpeal generally cause the flock to valute the fold, and sometimes even the straggling stranger to seek it. The Saints here who are free are ready to gather, leaving pensions, promotions, and all other inducements at their heels; and those who are not free would willingly lay down the first half of their lives, could that only secure the second in Zion.

Craving a participation in your remembrances before the Lord, and earnestly solicitous for your health and prosperity in the great cause, I remain your brother and fellow-laborer, H. FINDLAY.

Lectures—Baptisms—Opposition of the Military, &c.

Madras, Hindostan, Nov. 8, 1854.

Dear President Franklin D. Richards—Since Elder R. Ballantyne left this place we have changed the location of our meeting house, and established two permanent ones in the heart of the city, being assisted by my worthy and talented brother Mc Carthy. We announced to the public a course of lectures, to be delivered at each place, which make four public meetings in the week. We have tried, with all the abilities God has given us, to make our meetings interesting, holding forth on all occasions faith, repentance, &c. For a few meetings we had a tolerably good turn out, but when we began to enter into the real merits and foundation of our religion, the Book of Mormon, &c., the people began to turn away with a sigh, exclaiming, as the book itself declares, "We have got a Bible, &c.; we believe all what you preach out of Scripture, but for this enlightened age, Prophets and Apostles are quite superfluous; our ministers have every attainment," &c. The fact of the matter is, the people have no love for the truth, and when it has pricked the hearts of many, yes, very many, the devil comes and catches it away, before it is fully matured. Again, many know to a demonstration, that we alone have the truth, but they have not faith to trust in the Lord for a living, for this is the first thing which stares them right in the face—if they join us they fully calculate to be cast out of employ. The priests have great influence on this account, not because the people have any confidence in their dead, formal services, but because they rule in tyranny. With very few exceptions, this people are dependent on them for a living, either directly or indirectly, which makes it a very difficult place to labor in with any life. After our bearing and rebearing testimony from one month's end to another to them, they knowing at the same time that they have the witness of the Holy Spirit, they turn away, like the sow that was washed, to wallow again in the mire of sectarianism, rather than make a sacrifice to serve the Lord.

The people in this country, lack the principle of faith and moral courage. This, together with long established usages, is a very great barrier to the cause, and makes it of a very lingering and stunted growth. Having to cope with these evils, I feel to ask the Lord to give unto the people decision of heart and contrition of spirit. I do not at all feel like giving them up as entirely hopeless, but at the same time I sincerely believe that the Lord will wake them, with famine and pestilence, to a sense of their duty, except they arouse from their apathy and indifference towards the heavenly message we declare unto them. I am confident that there are a few honest souls that will eventually come out, and embrace the truth, but the seed has to be sown with judgment, and nourished through the aid of the Holy Spirit, for the tares are very thick, and except the wheat is strictly attended to and nourished, they take away the strength of the elements of life. At present there is little or no interest, excepting in a few families, who have all along attended to the things that I needed for this life; and a more affectionate and motherly care for me, in that respect, I have never witnessed among the Gentiles. And may the Lord open their hearts to choose the better part, is my daily prayer.

Since Elder Ballantyne left, I have baptized James Mills, Superintendent of the Religious Tract Society Depository. He was of course put out of office, though he had timely warning of it. He immediately engaged as doctor for a ship's crew and load of emigrants bound for Sidney, thus opening a door to plant the Gospel on board, together with the evidence of the Holy Spirit. We ordained him to the office of an Elder. He was formerly a preacher of the Baptist faith, and labored much among the natives, though with little success; he is a faithful, steady man, untiring in his zeal, and I feel as though he will do much good on board, and administer to both soul and body, and that is what this generation need—to abstain from the poisonous drugs that impair them, both mentally and physically. We started him some two months ago, full of faith and comforting visions by night. As yet we have not heard of his success.

For the last four months I have devoted all my spare time in Fort St. George, among the soldiers. I preached several times inside of the barracks, to a large number, but rather confused, as they are very rough and uncultivated, as a general thing; but of course I could not command silence. I tried this for half-a-dozen evenings, three of which I was marched outside; but seeing that they did not forbid me coming again, I took the advantage, till I was at length marched out, and told not to come in again. I would here state that, previous to this, I applied to the town major for admittance inside of fort, but he promptly refused me. I asked him the reason why, but he declined having any thing to do with me, for fear he should incur the displeasure of the minister. After being prohibited from going inside, I still improved the time on the top of the ramparts, distributing tracts, and bearing testimony to as many as would listen. By this time, quite an interest was awakened among them, and honest souls were pricked with the truth, but it is seldom I can meet with any of them the second time, before the enemy has caught away that which was sown.

In this way I have continued to work until the present, though I have been marched twice out of fort with a picket guard, by order of the officer commanding the fort. When I was arraigned before him I began to preach "Mormonism," but he was unwilling to hearken to a prisoner, especially, a "Mormon." However, I prevailed on him to take a tract, which he received more for courtesy than for the actual truth which was in it. He then told me he had shown me great favors, for if it had been many, said he, they would have confined me.

Two weeks ago I was again accosted very abruptly, and marched out of fort with the greatest contempt, contrary to order, for no one is prohibited from going into the fort provided they do not trespass beyond the limit. However, I went round and entered at another gate, and the two brethren inside told me it was an enemy who had done it. I have distributed very many tracts among them, which will go with the regiment, should it leave this place, and no doubt many in after years will remember what has been told them.

I have baptized another of late, who is strong in the faith. Many, very many, would come out to meeting, could they get an opportunity. The minister is keeping a sharp look out for me, and is trying to prohibit me altogether, which is indeed the case at present, for I cannot talk with any of the men but I am ordered off, so the gate is well nigh closed. But the souls of all men are in the hands of God, and His will be done, and it will all work right.

I still continue our monthly periodical, which gives me plenty to do in distributing. Only three have been added this last month, but I still live in hopes, for the Lord is at the helm.

May the Lord pour out His Spirit upon you in all your multiplied labors, together with your associates and all the faithful, is my prayer. Amen.

Voyage of Elder Jones to Birmah—Lectures and Baptisms in Rangoon—Prospects among the Birmese—Visit to the Karens—Departure of Elders Willes and Woolley for Zion.

Calcutta, Nov. 7, 1854.

President F. D. Richards.

Dear Brother—Since my communication of August last, little worthy of note has transpired with us. The Elders and Saints have generally been well, as far as I have heard.

Soon after writing you, I left this place for the purpose of visiting Birmah. I had two or three objects in view, the main one of which was to personally visit the people called Karens, as there have been many very favorable reports concerning them. The American Baptist Missionaries have been laboring amongst them for the last twenty years, and, according to their reports, with great success.

My soul being sick of trying to do any thing with the people of India, I gladly sought an opportunity to try another, and this affords me an ample pretext for so doing. I accordingly set off on the 18th of August, steamed across the bay, and in six days landed in Rangoon. There I found a small Branch of the Church in a flourishing condition, under the guidance of Elders Willes and McCune. I stopped a few days, and delivered a course of lectures.

From Rangoon I went to Maulmein, where I found Elder Levi Savage. He had been in that place nearly one year, and had directed his attention chiefly to the Birmese, and he now speaks the language well. I visited some of those that he had been laboring with; they were very friendly, but not willing to obey the Gospel. I remained at Maulmein a few days, then returned to Rangoon, bringing brother Savage with me.

We then began to make preparations for our trip amongst the Karens. We tried to get some conveyance by land, but soon learned that in consequence of the incessant rains that prevail here six months in the year, an overland trip was no way practicable, having to cross mullahs (ravines), and low strips of land which were in all probability inundated. As a last resort, we came to the conclusion to hire a boat, which we did for four English shillings per day. We then provided ourselves with the needful for the campaign, and set off buoyant with desires and anticipations that we should find a people that would receive our testimony. The first night set us far beyond the reach of the European population, in the midst of the swarming multitudes that inhabit this country. That night we stopped in a Karen village, which we reached some time after night-fall, in not a very agreeable condition, for I had the misfortune just before night to get an overturn, by which I was enabled to judge correctly of the depth of water, which I found to be several feet. We however made the best of it for the night, and by morning my clothes were partly dry. But with the day light came a strange and magic view, to American eyes—a whole community of villages upon posts from six to ten feet above the water.—They looked like the inhabitants of Neptune, that had just emerged from the watery element. An old adage came to mind with much force, which was, that "one half of the world do not know how the other half live." This is literally true.

The whole country, for miles around, is submerged in water from two to five feet in depth, though at a superficial view it presents quite a different appearance. Here is a kind of coarse cane grass and water weed, that grow up from the earth, and float upon the surface of the water until they have formed a body, in some places a foot in thickness. Upon this is a kind of short grass growing, which gives it the appearance of one continuous plain. All through this are channels in which the people travel with their boats. These channels are to the Karens what public high roads are to us—a thoroughfare of business, boats going to and from market.

This district of country is settled principally by Karens, who have come down from the hills for the purpose of raising rice, to which it is peculiarly adapted, being some thirty miles in width; its length I did not learn. Every few miles are villages, with from fifteen to thirty houses in each, and with sometimes two and three families in a house, besides hogs, dogs, and fowls, living upon the same platform.

In their religious views we did not find the people as represented. They do not worship the "Great Spirit," as the missionaries have stated. Very many of them are Buddhists, and those who are not do not worship anything—they have no correct idea of God at all. Brother Savage told them who we were, and the nature of our message. It was a new train of thought, and such a burst of new ideas upon their contracted minds, that they could not comprehend it at all. They will not understand that we know anything of the God whom we worship, only in the same manner that they do—that is, by some fabulous legend or tradition like their own. They know nothing of the past, only by tradition; which forms the leading feature in their character, and I think it is more firmly riveted upon their minds than any other people's in the world; in fact, all Asiatics partake more or less of this spirit, it is interwoven with their very existence, and it is almost a thing impossible to make any inroad upon them. They are indeed a strange sect, and it is like commencing with the raw material to do anything with them, for they must be remodeled throughout, and there seems so little to commence upon that it is difficult to begin the work of creation.

We travelled from village to village for some days, and what we learned in the first we learned in the last—they were all alike. We visited some of those that had been converted to Christianity by the Baptists. We asked them if they believed in God, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, to which they said, Yes. But there were no fruits of their profession to be seen, they were in every respect like those who made no profession at all. It is true they acknowledged the existence of a God, but that was all that it amounted to. It reminded me very much of the Utahs, who, when asked if they believed in God, said, Yes. But when they were asked what He was like, they pointed to the biggest wolf they could see, and said "Shinob," as much as to say—That is God. The Karens are not in as favorable a position as the Utahs, for the Utahs have the blessing of the Fathers, and the covenants of promise, the spirit of which hovers around them, and will eventually bring them into the fold. Not so with the Karens, they have the blessing of Esau, which influences their minds as much as the covenant of promise will the children of Israel. The Karens are an idolatrous and a heathenish nation, with no hopes of redemption this side of the Prison.

On my return to Rangoon, I delivered another course of lectures. During my stay, there were four added to the number of the Saints. I more fully organized the Branch, and gave a little more solidity to the movements.

Brother Savage will remain here the coming season. He has some faith in the Birmese, to whom he will direct his attention, and if possible obtain a footing amongst them.

I returned to Calcutta the last of October. Matters here remain much as they did when I last wrote you, no accessions to our numbers.

Elder Woolley embarked for Boston the 1st November. He spent one year and a-half in this country, and labored faithfully and diligently in warning the people of India—they have set their hearts against the truth, and there has not been enough to occupy the attention of one Elder. He returns with the blessings of the few, for his preservation and prosperity.

Elders Fotheringham and Meik are at Calcutta, where there is a prospect of a few being added.

Elder Willes embarked for the Valley, via Penang and Singapore. I have subsequently heard that in consequence of there being no opportunity to ship for America, he embarked for Liverpool.

Brother Ludington was in Singapore October 1st, where he had been for three weeks lecturing, he meets with much opposition. He was about the same as mobbed out of Bancock, in Siam, the particulars he will no doubt give you. He was expecting to go to Malacca in a few days.

We shall not be able to emigrate as soon as expected, and the exact time I cannot now say, it may be another year. I shall, however, do my best to accomplish it sooner if possible.

I will now close, praying the Lord to abundantly bless you in the good work in which you are engaged. With a kind remembrance to all in the Office, I remain your brother in Christ,

N. V. JONES.

Miscellaneous.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Washington, Feb. 24.—Senate.—The Senate was occupied in the discussion of the bill under consideration, until after midnight. Much time was consumed in talking about Know-Nothingism, upon which theme Mr. Douglas was particularly strong.

We add to our report, the remarks of Mr. Seward on the bill to protect officers and others acting under the authority of the United States.

Mr. Seward said: "Now I have waited nearly twelve hours, having no disposition to enter the lists among the early disputants. The Nebraska bill, passed at night, was announced by cannon, and for aught I know, cannon are all ready to proclaim the passage of this bill. Everything has been brought into this discussion, and hardly a phaze of slavery exists which has not been attended to.

The bill before the Senate has received none too large a share of our attention. The fugitive slave law has been introduced. I have no concealments or reservations upon that subject. I shall give my views again on that subject, when we come to the organization of Nebraska. I supposed that the usurpation of the fugitive slave law would lead to further usurpations, and here they are in this bill. I understood the Know-Nothings to be secret societies of two or three grades, colleagued to elect persons of their own order, somewhat similar to the Native Americans. I hope my protest of this bill will not be identified with this association. I belong to but one voluntary society, and that is the Christian Church. I belong to but one political party, and that has open societies, meeting in broad daylight. Before I will bend the knee or join secret associations, and swear to submit my judgment to that of other men, I would suffer my hand to be paralysed. Proscribe a man because he was not born in the same town, county, State, or country?

I seriously advise people hereafter, to be born in the United States, to be converted to the Protestant Church, and to be born white, if they can; but if they come into the world, notwithstanding my advice, with black faces and twisted hair, I shall not add a feature to their disabilities under which they naturally suffer. I am in favor of the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia. As to slavery in the States, I don't know of an individual who is in favor of abolishing slavery in the States where exists, by external interference; but if I lived in a slave State, I should use all legal means to procure its abolition there, and to that end I would try and get such aid from the treasury of the United States as circumstances would afford.

Washington, Feb. 26.—Senate.—The Navy reform bill was taken up. The consideration was postponed in order to afford Mr. Cass an opportunity to present to Congress the sword of Gen. Jackson, to be presented from the family of Gen. Armstrong, deceased. The sword was placed on Mr. Cass' desk.

In making the presentation Mr. Cass improved the opportunity to pay a tribute to the memory of Gen. Jackson. Brief, but pointedly and feelingly, he alluded to the presentation of the sword of Washington, and in passing, spoke of the offering of the cane of Franklin, which was at the same time deposited by the side of the sword of his great co-laborer in the cause of human rights. His allusion to Washington and Franklin were in his most happy style. He did not consider these ceremonies empty.

The memorial of the first and greatest of our chief magistrates, and the memorial of his successor in the administration of the Government, and second only to him in the gratitude and affections of the American people, will be side by side by side united in links of patriotic devotion, and in ages shut out from our vision by the faraway future, when remote generations hear of our heritage of freedom, shall gaze upon these testimonials of victories, time worn, but time honored, they will be coupled by association to those hours of our fathers and early history, and will find their love of country strengthened and their pride in her institutions, and their confidence of her fate and fortune increased.

Many ladies were present at the ceremony.

Mr. Bell followed Mr. Cass in a speech highly eulogistic of the hero of New Orleans.

House.—The House passed the bill granting the right of way to the plank and railroad running through the public lands in Territories as well as those in the States.

Mr. Disney reported the Senate bill granting public lands in Michigan, for railroad purposes. The bill was laid on the table.

The bill granting public land to Florida for railroads, was also tabled.

House.—The sword of Gen. Jackson was presented by Mr. Smith, of Tennessee, who made a neat speech on the occasion. A number of ladies were admitted to the floor of the House during the presentation; and remarks were made by Mr. Barton and others.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

The transit of the Isthmus was regularly made from ocean to ocean by railroad.

The formal opening of the line would take place on the 20th.

The papers teem with more than the average quantity of crime. A man named George Sheldon had been hung at Oakland by a mob, and a native Californian and two Chilians suffered death in a like manner on the San Joaquin for cattle stealing, but owned to having committed numerous murders.

Indian troubles in the neighborhood of Klamath river were becoming alarming. A number of white men had been killed, and it is feared there will be a general rising among the Indians of the North.

Gen. Custill, the new President of Peru, had issued a decree, giving freedom to all those slaves who had not volunteered to serve in the army of Schmouque, the Government pledging itself to indemnify their owners in four years.

Sidney (Australia) dates are to the 7th December.

The miners at Ballarat were up in arms resisting the collection of the license fees, and a collision between them and the military had taken place.

A serious riot was anticipated. Trade continued exceedingly dull, and goods are being sacrificed at ruinous prices.

Lines Inscribed to the Gathering Saints.

"Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?"
—ISAIAH IX. 8.

O! who are these myriads of countless ones
That fly as a cloud from their native homes,
That leave with joy in a mighty band
The fever'd scenes of their father-land,
And are launching forth on the deep blue sea,
With a purpose firm and feeling free?
A powerful gathering host.

As doves to their windows they seek their rest,
From the north and south, from the east and west;
The ends of the earth and every zone
Of the honest number yield their own,
And the poor, the needy and the wealthy throng,
And the weak are strengthen'd by those who're strong.
Who can this people be?

O, these are Saints of the Lord Most High,
Who from Babylon's strife and confusion fly;
They are gathering home to Zion's land,
Directed by heaven's own high hand;
And they trust in the arm of the Lord to save,
And guide them safe o'er the fitful wave,
Unto that promised land.

The voice of the Prophet bids them go,
And his word is the word of the Lord, they know;
So gladly they gather at His behest,
To their beautiful home in the far, far west,
Where the choicest things that earth can afford,
For the pure in heart are freely stor'd,
In Zion's goodly land.

Lo! they gather out from every clime,
To drink of the joys of truth sublime,
As it freely flows in perennial streams,
Where the spirit of inspiration gleams,
And Revelation's sacred light
Sheds its cheering ray to guide aright
The Saints in that blest land.

O, happy people! O, noble race!
Who gather home to that glorious place;
Whose endless blessings are yours to gain,
If ye steadfast prove and the truth maintain;
For you shall the heavens and earth be rife
With good, and the powers of endless life
Ye shall win in Zion's land.

MOVEMENTS OF THE CHURCH.

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.—ISAIAH IV. 8, 9.

The movements of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints present a marked contrast to the movements of the various sectarian societies by which it is surrounded. Christians generally, take to themselves the commission given to the Apostles of the primitive Church—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," and, though having no other than this assumed authority, they consider themselves under the most solemn obligations to expound their ideas of salvation to all people on the earth, or at least to labor to their utmost in the matter, until the great day of reckoning.—Through evil and good report, whether belief or unbelief follows their efforts, Christian ministers consider it their duty to preach, preach, preach without intermission until the judgment day summons the whole of earth's children to assemble in one vast body before the throne of eternal justice, to surrender an account of themselves. No fact nor circumstance which may occur—whether the ingratitude or stubbornness of the people, their bitterest persecution of the ministers, the rejection of their testimony, or the shedding of their blood, is allowed to exonerate them from this supposed duty, no excuse can be urged for neglect of it.

With the Latter-day Saints the case is entirely different. Being in possession of the Holy Priesthood, having been restored direct from heaven to Joseph Smith, and being led by the spirit of revelation, they go to work understandingly to preach the Gospel to the nations, and to build up the kingdom of God on the earth. There is a time to all things. Those who hold the Priesthood know perfectly, that God's Spirit does not always strive with man, neither does He desire His servants to spend their strength for naught in continuing to minister to a people who despise their counsels, and persecute them to the death. The dictates of the Holy Spirit teach them that there is a time to labor and a time to cease to labor, a time to preach the Gospel and a time to give up a perverse people to the imagination of their own hearts. Consequently we see those who hold the Priesthood exercising at discretion the power to loose and to bind, as understood in ancient times—to open the door of the Gospel to a nation, and unfold the principles of salvation to them; or, in case of a nation or people rejecting the Gospel, to cease teaching them, to withdraw from their midst, and leave them alone in their corruption, and, if there be a spark of honesty remaining in their midst, to give them only the privilege of obeying the Gospel and receiving the ordinances thereof, by seeking out the abode of the servants of God. This principle, of knowing where and when to work, and where and when to refrain from working, with the accompanying authority to bind and loose, is the life and soul of the Church of Christ, and is productive of changes in its procedure which startle and often amaze sectarian societies, who know nothing of the calling of a true minister of righteousness but the everlasting "Preach to every creature."

Nine years ago the authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints decided to quit Nauvoo and the United States, and seek a home in the bosom of the wilderness. They did so, founding the City of the Great Salt Lake, and the State of Deseret, or the Territory of Utah. It was concluded that the Church was not under obligations to preach another Gospel sermon to the people of the United States, so the Elders were called in, the Saints in the States were called to leave the country for the head quarters of the Church as soon as possible, the Saints in other countries were counselled not to settle in the States, and the people of the States were left to their own imaginations, only, if they desired the Gospel, they could still learn something of it by travelling to Deseret.

When the Church left Nauvoo, and the Elders in the States ceased to lift up their voices in testimony of the truth, many persons considered that all was over, and "Mormonism" had died a natural death, or had been starved out of existence. But no, one movement was effected by the Church, and another equally important had been commenced. The Elders preached salvation to the people of the United States, and endeavored to build up Zion—the kingdom of God, in their midst, but were rejected, some Prophets and Saints were slain, and the remainder of the Church were told that things had come to such a pass that they could no longer abide in the country. To stay longer and preach to a Gospel-hating, murderous people was not in accordance with the mind of the Spirit, consequently they were left to themselves. But it did not necessarily follow that they should be left to themselves forever. The withdrawal of one unprized blessing is often the means of inducing its due appreciation. In such a case the blessing may with safety and benefit be afterward restored. The people of the United States did not appreciate the Gospel when it was in their midst, and therefore it was withdrawn from them. But it is possible that they may appreciate it more now, and furthermore many new actors have appeared on the stage, consequently it is once more sent to them. Three of the Twelve Apostles and numerous Elders have been appointed to labor in the States, and the Saints in the Old World are counselled to leave their homes and journey to America if they have only sufficient means to get across the ocean. Stakes of Zion are to be built up at St. Louis and Cincinnati, where the Saints who may emigrate can live under the organization of the kingdom, and enjoy the spiritual and temporal benefits of that organization. The Saints have their choice of locating in either of the above Stakes, but if circumstances prevent, they can locate at Philadelphia.

Of late years there have been, on one side of the question, very scanty materials in the United States for public opinion to form itself upon. With the exception of the Frontier Guardian and the Seer, no journal, under the sanction of the Church, has been published in the eastern half of America since the Saints left Nauvoo. The Guardian, published on the frontiers of the United States, commenced in February, 1849, and passed from under the direction of the Church in February, 1852. The eighteen numbers of the Seer were issued in little more than twelve months, and were filled almost exclusively with matter wholly doctrinal. It is true the Deseret News has been published, from June, 1850, at Great Salt Lake City, and has given the Utah current news, as well as doctrinal articles, but its circulation in the States is of course limited, and seldom is any of its matter re-published in the newspapers of the day without receiving comment and color from their editors, for it is notorious that very few of the editorial members of the community look with an impartial eye upon the Saints and their affairs. Consequently hundreds and thousands of well meaning people have been unable to look at the principles and practices of the Saints through any other than a dim and an indistinct medium, and have thereby formed the most crude and inconsistent notions imaginable of them. And to make matters worse, there have been so very few Saints in the States, that comparatively nothing could be done by conversational or oratorical efforts to disabuse the minds of honest people when they were filled with the most erroneous tales, and the strangest misconceptions concerning the people of Utah, or their faith and practices. The most egregious misrepresentations and the vilest falsehoods could be started and passed from one end of the Union to the other, for political or religious effect, as the case might be, before anything could be obtained from Utah to define the truth of the matter. Thus two or three months would pass away before the Saints' side of the question could be properly represented, and by this time the party who started the matter would have obtained their ends, the public would have passed a verdict in the case, and the interest of the subject would have died away. And in these stirring times, people, especially in America, are ever seeking after something new, and are not particularly disposed to reconsider a matter once discussed and settled, and now become as stale as an old song.

The order of things now instituted in the United States will not be without its advantages in these particulars. The Mormon, the Luminary, and the contemplated Cincinnati journal, will unfold the true principles believed in and practised by the Saints, and which would honor and exalt the nation, and fill it with righteousness and eternal life. Those who have any desire to be correctly informed, can now have that privilege through the above named journals. The upright of the community need no longer be tossed to and fro on the waves of public opinion, or carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive. The pious misrepresentations of the religious professor, and the miserable fabrications of the political demagogue can be promptly met, and answered according to their deserts. As far as the people will receive it, a healthy tone will be given to public feeling, and the nation, hearing both sides of the question, will have the chance, if it has the disposition, to render a righteous judgment in all cases, touching the Latter-day Saints, which may come before it. If it is so disposed, it can honor the principles of truth, and welcome Utah as a sister in the great family of free and independent States; if otherwise disposed, it can shut its ears to the truth, oppose Utah in all her movements, persecute and slay the Saints, and thus fill up the measure of her iniquities, and bring down in rapid succession and grievous severity the judgment of an offended God. Life and death are placed before the United States people—they have their choice, and they must choose one or the other, for the day of decision is come, and men must determine whom they will serve—God or Satan.

The temporary stay of numbers of the Saints in the States, will aid in correcting public opinion, and will give those who don't already know, a chance of finding out what kind of creatures Saints really are. The efforts of the Elders through the Press can be ably and effectually seconded by their preaching and testimony in their public meetings, and by the exertions of the Saints generally by conversation in a private capacity. And thus can the nation once more learn the holy character, faith, and hopes of the Saints, and be left wholly without excuse.

The organization of stakes of Zion in the United States seems to have occurred at a most opportune moment for the Saints in Europe. The black clouds of war, which have been lowering so portentously for some time past, have burst with fearful violence over the Old World, and the storm devastates on every hand. The precious chances for escape are increased by the wise foresight of the Priesthood in Zion. The opening of gathering places in the States will allow thousands of Saints to travel part of the way to Zion, who could not for years to come make a start to go all the way at once! When once in the States, the energetic and persevering will find it much more easy to continue on to Zion than they did to cross the ocean.

For some time after the arrival of the Church in the Mountains, all the help and strength available from Europe was needed, but as prosperity increases, and the cords of government are drawn tighter and tighter, many wax fat and kick, and prove that they are not in their proper position. They have not gone through that course of training necessary to qualify them to properly prize the privileges and blessings of Zion. The sudden change from the darkness of the Old World to the light of Zion is too much for such persons. They can now have the privilege of advancing step by step to Zion, as their vision is able to endure, without any danger of blindness overtaking them all at once, by the strong light shining suddenly upon them, as before.

As the movements of the Church have hitherto filled the world, particularly the religious portion of it, with amazement, it may readily be concluded that such will be the case in the future. But the faithful will know and understand, and will be prepared to co-operate effectually in the upbuilding of the kingdom of God, the propagation of the truth, and the establishment and prevalence of righteousness, by working when and where the Spirit is manifestly working, and by abiding strictly by the counsel of those whose right it is to direct the affairs of the work of God.

LIGHTNING AND CONSUMPTION.

People are ruled and guided by sensations more than they are by reason. For example, about seventy persons, perhaps, are yearly killed in the United States by lightning, while those who perish by consumption are reckoned by hundreds of thousands.—This disease is often evidently induced by a cold; and yet how few are alarmed at a cold, which so frequently eventuates in death. On the other hand, thousands of shy people are frightened by a thunder shower, so big with blessings, so generally harmless. This foolish timidity is the consequence of the vicious example or conversation of parents, guardians and servants, operating on children in their presence, exciting alarm, where there is no cause for fear, and thus producing a mental weakness and suffering, which children properly brought up never experience. An exhibition of the celestial phenomena of electricity is to them a source of keen and exciting enjoyment, instead of cowardly terrors.—[Ex.

MESSAGE OF GOVERNOR OF SOUTH CAROLINA.—James H. Adams was inaugurated as Governor of South Carolina on the 13th ult. His message breathes the spirit of "Southern Chivalry" with a vengeance, and concludes as follows:

"The signs of the times are as open to your vision as they are to mine. We may interpret them differently, but, to my mind, they indicate a settled purpose on the part of the Northern States to assail and degrade, or rule the Southern States. How or when the South mean to redress the perils of her condition, we will not venture to anticipate. Time will demonstrate whether our institutions tend to lift us up as a people, promptly to protect our rights and perpetuate our liberties, or whether they will sink us down to the level of degraded and ruined province.

A Wholesome Thought.

"Bring hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind," if you would have them healed of their many infirmities. We boldly and fearlessly assert that the Mustang Liniment will positively CURE Rheumatism. Let any who are afflicted with that most painful complaint try it thoroughly according to the directions, and if they are not cured, we will give them their money back. What more can we say? It will also cure the Piles. Thousands have tried it—and all were cured. Bruises, Sprains, Sores, or Eruptions, fade away as if touched by the magician's wand. Its application to a Burn or Scald acts like "oil upon the troubled waters." The tempest of pain and agony is soon spilled, and the patient is hushed to quiet and peaceful slumbers. "There is a balm for every wound," and that balm is the Mustang Liniment. Everybody that sells medicines keeps it for sale. "Hold your Horses," and if they are crippled, galled, or sprained, use the Mustang Liniment.
